will receive in companies, and organize into regiments, brigades and divisions, according to the force required; and the governor shall appoint and commission the general, field and staff officers, of said volunteers, and proceed to have them organized and instructed; and that he shall immediately invite all efficient and worthy Virginians and residents of Virginia in the army and navy of the United States to retire therefrom, and to enter the service of Virginia, assigning to them such rank as will not reverse the relative rank held by them in the United States Service, and will at least be equivalent thereto.

"3d. Be it further ordained, That to enable him to carry out the resolution aforesaid, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars be and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.[26]

On the 19th of April, the office of Major-General of the Military and Naval forces of the State was created. Three days later Governor Letcher nominated Robert E. Lee for this office which was promptly confirmed by the Convention.[27] April 27th an Ordinance providing for Enlistment in the Provisional Army was adopted. It provided that all free, able-bodied, effective men, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five might be enlisted, and the enlistment should be binding on minors, provided they be allowed four days to reconsider and retract their enlistment.[28]

On the 29th of April, five Congressmen were elected to represent Virginia, in the Provisional Congress of the Confederate States, about to assemble at Montgomery, Alabama. These were Hon. R. M. T. Hunter, of Essex county; William C. Rives, of Albemarle county; Hon. John W. Brockenbrough, of Rockbridge county; Walter R. Staples, of Montgomery county; and Judge Gideon D. Camden, of Harrison county.[29]

By another Ordinance adopted April 30th, the term of service of all volunteers called into service under the Ordinance of the 17th of April, 1861, was twelve months, unless sooner discharged.[30]

All Citizens of Virginia Absolved from Their Allegiance to the United States.

On the first day of May, 1861, the Convention adopted its forty-first Ordinance which was as follows:

"An ORDINANCE to release the Officers, civil and military, and the citizens generally of the State of Virginia, from all obligations to support the Constitution of the late Confederacy, known as the United States of America.

"Be it ordained, That all Officers, civil and military, and the people generally of this State, be and they are hereby released from any and all oaths which they may have taken to support the Constitution of the late Confederacy, known as the United States of America; and that said oaths and the said Constitution are inoperative and void, and of no effect, and that the eleventh section of chapter thirteen of the Code of Virginia of eighteen hundred and sixty, be and is hereby repealed."[31]

On the 7th of May, copies of the Ordinance of the Convention, adopting the Constitution of the Provisional Government of the Confederate States of America; also of that of the election of Congressmen by the Convention to represent the State of Virginia in the Congress of the Confederate States, were read in said Congress.[32]

The same day, Hon. Walker Brooke, of Mississippi, announced to the Confederate Congress the presence of John W. Brockenbrough and Walter R. Staples, Delegates from Virginia; and on motion of Hon. Robert B. Rhett, of South Carolina, they were admitted to seats.[33]

(N. B.—R. M. T. Hunter took his seat May 10th; and William C. Rives on May 14th ensuing. Gideon D. Camden never appeared to take his seat.)

A Resolution adopted by the Congress of the Provisional Government, ratified the terms of alliance entered into on the 24th of the preceding April, by and between Alexander H. Stephens, the Confederate Commissioner and the Commissioners of Virginia, and the old Commonwealth was thus formally admitted into the Confederate States of America May 7th, 1861.[34]

A BRIEF SUMMARY—The Convention having adopted an Ordinance of Secession; forbidden the election in the State of representatives to the Federal Congress; effected an Alliance, offensive and defensive, between Virginia and the Confederate States; adopted the Constitution of the Provisional Government of said States; elected five members of the Confederate States Congress, four of whom hastened to take their seats; released all officers from the oaths they had taken to support the Constitution of the United States, and absolved all the people of Virginia from their allegiance to the said United States; captured the property of the National Government at Harper's Ferry; took possession of the Norfolk and Gosport Navy Yards ,with the property connected therewith; occupied the custom-houses at Norfolk and Richmond; and made arrangements by which the State was formally admitted a member of the Confederate States—the whole done before the time arrived for the people to vote for the ratification or rejection of the Ordinance of Secession —the Convention adjourned until June 12th ensuing.

NOTE—The Sessions of this Convention were as follows:
Regular Session began Wednesday, February 13, 1861, and ended May 1, 1861.
First Adjourned Session began Wednesday, June 12, 1861, and ended July 1, 1861.
Second Adjourned Session began Wednesday, November 13, 1861, and ended December 6, 1861, when it adjourned Sine die.

CHAPTER II.

CONDITIONS IN NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA—OPPOSITION TO SECESSION—PUBLIC MEETINGS IN THE INDIVIDUAL COUNTIES—UNITED ACTION SECURED BY THE CONVENTION AT CLARKSBURG.

A very large majority of the men of Western Virginia regarded Secession as ruinous; they did not believe that it was a remedy for the ills complained of by the men of Eastern Virginia. They therefore determined that if that part of the Commonwealth chose to cast its fortunes with the seceded States, they would endeavor to save the Trans-Allegheny Region to the Federal Union. Their position was that they would do all possible against Secession, and thereby keep Virginia—all of it—in the Union; but if this could not be done, then they would, if possible, secure a division of the Commonwealth. Having determined upon this course, they hastened to give expression to their views, and to act in accordance therewith. The first public meeting held for the purpose of giving utterance to these sentiments, assembled at the court-house in Preston County, on the 12th day of November, 1860—six days after the Presidential election—and three days before Governor Letcher issued his proclamation convening the General Assembly in extra session. Men of all parties participated in the proceedings. The partisans of the two democratic candidates, who had waged a furious warfare but one short week previously, met in honest and earnest council to give expression to their views upon the result of the late election, and the questions that were rapidly assuming a dangerous tendency thereunder. The supporters of the Bell and Everett ticket joined in the deliberations, and the few but independent and active adherents of the successful party added their voice. After little delay and no discussion, so united were the men of all parties, that they passed a series of resolutions strongly opposing Secession, and declaring that any attempt upon the part of the State to secede, would meet with the unqualified disapprobation of the people of the county.[1]

A meeting was held in Harrison County, on the 24th day of November—four days after South Carolina adopted an Ordinance of Secession—under circumstances similar to those in Preston County; and it declared that the people would first exhaust all constitutional remedies for redress, before they would resort to any violent measures; that the ballot-box was the only medium known to the Constitution for a redress of grievances, and to it alone would they appeal; that it was the duty of all citizens to uphold and support the lawfully constituted authorities.[1]

An assemblage of people, at the court-house of Monongalia County, on the 26th of November, in which the acknowledged leaders of all parties took part, resolved unanimously that the election of the candidates of the Republican party did not justify Secession, and that the Union of the States was the best guarantee for the present and future welfare of the people. The people of Taylor County assembled at their court-house on the 3d day of December, ensuing, and resolved unanimously that they were opposed to taking any steps looking to the dissolution of the Union for existing causes.[1]

On the 14th of December, 1860, there was a great gathering of the citizens of Ohio County in the Athenæum in Wheeling; much enthusiasm was manifested Hon. Andrew Wilson, Mayor of the city, was called to the chair, and Nathan Wilkinson was appointed Secretary. Hon. Sherrard Clemens, member of Congress, was the orator of the evening and in a speech resplendent with rhetoric and literary flourish, he portrayed the evils of Secession. A preamble expressed a strong Union sentiment and the eighth in a series of resolutions adopted, was as follows:

"Resolved, That we deplore all attempts to abolish or destroy the Constitution of the United States. We do not see that our condition would be improved, if this were done; on the contrary, we have reasons to fear that whatever evils we suffer now, they will be greatly increased with manifold others, 'that we know not of.' Of the broken fragments of our present glorious Union, we should despair of building another in which we could have any confidence. Avowedly a league to be dissolved at pleasure or any caprice, passion, disappointment, or supposed interest of stability could be expected in another Confederacy. Virginia is bounded by the Ohio river and the state of Pennsylvania for upwards of 400 miles. A great body of her people reside near the Ohio river, and on the hills and valleys penetrated by the many streams and rivers which enter it. They have their commerce and intercourse chiefly with the great West; and are deeply interested in preserving the perfect integrity and Union of the States. We deprecate being placed in the position of a border frontier, and we think Virginia should hesitate long before she aids or abets the disruption of the present Constitution, and places her people in such position."[2]

On the 21st of December, a meeting was held at Bethany, the seat of old Bethany College, in Brooke County, at which a number of the members of the faculty of that institution took an active part.[3] At Hartford City, Mason County, a citizens meeting resolved that the election of Abraham Lincoln in accordance with the express provisions of the Constitution, was not a just cause for the dissolution of the American Union.

On January 1, 1861, the largest and most enthusiastic meeting of citizens that, up to that time, had ever assembled in Wood County, convened in Parkersburg, and with but one dissenting voice, adopted the following:

"Resolved, That the doctrine of Secession of a State has no warrant in the Constitution, and that such doctrine would be fatal to the Union, and all the purposes of its creation; and in the judgment of this meeting, Secession is revolution * * * * We are deeply impressed with the conviction that our national prosperity depends on preserving the Union as it is; and we see nothing in the election of Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency of the United States—as much as we may have desired the election of another—as affording any just or reasonable cause for the abandonment of what we regard as the best Government ever yet devised by the wisdom and patriotism of men. That the result of calling a Convention to consider what position Virginia shall assume in the revolutionary movements of South Carolina, will be the means of precipitating the State into a connection fatal to her credit, her prosperity and the happiness of her people."[4]

On the 5th of January—two days before the meeting of the General Assembly in extra session at Richmond—a Workingmen's Union Meeting assembled at Wheeling; it was the largest that ever convened within the walls of the Atheneum, the audience being estimated at three thousand, nearly all of whom were men who seldom took any part in politics; among the resolutions adopted were these:

"Resolved, That we will not be bound by the acts of any Convention, no matter how called or organized, the purpose of which is to alter or in any manner change the relation which Virginia bears to the Government of the Union."

"Resolved, Further, That any Convention which may be called, should take such action to amend the Constitution of Virginia as to bar representation in the General Assembly upon the free, white popuation of the State and ultimately establish the ad valorum principle of taxation as well for slaves as for other property."[5]

At a meeting at Sand Hill, in Marshall County, January 5th, at which eighty voters were present, it was resolved:

"That we will stand by the Union and resist to the utmost of our ability, every and all attempts to dissolve the Union; and we further pledge ourselves not to vote for any man to hold office or represent us, unless he is in favor of the Union, and will give it his support."[6]

On January 7th, a large and enthusiastic meeting of citizens of Mason County assembled at Point Pleasant, and passed a series of resolutions strongly favoring the Union, and denouncing the policy of Secession. The foremost men of the County participated in the Convention.[7]

On the 19th of January ensuing—but five days after the General Assembly passed the bill providing for a Convention—a mass meeting at Clarksburg, in Harrison County, unanimously resolved:

"That we will not support any man who believes that the Convention to assemble at Richmond on the 13th of February, 1861, or any other State authority, can absolve the citizens of this State from their allegiance to the General Government; and that we will support no man who believes that the Federal Government has not the right of self-preservation."[8]

A large number of citizens of Ohio County assembled at West Liberty, January 19th, and declared that in view of the present alarming crisis of the Federal Relations of the State, it was the duty of each citizen of the State to stand by the Union.[9] Two days later the people of Hancock resolved:

"That in our several capacities as citizens of the United States, and of this State, we can remain loyal to both, but in the event of Secession being forced upon us, we will not recognize any power claimed thereby to alter or impair our fidelity and allegiance to the General Government, but will resist all such assumed power to the past extremity."[10]

On January 22nd, the citizens of Triadelphia, in Ohio County, declared by resolution that Virginia had suffered no wrongs at the hands of the General Government that will afford sufficient pretext for open and forcible opposition to the Federal authorities, and that the election of Mr. Lincoln was in form prescribed by law, and that they would vote for no man for a seat in the State Convention, until he pledged himself to vote in that body against the Secession of Virginia.[11]

A large mass meeting of the people at Sistersville, in Tyler County, on January 24th, gave the first utterance to State division by resolving:

"That in case of the firm determination of Eastern Virginia to secede, that we will instruct our delegate and pledge him to stand by the Union in every emergency. And that if Eastern Virginia secedes[12] we are in

12. RESOLUTION OF HON. JAMES BURLEY, THE DELEGATE FROM MARSHALL COUNTY, IN THE RICHMOND CONVENTION, MARCH 16, 1861.

Mr. Burley who sought to know why, if Virginia seceded from the Union, one part of a State might not separate from the other part, favor of striking West Virginia from Eastern Virginia and forming a State independent of the South, and firm to the Union."[13]

On the 26th of January, a large number of voters assembled at Cameron, in Marshall County, and declared that it was "their duty as well as interest to make their sentiments known, and they are, that we are unfaltering in our devotion to the Union as bequeathed our fathers; that the Union and Constitution have committed no wrong, but have secured most graciously and admirably in our mission, and continue so to do, if they are maintained."[14]

On January 29th, a County Convention in Ohio county, declared as follows:

"In the name and on behalf of the people of Ohio County, we do solemnly declare and say "That the unity of Government which constitutes one people, is still dear to us. It is a pillar in the edifice of our real independence; the support of our tranquility at home—our peace abroad; of our safety, of our prosperity; of that liberty which we so highly prize."[15]

Another meeting in that county on the same day resolved:

"That we are loyal to the Constitution and the Union of the United States, but we are unalterably opposed to Secession as being a doctrine, in our opinion wholly unauthorized by the Constitution as in no degree a remedy for any of the evils of which we complain; whatever may be the doctrine of the Convention as to coercion.[16]

On February ——, 1861, a meeting of the citizens of Brooke county resolved:

"That of all the people of these United States, we, the people of the so called Pan-handle Region of Virginia, are the most to be affected by the Secession of this State. By it we would be put in an "inferior condition to these herein mentioned," and subject only to taxation to support a Government in the extreme South, in which we have no interest in common with the people."[17] submitted a series of resolutions of which the following was the last; this, on his motion, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

"Resolved, That the right of revolution above recognized can be exercised as well by a portion of the citizens of a State against their State government, as it can be exercised by the whole people of a State against their Federal Government; and, when the powers of a State Government are used for purposes of unjust discriminations against a portion of the citizens or a particular section of the State, in imposing upon one portion or section an undue proportion of the burdens of the State Government, and in exempting from taxation a peculiar species of property belonging, to a great extent, to another portion of the citizens and located mostly in another section of the State, thus increasing taxation upon all other interests in order to favor a "peculiar interest"; the people thus oppressed after having exhausted all constitutional efforts to obtain redress, would be justified in resisting the collection of all revenue from them until the injustice aforesaid was removed. And that any change of the relation Virginia now sustains to the Federal Government, against the wishes of even a respectable minority of her people, would be such an act of injustice perpetrated upon the rights of that minority as to justify them in changing their relation to the State Government by separating themselves from that section of the State that had thus wantonly disregarded their interests and defied their will—particularly when the cause assigned for the change of Virginia's relation to the said Federal Government is the alleged insecurity in the said last mentioned Government of the peculiar species of property thus protected by the organic law of the State from contributing its due share to the support of the said State Government by prohibiting the taxing of a large portion of said property, and limiting the portion subject to taxation to a specific tax far less than that imposed upon every other species of property." As stated in Chapter I, page 14, the Convention sitting at Richmond, adopted an Ordinance of Secession, April 17, 1861. We have seen that because of this action on the part of the Convention, there was great rejoicing not only in Richmond, but throughout all Eastern Virginia. But, how different were the conditions in Northwestern Virginia. There anxious thousands impatiently awaited intelligence from the capital city on the James. But none came, for at that time, there was but one line of telegraph connecting the East with the West and that night—April 18th—it was broken at Harper's Ferry. On the streets of Morgantown, Clarksburg, Weston, Parkersburg, Wheeling, Wellsburg, and other towns, earnest men looked each other in the face to see reflected back an expression of the feeling which agitated their own breasts. Nothing definite was known in some of the counties until the arrival home of delegates from Richmond. Then a thrill of excitement shook the country from the Alleghenies to the Ohio, and but a few days sufficed to fan into flame the sectional jealousies of other years.

As previously stated, there were forty-seven members in that Convention representing counties in Western Virginia—now West Virginia. They were as follows, that is to say, from:

Barbour County—Samuel Woods.
Berkeley County—Allen C. Hammond and Edmund Pendleton.
Braxton, Nicholas, Clay and Webster—Benjamin W. Byrne.
Brooke County—Campbell Tarr.
Cabell County—Wm. McComas.
Doddridge and Tyler—Chapman J. Stuart.
Logan, Boone and Wyoming—James Lawson.
Marion County—Alpheus F. Haymond and Ephraim B. Hall.
Marshall County—James Burley.
Mason County—James H. Couch.
Mercer County—Napoleon B. French.
Monongalia County—Waitman T. Willey, and Marshall M. Dent.
Fayette and Raleigh—Henry L. Gillispie.
Gilmer, Wirt and Calhoun—C. B. Conrad.
Greenbrier County—Samuel Price.
Hampshire County—Edward M. Armstrong and David Pugh.
Hancock County—George McC. Porter.
Hardy County—Thomas Maslin.
Harrison County—John S. Carlile and Benjamin Wilson.
Jackson and Roane—Franklin P. Turner.
Jefferson County—Alfred M. Barbour and Logan Osburn.
Kanawha County—George W. Summers and Spicer Patrick.
Lewis County—Caleb Boggess.
Monroe County—Allen T. Caperton and John Echols.
Morgan County—Johnson Orick.
Ohio County—Sherrard Clemens and Chester D. Hubbard.
Pendleton County—Henry H. Masters.
Pocahontas County—Paul McNeil.
Pleasants and Richie—Cyrus Hall.
Preston County—Wm. G. Brown and James C. McGrew.
Putnam County—James W. Hoge.
Randolph and Tucker—John N. Hughes.
Taylor County—John S. Burdett.
Upshur County—George W. Berlin.
Wayne County—Burwell Spurlock
Wetzel County—Leonard S. Hall.
Wood County—John J. Jackson.

Of these members from what became West Virginia those voting against the Ordinance of Secession, were:

Edward M. Armstrong, George W. Berlin, Caleb Boggess, Wm. G. Brown, John S. Burdett, James Burley, Benjamin W. Byrne, John S. Carlile, Sherrard Clemens, C. B. Conrad, James H. Couch, Alpheus F. Haymond, Chester D. Hubbard, John J. Jackson, Wm. McComas, James C. McGrew, Henry H. Masters, Logan Osburn, Spicer Patrick, Edmund Pendleton, George McC. Porter, Samuel Price, David Pugh, Marshall M. Dent, Ephraim B. Hall, Allen C. Hammond, James W. Hoge, Burwell Spurlock, Chapman J. Stuart, George W. Summers, Campbell Tarr and Waitman T. Willey —thirty-two in all.

Those voting for the Ordinance were:

Allen T. Caperton, John Echols, Napoleon B. French, James Lawson, Johnson Orick, Henry L. Gillispie, Cyrus Hall, Leonard S. Hall, John N. Hughes, Samuel Woods and Franklin P. Turner—eleven in all.

Those not voting upon the question were Thomas Maslin, Benjamin Wilson, Alfred M. Barbour and Paul McNeil—four in all.

Those who voted in the negative and afterward changed to the affirmative, were George W. Berlin and Alpheus F. Haymond.

Those who did not vote, but afterwards signed the Ordinance of Secession, were Alfred M. Barbour and Paul McNeil.

The Western members who voted against the Ordinance hastened to leave Richmond. John S. Carlile departed for his home in Harrison County, the evening of the same day on which the vote was taken. The next day there was a meeting of delegates from the Western part of the State, in the room of Sherrard Clemens at the Powhatan (now Ford's) hotel in the city, to determine upon a course of action. Among those present were James Burley, Sherrard Clemens, Marshall M. Dent, Ephraim B. Hall, Chester D. Hubbard, John J. Jackson, James C. McGrew, Spicer Patrick, Chapman J. Stuart, George McD. Porter and Campbell Tarr. Neither Waitman T. Willey nor William G. Brown was present, they not having been present when the call was made for the hurried gathering. General Jackson acted as chairman; and it was resolved that all should leave the Convention city for their homes on the first train, proceeding by way of Alexandria and Washington, Chester D. Hubbard and Sherrard Clemens, the latter of whom was still suffering from a wound received in a duel with O. Jennings Wise, proceeded to Baltimore, and thence by way of Harrisburg and Pittsburg to Wheeling, where they arrived on the 19th of April. Waitman T. Willey, William G. Brown, Caleb Boggess and others speedily reached their homes over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. A day or two later George W. Summers, James H. Couch, James W. Hoge and others left Richmond for their homes by way of Staunton and Lewisburg; and thus the membership from the Western part of the State was greatly reduced.[18]

18. WEST VIRGINIANS EXPELLED FROM THE CONVENTION—VACANCIES FILLED.

As stated elsewhere, the State Convention at Richmond held one Regular Session and two Adjourned Sessions. The Regular Session began Wednesday, February 12, 1861, and ended July 1, 1861. The Second Adjourned Session began Wednesday, November 12, 1861, and ended December 6, 1861.

On Thursday, June 20, 1861, Algheus F. Haymond, one of the Delegates from Marion County, West Virginia, and Chairman of the Committee on Elections and Privileges, presented a "Report in Relation to Absent Members" in which it was stated that this Committee "had come to the following conclusions and observations, to-wit:

First, As to the members of the Convention who are absent: Caleb Boggess, of Lewis county; Sherrad Clemens, of Ohio county; John Echols, of Monroe county; James W. Hoge of Putnam county; Thomas Maslin, of Hardy county; Spicer Patrick, of Kanawha county; Edmund Pendleton, of Berkeley county; Burwell Sourlock, of Wayne county; Franklin P. Turner, of Jackson county; and Benjamin Wilson, of Harrison county, who have not as yet attended the Convention during its present session (the first adjourned session); some are in the field serving the State; some are detained on account of sickness, and others are absent from causes unknown to the Committee. It has not been able to ascertain that these members are absent from their seats by reason of disloyalty to Virginia or sympahy with her enemy.

Secondly, As to certain other absent members:—It appearing to the satisfaction of the Committee that William G. Brown and James C. McGrew, of Preston county; James Burley, of Marshall county; John S. Burdett, of Taylor county; John S. Carlile, of Harrison county; Marshall M. Dent and Waitman T. Willey, of Monongalia county; Chester D. Hubbard, of Ohio county; George McC. Porter, of Hancock county; Chapman J. Stuart, of Doddridge county; Campbell Tarr, of Brooke county; and John J. Jackson, of Wood county, elected members of this Convention, have been engaged in a conspiracy against the Commonwealth of Virginia, and are now engaged in aiding and abetting the open enemies of Virginia:—Therefore, RESOLVED, That the said William G. Brown, John S. Burdett, John S. Carlile, Marshall M. Dent, Waitman T. Willey, Chester D. Hubbard, John J. Jackson, George McC. Porter, Chapman J. Stuart and Campbell Tarr, be and they are hereby expelled from this Convention and that their seats be and are hereby declared vacant.

Thirdly, The Committee further report that James H. Couch, of Mason county; and George W. Summers, of Kanawha county, have resigned their seats; that elections to fill their vacancies have been held, but official information has not been received as to who is elected.

On motion, the Report was laid on the table, ordered printed, and the Committee instructed to report the tesimony on which the Report was based. See Journal of the Convention. Vol. I, p. 257; and Documents No. XXVII, of the Convention.

On June 28th, the Resolution in the above Report came up for action. A division of the question was demanded and ordered. The next day the name of William G. Brown, of Preston county, was called and he was expelled by a vote of seventy-three yeas to eleven nays. Then James Burley and John S. Burditt were expelled the same day the vote standing eighty-five yeas; nays one. Next came the name of John S. Carlile who was expelled, the vote being eighty-two yeas; nays one. Then the seats of Marshall M. Dent, Ephraim B. Hall, and Chester D. Hubbard were declared vacant, John J. Jackson was expelled at the same time, the vote sanding seventy-nine yeas and six nays. The question was then severally put on the Resolution so far as it related to James C. McGrew, George McC. Porter, Chapman J. Stuart and Campbell Tarr, and they were expelled. Mr. Haymond of Marion county, the chairman of the Committee, then moved that so much of the Resolution as related to Waitman T. Willey be recommitted to the Committee. This was on Saturday, June 29th, and on Monday, July 1st, the Convention adjourned to meet again on the 13th of November ensuing.

It reassembled at the time, this being the beginning of the second adjourned session. Three days later—November 16th—the Convention adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Waitman T. Willey be and he is hereby expelled as a member of this body on account of his disloyalty to the Confederate States and his adherence to the enemies of the same" (See Journal of the Convention, Vol. I, p. 326.) Meantime, John N. Hughes, the delegate from Randolph county, had been killed in the Confederate army at the Battle of Rich Mountain, July 11, 1861.)

By the 20th of April a number of the returned delegates from the Northwest were narrating to great gatherings of interested hearers their recent experiences, and urging them to prepare for resistance of the Secession movement at the ballot-box, on the following 23rd of May. Now it was that there began a series of meetings which have no parallel in the history of our country, nor elsewhere, unless it be the citizen assemblies in the early days of the French Revolution; and this too, in a sparsely settled region where the facilities for convening were of the most primitive character.

At an immense mass meeting in Monongalia County, April 22d, at which Hon. Francis H. Pierpont and Hon. William G. Brown were the orators: it was resolved that:

The time had come when every friend of the Union should rally to the support of the flag of his country, and defend the same; that the people of Monongalia, regardless of past affiliations, hereby enter their solemn protest against the Secession of the State; and that they owed undying fidelity to the Union: and that they would cling to it despite November 18th, Mr. Haymond reported Document No. 34, which provided for filling vacancies in the membership of the Convention. During the recess between July 1st and November 13th, elections were held in the Confederate military camps, from the West Virginia counties, in which there were vacancies, and the soldiers voted for successors to the members who had been expelled. Six soldiers from Marion county voted at the Court House in Richmond and elected a successor to Ephraim B. Hall.

On the 19th of November the Convention adopted a Preamble and Resolution as follows:

"Whereas vacancies have occurred in the representation of the counties of Ohio, Brooke, Marshall, Marion, Monongalia, Preston, Taylor, Harrison and Wood, by the expulsion of the late delegates from the said counties; and in the Randolph-Tucker Delegate District by the death of John N. Hughes, killed in the battle of Rich Mountain.—

"And Whereas, These vacancies could not be filled in the mode prescribed by law, in consequence of the occupation of said counties by the public enemy—

"And Whereas, The Governor in order to provide for the exigency, issued a proclamation (advisory in its character) inviting the loyal citizens of those counties to vote in their respective camps for delegates to fill these vacancies. Under said proclamation, elections were accordingly held in several camps, at which elections Joseph H. Pendleton was chosen as the successor of Chester D. Hubbard of Ohio county; Joseph D. Pickett, to succeed Campbell Tarr of Brooke county; Jefferson T. Martin to succeed James Burley of Marshall county; Stephen A. Morgan as the successor of Ephraim B. Hall of Marion county; Jonathan M. Heck to succeed Marshall M. Dent of Monongalia county; Robert E. Cowan and C. J. C. Cresap to succeed William G. Brown and James C. McGrew, respectively, of Preston county; John A. Robinson to succeeed John S. Burdett of Taylor county; William P. Cooper to succeed John S. Carlile of Harrison county; Edward D. McGuire as the successor of John J. Jackson of Wood county; and Jacob W. Marshall to succeed John N. Hughes of the Randolph-Tucker Delegate District.

"Be it Therefore Ordained, That said elections be and the same are hereby ratified, and the said Joseph H. Pendleton, Joseph D. Pickett, Jefferson T. Martin, Jonathan M. Heck, Robert E. Cowan, C. J. C. Cresap, Stephen A. Morgan, John A. Robinson, William P. Cooper, Edward D. McGuire and Jacob W. Marshall, are hereby admitted to seats in this Convention." This was adopted November 19th, by a vote of seventy-nine yeas to twenty nays. All occupied their seats:—Pendleton, Martin, Heck, Cowan, Cresap, Morgan, Cooper, Marshall and McGuire,—on November 20th; Robinson on the 27th; and Pickett on the 4th of December, ensuing.

On the 22d of November, the Committee on elections was instructed to inquire into the absence of Sherrard Clemens, a delegate from Ohio county; Benjamin Wilson from Harrison county; and Caleb Boggess from Lewis county; and report to the Convention whether such absence was due to their disloyalty to the State or Confederate States, and if so whether they should not be expelled.

November 29th, the Committee submitted a report stating that its members were satisfied that Sherrard Clemens and Caleb Boggess were absent from the Convention by reason of disloyalty to the Commonwealth of Virginia and the Confederate States; and should therefore be expelled from the Convention; that the Committee had no evidence of the disloyalty of Benjamin Wilson nor to explain his absence. This was laid on the table. December 4th, Franklin P. Turner of Jackson county, endeavored to secure action on this Report, but was unable to do so. Two days later it was again called up but action postponed. It was the last day of the Convention and the matter was nevermore heard of.

the efforts of the people of Eastern Virginia to precipitate them into the gulf of Secession, and consequent ruin.[19]

By a great mass meeting of the citizens of Wetzel County, at New Martinsville, April 22d, it was resolved:

"That Secession is not the remedy for the troubles so unfortunately resting upon our country, and we believe it would be for the interest of Virginia to remain in the Union, believing that our rights can be maintained in the Union, but that they will certainly be endangered out of it." Further, they resolved, "That the Union sentiment of this people is such that we pledge our votes against any act of Secession which would sever us as a State from the Federal Government."[20]

THE CONVENTION AT CLARKSBURG IN HARRISON COUNTY—CALL FOR UNITED ACTION.

All had been independent action in the individual counties, but now they were to act together. It remained for a call for united action to go out from Clarksburg—the birthplace of Stonewall Jackson. There, on Monday, April 22d, 1861, nearly twelve hundred citizens of Harrison County convened in compliance with a call issued forty-eight hours previously. The Convention was organized by the election of John Hursey, as Chairman, and John W. Harris, Secretary. There were eminent speakers present, and great enthusiasm prevailed. Before adjournment, Hon. John S. Carlile, submitted the following preamble and resolutions which were adopted without a dissenting voice:[21]

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.

WHEREAS, The Convention now in session in this State, called by the Legislature, the members of which had been elected twenty months before said call, at a time when no such action as the assemblage of a convention by legislative enactment was contemplated by the people, or expected by the members they elected in May, 1859, at which time no one anticipated the troubles recently brought upon our common country by the extraordinary action of the State authorities of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, and Texas, has, contrary to the expectation of a large majority of the people of this State, adopted an ordinance withdrawing Virginia from the Federal Union.

And WHEREAS, By the law calling said Convention, it is expressly declared that no such ordinance shall have force or effect, or be of binding obligation upon the people of this State, until the same shall be ratified by the voters at the polls.

And WHEREAS, We have seen with regret that demonstrations of hostility, unauthorized by law, and inconsistent with the duty of law-abiding citizens, still owing allegiance to the Federal Government, have been made by a portion of the people of this State against the said Government.

And WHEREAS, The Governor of this Commonwealth has, by proclamation, undertaken to decide for the people of Virginia, that which they have reserved to themselves, the right to decide by their votes at the polls, and has called upon the volunteer soldiery of this State to report to him and hold themselves in readiness to make war upon the Federal Government, which Government is Virginia's Government, and must in law and of right continue so to be, until the people of Virginia shall, by their votes, and through the ballot-box, that great conservator of a free people's liberties, decide otherwise.

And WHEREAS, The peculiar situation of Northwestern Virginia, separated as it is by natural barriers from the rest of the State, precludes all hope of timely succor in the hour of danger from other portions of the State, and demands that we should look to and provide for our own safety in the fearful emergency in which we now find ourselves placed by the action of our State authorities, who have disregarded the great fundamental principle upon which our beautiful system of Government is based, to-wit: "That all governmental power is derived from the consent of the governed," and have without consulting the people, placed this State in hostility to the Federal Government by seizing upon its ships and obstructing the channel at the mouth of Elizabeth river; by wresting from the Federal officers at Norfolk and Richmond the custom houses; by tearing from the Nation's property the Nation's flag, and putting in its place a bunting, the emblem of rebellion, and by marching upon the National Armory at Harper's Ferry; thus inaugurating a war without consulting those in whose name they profess to act.

And WHEREAS, The exposed condition of Northwestern Virginia requires that her people should be united in action, and harmonious in purpose—there being a perfect identity of interests in times of war as well as in peace—Therefore,

Be it RESOLVED, That it be and is hereby recommended to the people in each and all of the counties composing Northwestern Virginia to appoint delegates, not less than five in number, of their wisest, best, and discreetest men, to meet in Convention on the 13th day of May next, to consult and determine upon such action as the people of Northwestern Virginia should take in the present fearful emergency.

RESOLVED, That Hon. John S. Carlile, Waldo P. Goff, Hon. Charles S. Lewis, John J. Davis, Solomon S. Fleming, Lot Bowen, Dr. William Dunkin, William E. Lyon, Felix Sturm and James Lynch, be and are hereby appointed delegates to represent this county in said Convention.

JOHN HURSEY, President.

JOHN W. HARRIS, Secretary.

That evening, Mr. C. E. Ringler, editor and proprietor of the Western Virginia Guard, published at Clarksburg, issued an extra edition of his paper in which was printed an "Address of the Convention to the people of Northwestern Virginia." In this the foregoing "Preamble and Resolutions" were embodied. Messengers mounted on horse-back, bore copies of the Guard to Weston, Kingwood and Morgantown, and to adjoining and adjacent counties. Other copies were distributed along the lines of railroad westward to Wheeling and Parkersburg; eastward to Martinsburg, and even to the Lower Potomac. The time was short—but twenty days—the emergency great, and from Hancock County to Wayne and from Wood, to Berkeley, the people hastened to comply with the request of the Clarksburg Convention. Public meetings were held in counties, in cities, in towns, at churches, school-houses, and cross-roads, and delegates appointed to the proposed Convention at Wheeling. Days seemed weeks, but time passed and brought the eventful 13th day of May, 1861.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE FIRST CONVENTION OF
THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA AT WHEELING, VIRGINIA.[1]

FIRST DAY.

(See Roll of Members at end of the Second Day's Proceedings.)

MONDAY, MAY 13, 1861.

FORENOON PROCEEDINGS.[2]

"The Convention of Delegates from twenty-seven Western Virginia Counties assembled in this city, at Washington Hall, yesterday at 11 o'clock. On motion of Chester D. Hubbard, Maj. William B. Zinn, of Preston county, was called to the chair. Hon. John S. Carlile, of Harrison County, conducted Mr. Zinn to the chair. Mr. Zinn returned thanks for the honor conferred upon him in appointing him temporary chairman of the Convention; craved the indulgence of the house, and said he would discharge the duties to the best of his humble abilities. (Applause.) George

1. Hon. Granville Davidson Hall who was the stenographic reporter of the First and Second Conventions of the People of North Western Virginia in 1861, was born in Harrison County, now West Virginia, September 17, 1837. He received a liberal education and was early interested in literature. In 1859 he entered the employ of the Wheeling Intelligencer. In 1860 he was one of the Virginia State Electors on the Lincoln and Hamlin ticket. The following pages of this work give evidence as to the character of his work in reporting the Proceedings and Journals of the Conventions of 1861. He was the first clerk of the West Virginia House of Delegates, his term beginning June 20, 1863—the natal day of the State. In 1864, he was elected Secretary of State for the term of two years, serving from March 4, 1864, to March 3, 1867. He declined a re-election, having with Hon. William P. Hubbard, purchased a half-interest in the Intelligencer of which he was Editor-in-Chief for five years. In September, 1873, he removed to Chicago, Illinois, and is now residing at Glencoe, that State. He is the author of several literary works—that of greatest historic interest being "The Rending of Virginia," published in 1902. —V. A. L.

2. It has been stated that this was a Mass Convention. This is not true. The members were chosen as delegates by the people of their respective counties in compliance with the "Call" sent out from Clarksburg. In Wood county and, perhaps, one or two others, it was resolved that any good Union men therefrom, present at the Convention, should be delegates therein. On the first day a Committee on Credentials was appointed, Andrew Flesher, a delegate from Jackson county, being Chairman thereof. At three o'clock this Committee reported duly accredited delegates from the counties of Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marion, Monongalia, Harrison, Preston, Wood, Ritchie, Lewis, Upshur, Gilmer, Wirt, Jackson, Mason, Wetzel, Pleasants, Barbour, Hampshire, Berkeley, Taylor, Tyler, Doddridge, Roane, Frederick, and Marshall—twenty-six in all. The total vote by counties for President at the last election was made the basis of representation.—V. A. L.

R. Latham, of Taylor, was appointed temporary secretary. On the suggestion of General John J. Jackson,[3] of Wood county, Rev. Peter T. Laishley, a delegate from Monongalia County, offered a prayer. In the course of his prayer he said:

"May the Almighty grant that the stars and stripes of the flag of our country, ever wave over all this land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Maine to the Gulf of Mexico. O! may those who would plunge us into the horrors of civil discord be overreached by the omnipotent arm of Almighty God. O! do Thou grant, we pray Thee, that this Convention, met here for the purpose of consulting upon the best interests of our own beloved Virginia, may act promptly, decisively and harmoniously. May it act with reference to peace principles and the universal happiness of our citizens and the country at large."

GENERAL JACKSON, of Wood county, then moved that any gentleman who was present from any county of Northwestern Virginia, be received as a delegate for such county, and be invited to take a seat on the floor of this Convention.

JOHN S. BURDETT, of Taylor county, moved to amend by including gentlemen from the Shenandoah Valley.

HON. JOHN S. CARLILE said he trusted that it would be the pleasure of his friend from Wood to withdraw the proposition. "I would defer upon any and all occasions to his better judgment, where there was a doubt upon my own mind; but, sir, I trust that this is to be a deliberative body; I trust that it is to be a body composed only of gentlemen who come clothed with the authority conferred upon them by the people of their counties when they appointed them. I would not wish to prevent any gentleman from Northwestern Virginia, or anywhere else, from taking a seat on this floor, or from listening to the deliberations of this body; but I desire, whatever act may be performed here by this Convention, shall be sanctioned by the authority of the people. In my county, at least, they selected the men to whom they entrusted the

3. There were two delegates of the name of Jackson on the Wood county delegation. These were General John Jay Jackson, and John J. Jackson, Jr. The former was the father, the second the son. General Jackson was born in Wood county, February 13, 1800, and educated at Clarksburg, and in Washington College, Pennsylvania; then became a cadet at West Point, from which he was graduated July 24, 1818; commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Regular Army and served at Norfolk, Virginia, and then in the Fourth Infantry in the Seminole War. In 1823 he entered upon the profession of law, locating at Parkersburg. Because of his military training he was long connected with the military establishment of Virginia; and in 1842, was commissioned Brigadier-General of the Twenty-third Brigade. He died at Parkersburg January 1, 1877. His son, John Jay Jackson, Jr., was born at Parkersburg, August 4, 1824. Appointed by President Lincoln a Judge of the Federal District of Western Virginia in 1861; and of the new District of West Virginia in 1863; he continued to serve in this capacity for nearly forty-three years. His name will long be an honored one in the judicial history of the State. V. A. L.

high and important interests which they believed to be involved in the call of this Convention. I trust, therefore, the motion will be withdrawn, and the first thing we will do will be to provide for a permanent organization of this body, by the appointment of a Committee on Credentials, who will report to the body those gentlemen who are really the representatives of the people."

GENERAL JACKSON said he would with pleasure adopt the suggestion of Mr. Carlile, but he could not see the force of it, but thought it would be difficult to discover who the real representatives of the people were. "It may be that there has been a lot of individuals at the Court Houses who may have acted on the nominations of those who have been sent here. He said, on behalf of the delegation from Wood county, that they were prepared to take the responsibility of acting as delegates, though they were not appointed as such." He had no doubt "the gentlemen had been sent here by a proper and responsible body, but if we are to take great and momentous action let us have our whole people with us. Let us take solemn deliberation, and reach a conclusion we will be able to stand by in the hour of triumph." He declined to withdraw the proposition.

MR. CARLILE said, in reply: "I regret exceedingly that I am compelled, as the gentleman refused to withdraw the motion, to appeal to this body to vote it down. It is unfortunate, sir, that at the very threshold of our proceedings there should be a division of sentiment exhibited, and if I did not conceive that the adoption of this motion would prove fatal to every step we may hereafter take, I should certainly have remained quiet in my seat. I do not go upon presumptions. Mr. Chairman, I am here by the voice of the legal qualified voters of my county, greater than was given to me at the polls on the 6th day of last February, at the election for delegates to the Virginia Convention. All my colleagues are here by the same voice and power. No Court House cliques in my county sent delegates here. It is the Court House cliques that have thus far brought this good old State to the very brink of ruin; and has it now bristling with bayonets from the Chesapeake to the Blue Ridge, and across to the mountains of the Alleghenies. Sir, I look upon this body as possessing all the power it could possess if it were a legislative body, elected under the forms of law—and who ever heard of a legal deliberative assembly being composed of gentlemen who may happen to be present from the various counties in the State in which they reside? Sir, we want a deliberate body. We came here as the accredited representatives of the loyal people of Virginia, and we intend, I trust, before we go away as such, sent here by such a voice and power, to put our feet upon the usurpations of power that have been exercised in the last two weeks. I trust it will be the pleasure of the Convention to proceed (applause) as a deliberative body, and that none will act in this body save and excepting those who have been sent here by their people. Our fellow-citizens who are here can occupy the rear of the hall, and they can see what is going on and give us the beenfit of an outside pressure, as has been done elsewhere for our injury and enslavement." (Applause.)

GENERAL JACKSON wished to ask a question—How are we, said he, to ascertain who are the accredited members of this Convention?

MR. CARLILE. "My answer is this—When we get a permanent Chairman and Secretary, we will appoint a committee who will tell us."

MR. JACKSON. "Until there is some authority to appoint a President, there can be no President. I do not know that I am a member here. When you go into a Convention you appoint a Committee on Credentials—but can they devise any plan to find out whether I am here by authority or not? I am a citizen of Northwestern Virginia, and thought my friends here would be glad to see me. There can be no legal means whatever to determine by what authority a gentleman can be here. I wish to include all the gentlemen who are here from any counties in this part of the State, and also from Frederick and Berkeley counties." Mr. Jackson referred to the precedent set by Rucker, in the Convention that nominated Polk.

MR. CARLILE said that the illustration given by the gentleman was a most unfortunate one. I hope the gentleman does not desire to Ruckerize this Convention, as he will do if his proposition is adopted by this body.

MR. JACKSON said he spoke of the Rucker case as a precedent.

MR. CARLILE said: "We are proceeding here without anything like order. You do not know who is here. There may be 'a chiel amang you takin' notes.' I trust the same disorder will not be persisted in, but that the legal and parliamentary precedents, which have been resorted to in England, in this country, and in all countries where deliberative bodies have assembled, will be followed by this Convention. There are gentlemen here who have served in the Legislature of our own State, and gentlemen who have been in Congress, and those who have been in the Conventions of our State, and is there one who has had any parliamentary experience that does not know that the suggestion that I indicated, and trusted would be acted upon by this body, is the precedent that has always been followed. You meet and, for the mere purpose of calling the body to order, put some one in the chair. The next step is to elect a permanent presiding officer and secretary, whose business it is to record your proceedings, and who is responsible for them. The next is to appoint a Committee on Elections, and that committee reports to the body who are entitled to seats in it. I trust we shall follow this precedent here, and that the grave authority that always clothes every deliberate body will clothe this one. I may be enthusiastic—I may be ahead of the times, or I may be behind the times,—but I believe, as much as I believe in the existence of a God, that our own salvation, and it may be the salvation of our whole country depends on the deliberations of this body, and its action, and I want it to go abroad all over the land, with every sanction of our people, and with all the prestige that parliamentary usage can give it."

JOHN J. JACKSON, Jr., of Wood, made some remarks, favoring the proposition of General Jackson. He knew counties where meetings had been held appointing any good Union men as delegates who might happen to be present at the Convention. Such had been the case in Wood county, and said the adoption of the suggestion of Mr. Carlile would disfranchise all the gentlemen from Wood.

MR. CARLILE said the proceedings of the meeting in Wood would be before the Committee on Credentials, and whoever the Committee appoints as delegates will be entitled to seats on the floor.

MR. JACKSON made some further remarks in favor of the proposition, saying that he did not understand that the Convention was here for the purpose of forming a Provisional Government, but for deliberation and conference.

MR. CARLILE again replied, urging that the deliberations of the Convention should be conducted in order, and in accordance with the usual forms and precedents of such bodies. "Have we merely met here," he continued, "to consult and adjourn and go home. If this is true, I have no further interest here. The people whom I represent expect that we will never adjourn till their safety is secured beyond a doubt in the Union and under that flag (cheers). If we temporize now and consult and adjourn to come back here again, before that day arrives, you will have sworn allegiance to the rattlesnake flag. That is the true condition in which we are now placed." Mr. Carlile continued at some length to speak of the urgency of instant action.

MR. PIERPONT, [Francis H.] of Marion, made some remarks in a general way, and concluded by suggesting to General Jackson the propriety of withdrawing his motion, to make room for another, a Committee on Credentials to be appointed of one from each county, and let the delegation report to that Committee the delegates from the counties, and when we vote upon resolutions it will be on the basis of the population of the counties.

GENERAL JACKSON said he had no sort of objection, but according to the proposal of the gentleman from Harrison, all those delegates not formally appointed would be excluded. A convention such as that gentleman wanted would not have such an effect as it would to admit the mass of those who had come here as citizens rather than as delegates. It would not look so much like an upheaving of the people.

After some further running debate between Messrs. Carlile, Jackson and others,

MR. BURDETT, of Taylor, said he for his part did not come here to talk. He came here for action. "While we are talking the chains have already been forged for us, and the bayonets are threatening invasion. In my town of Grafton, Letcher has ordered his troops to rendezvous. I tell you it is no time to debate and evince feeling. I trust there will be no more of this, but calm, solemn, stern deliberation, and a resolve to do what is right to defend and protect ourselves. Let us act and go back to our counties."

After some remarks by Mr. Tarr, of Brooke, Chester D. Hubbard, of Ohio county, moved that a committee, composed of one member from each county represented on this floor, be appointed, to whom shall be referred the subject of representation; and also the nomination of permanent officers for the Convention, which motion was adopted and the committee appointed.

MR. SENSENY, of Frederick, said he had come up through the dangers that environed a Union man in his part of the State, and he would be glad to be permitted to act as a delegate from that county, although not formally appointed.

On motion of GEORGE H. KIDD, of Preston,

RESOLVED, That the Convention adjourn till 3 o'clock P. M., and in the meantime each delegation from the different counties represented here shall report to the President one of their number, who shall represent them on the Committees on Representation and Permanent Organization.

On motion, it was ordered that each delegation from the respective counties meet as soon as possible, to consult as to the selection of members of the Committees.

The Convention adjourned to meet again at 3:00 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

3:00 O'Clock P. M.

The Convention reassembled at the appointed hour, and Mr. Flesher of Jackson county, Chairman of the Committee on Representation and Permanent Organization, submitted the report of that Committee partially as follows: The nomination for permanent President, Dr. John W. Moss, of Wood County, a list of Vice Presidents, the names of whom the reporter was unable to procure; and Secretaries, Colonel Charles B. Waggener, of Mason; Marshall M. Dent, of Monongalia, and Gibson Lamb Cranmer,[3] of Ohio county.

The Committee asked to be allowed further time for the consideration of the credentials of members.

On motion, the report as far as made was adopted.

On motion of MR. CARLILE, Messrs. Pierpont of Marion and McNeal [McNeeley?] of Monongalia, were appointed a committee to conduct the President to the chair.

DR. MOSS, on taking the chair, said: "Permit me to express my grateful acknowledgments for the very distinguished honor you have conferred upon me in selecting me to preside over the deliberations of this highly respectable body. It is hardly necessary for me to say that the occasion which has called us together is one of no ordinary character.

"We have met for the purpose of considering the unhappy condition of our country, and particularly of deliberating calmly and dispassionately upon the position Northwestern Virginia should assume in this momentous crisis of our country's history.

3. This name appears as Chandler, but it is an error. The name should be that of Gibson Lamb Cranmer.—V. A. L.

"Pardon me for saying, gentlemen, that the destinies of thousands are involved in the result of your action here, and permit me, therefore, to express the hope that your deliberations will be conducted with that solemnity befitting the occasion, and that they will be characterized by that harmony and conciliation so necessary to the success of any movement that may be inaugurated by this Convention. I again thank you, gentlemen, for the honor you have conferred upon me."

On motion it was ordered that the Clergymen of this city, be requested to alternate in opening each day's session of this Convention, with religious exercises.

MR. BURDETT moved the appointment of two Door-Keepers, and a Sergeant-at-Arms. And on motion of Mr. Pierpont, the Committee to Superintend the Hall, was requested to make the selection.

The following gentlemen were appointed: Sergeant-at-Arms, James R. Ewing; Door-Keepers, A. Clemens and R. Higgins.

MR. CARLILE offered the following resolution:

That when this Convention adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on to-morrow, and on each succeeding day while in session, at 10 o'clock A. M.

On motion of General Jackson, the resolution was amended by adding, "to adjourn at 12 o'clock M., and reassemble at 2 o'clock P. M.," and as amended was then adopted.

MR. WILLEY (of Monongalia), offered a resolution similar in purport to the one offered by Mr. Tarr, (of Brooke), relative to the appointment of a Committee on Federal Relations, and laid on the table previously, but no action was taken.

GENERAL JACKSON, of Wood, obtained the floor for the purpose of defining his position which he did in a speech of such great length as to preclude the possibility—together with the lateness of the hour of the adjournment, of giving a report of it here. He was opposed to the Convention taking any definite or decisive action; thought it would be premature, and would be revolutionary and altogether unwise. He was in favor of the Convention passing a series of resolutions expressive of its sense of the wrongs of the Northwest, and their adjourning at least until after the election, and urged that meanwhile the counties should be canvassed to defeat the Ordinance of Secession.—When this had been done and every peaceable method of defense exhausted he would then go in for a division of the State. He characterized the policy indicated by Mr. Carlile as calculated to place the North-West at once in the midst of a civil war. He believed we might, after a while, and by going about it in the right way, effect a peaceable division of the State, but he urged that the people of the interior counties were not ready for it yet.

MR. BURDETT interrupted at one point and asked—supposing in the mean time, while thus waiting, Letcher should throw his troops into this part of the State to intimidate the Union men and carry the election by violence and force, as they will do in the East, what he proposed to do in such a case. "We must meet this emergency now," said Mr. Burdett. (Applause.) "Are we to wait till a military despotism pervades our country from one end to another, and freemen's mouths are closed and you threatened with ropes around your necks?"

After Mr. Jackson had concluded his address, Mr. Carlile replied at some length. He said that if he had supposed the deliberations of this body were to be limited to the adoption of a few paper resolutions, he should not have endured the fatigue, and passed the many sleepless nights, and expended the hundreds of dollars he had for the furtherance of what he supposed would be the action of this Convention—in furtherance of the efforts that are necessary to maintain the liberties of a patriotic people. (Applause.)

"Need my friend from Wood, be informed that the day has gone by for plunging the people of the Northwestern part of this State into revolution, as he terms it. We are already in a revolution, not by our own act, but that of the usurpers of the people's power sitting in dark conclave at Richmond. I presume it was the mission of this body, to devise such measures as would protect us from the consequences, which must inevitably flow from that usurpation. (Applause.) We are the only portion of this State, that is not now under a military despotism. The order has gone forth and is even at this hour being executed, by which we are to share the same fate that has been imposed on other portions of the State. The soldiers have been ordered to rendezvous at various points in this part of the Commonwealth.

"No people ever remained free, or ever will, that were not willing to spill their last drop of blood for the maintenace of their liberty. No people who contented themselves with paper resolves while bayonets were bristling all around them, and war had been brought up to their very doors as rapidly as it could be, ever maintained their freedom in this way. Show yourselves worthy to be free; and while I am not a professor of religion, yet I have the confidence which a pious mother instilled into me to believe that the Almighty, Who seems to be distrusted now, will come to our aid and protect us in our freedom.

"Sir, when has there ever been in the whole records of the past such an utter contempt, on the part of any despot, for the people, as has been exhibited here in what was once free Virginia, by the Richmond Convention? You determine at the polls, by a vote of more than 50,000 of a majority, that no act of that Convention could change your relations with the Federal Government without first being submitted to you; and before even the Ordinance is passed, they place you in hostility to that Government."

He proceeded to show in answer to what General Jackson said about canvassing, that in many counties such a thing was not permitted, as in many counties even in the Northwest, the military was in the hands, and under the control of Letcher; and Union meetings were broken up, and Union speakers not allowed to address them.

GENERAL JACKSON wished to know how prompt action would overcome the difficulty.

MR. CARLILE—"Let this Convention show its loyalty to the Union, and call upon the government to furnish them with means of defence, and they will be furnished. (Applause.) There are 2,000 Minnie muskets here now (Cheers); and more on the way, thank God. (Cheers).

"I went on last Tuesday, after an absence of twelve days from home, without ever stopping there, to Lewis county, where they have been under a system of intimidation; and despite the threat of arms and mob, and the charge of the judge to hang me for treason, I addressed that people and they are represented here to-day, and if they are not intimidated they will give 1,000 majority against the ratification of the ordinance of secession.

"Let us act; let us repudiate these monstrous usurpations; let us show our loyalty to Virginia and the Union; and let us maintain ourselves in the Union at every hazard. It is useless to cry peace when there is no peace; and I for one will repeat what was said by one of Virginia's noblest sons and greatest statesmen, "Give me liberty or give me death!" (Great and continued applause.)

The Committee on Credentials then made their supplemental report, showing duly accredited delegates from the counties of

Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marion, Monongalia, Harrison, Preston, Wood, Ritchie, Lewis, Upshur, Gilmer, Wirt, Jackson, Mason, Wetzel, Pleasants, Barbour, Hampshire, Berkeley, Taylor, Tyler, Doddridge, Roane, Frederick, and Marshall; and reporting the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the President be authorized to present cards of admission, to the floor of this Convention, to such citizens from other parts of the State now in attendance, as sympathize with the objects of this Convention, and are good and true friends of the Union.

"Resolved, That each member of this committee present to the secretaries of this Convention a fair list of the delegates now in attendance from the county represented by such member in this Convention.

"Resolved, further, That the vote of the Convention upon any question when demanded by twenty-five members shall be taken by giving to such county the aggregate vote cast by such county at the last Presidential election; such vote to be given by the chairman of the county delegation. On all other questions the vote shall be taken per capita."

MR. TARR, of Brooke, then offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

"Resolved, That a committee of one member from each county represented here be appointed by the President as a Committee on State and Federal Relations, to whom shall be referred all resolutions of this body looking to action by the Convention."

The following is the Committee appointed by the President in accordance with the foregoing resolution:

Campbell Tarr, Brooke; Waitman T. Willey, Monongalia; John S. Carlile, Harrison; General John J. Jackson, Wood; Charles Hooton, Preston; Daniel Lamb, Ohio; George McC. Porter, Hancock; Jos. S. Machir, Mason; Daniel D. Johnson, Tyler; James Scott, Jackson; George W. Bier, Wetzel; R. C. Holliday, Marshall; Alexander Scott Withers,[4] Lewis; E. T. Graham, Wirt; F. H. Pierpont, Marion; Spencer Dayton, Barbour; George S. Senseney, Frederick; John S. Burdett, Taylor; A. R. McQuilkin, Berkeley; Friend Cochran, Pleasants; Irwin C. Stump, Roane; S. Martin, Gilmer; C. P. Rohrbaugh, Upshur; Capt. Owen D. Downey, Hampshire; A. J. Foley, Doddridge.[5]

MR. WILLEY, of Monongalia, being entitled to the floor, proceeded to deliver a speech of great length, which for reasons already enumerated, we are compelled to omit. He occupied substantially the same grounds taken by General Jackson, and was followed by Campbell Tarr, of Brooke, who reviewed his positions and those of Jackson with a good deal of severity. He declared boldly for the position taken by Mr. Carlile; that the time for compromise and talk had passed; that now nothing but decisive and prompt action could avert the impending dangers. This was the time to strike, and he knew a response to that declaration would come up from the entire valley of the Ohio to the Alleghenies.

The Convention then adjourned.

THE SECOND DAY,

TUESDAY, MAY 14, 1861.

FORENOON PROCEEDINGS.

The Convention assembled at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, according to adjournment. The religious exercises of the morning were conducted by Rev. Wesley Smith.

The minutes of the previous day's proceedings were read by the Secretary. At the suggestion of Mr. Carlile, the county of Frederick was stricken from the list of counties which had accredited delegations on the floor, as enumerated by the report of the Committee on Credentials. It would place the gentleman from Frederick in an unpleasant position; and it would appear to the country, if he were admitted here as a fully accredited delegate, without having been appointed as such by any meeting, that perhaps the rest of the delegations were here in the same unauthorized way.

The CHAIR stated that he has issued a card of admission, under the resolution of the Committee on Credentials, to the gentleman from Frederick.

Some other amendments were made to the minutes, and they were adopted.

MR. LAZIER, of Monongalia, hoped the Convention and those outside the bar would refrain from any expressions of applause or disapproval, during the sittings of the Convention.

MR. WILLEY rose to a privileged question. He had been, it seemed, misunderstood in his remarks last evening defining his position. He had been understood to say that his view of the proper course of the Convention was, that it should adjourn until after the ensuing election, without taking any action whatever. He had intended to say that he differed from Mr. Carlile in the views that gentleman entertained in regard to the proper course to be pursued here. Nevertheless he wished to declare a distinct and unequivocal position in condemnation of the usurpation at Richmond, and lay down a platform upon which to organize the public sentiment for a separation of the State. He said further, that previous engagements would necessarily call him away from the Convention to-morrow, and he would have to ask to be released from his position in the Committee on State and Federal Relations.

MR. WILLEY was released with the understanding that he continue to serve while present.

GENERAL JACKSON moved that the Convention adjourn till 2 o'clock, P. M., when the Committee will probably be able to report, with the understanding that if the Committee cannot report then this body stand adjourned till 5 o'clock P. M..

COLONEL WHEAT, (James S.,) of Ohio, asked the gentleman to withdraw his motion a few minutes till he could have an opportunity to read a few resolutions. He then read the following, which were afterwards referred to the Committee on State and Federal Affairs:

MR. WHEAT'S RESOLUTION.

"1. Resolved, That in our deliberate judgment the ordinance passed by the Convention of Virginia on the 17th day of April, 1861, commonly known as the ordinance of secession by which said Convention undertook in the name of the State of Virginia, to repeal the ratification of the Constitution of the United States of America, by this State, and to resume all the rights and powers granted under said Constituion, is unconstitutional, null and void.

"2. Resolved, That the schedule attached to said ordinance suspending and prohibiting the election for members of Congress from this State, to the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, required by law to be held on the 4th Thursday of this month, is a manifest usurpation of power, to which we as Virginia freemen ought not, cannot, and will not submit.

"3. Resolved, That the Convention of the 24th of April, 1861, between the Commissioners of the Confederate States and this State, and the ordinance of the 25th of April, 1861, approving and ratifying said Convention, in agreement by which the whole military power and military operations, offensive and defensive of the Commonwealth, were placed under the chief control and direction of the President of the Confederate States, upon the same principle and footing as if the Commonwealth were now a member of said Confederacy, and all the actings and doings of the executive officers of our State under and in pursuance of said agreement are plain and palpable violations of the Constitution of our State, and are utterly subversive of the rights and liberties of the good people thereof.

"4. Resolved, That it be earnestly recommended to our fellow-citizens of this State, at the approaching election to vindicate their rights as Virginia freemen by voting against said ordinance of secession, and all other measures of like character, so far as they may be made known to them.

"5. Resolved, That it be also urged upon them to vote for members of Congress of the United States, in their several districts, in the exercise of the rights secured to us by the Constitution of the United States, and of Virginia.

"6. Resolved, That it be also recommended to the citizens of the several counties to vote at said election for such persons as may entertain the opinions in the foregoing resolutions, as members of the House of Delegates of our State.

"7. Resolved, That it is the imperative duty of our citizens to maintain the Constitution and the laws thereof, and all officers there-under acting in the lawful discharge of their respective duties.

"8. Resolved, That in the language of George Washington in his letter of the 17th of September, 1787, to the President of Congress: 'in all our deliberations on this subject we keep steadily in our view that which appears to us the greatest interest of every true American, the consolidation of our Union, in which is involved our property, felicity, safety and perhaps our national existence.' Therefore we will maintain and defend the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, and all officers acting there-under in the lawful discharge of their respective duties."

These resolutions were referred to the Committee on Federal Relations.

MR. CARLILE then with a view of harmonizing and ascertaining the sentiments of the Convention, he had drawn up a resolution which he desired to submit, and to accompany with some few remarks by way of explanation. He understood, he thought, one thing at least, that it was the unanimous determination of this body to consent under no circumstance, to their transfer to the so-called Southern Confederacy. The only diversity amongst them was as to the means of resistance—the means by which this determination could be made effectual. Of course the proposition he should submit would come with no authoritative expression of opinion, but just as if emanating from any other of the body. It was, however, the result of many long, well-considered and well-matured opinions and convictions. He would add that they were given shape and form this morning, after a night spent without sleep. He then read the resolution as follows:

MR. CARLILE'S RESOLUTION.

"Resolved, That the Committee on State and Federal Relations be instructed to report an ordinance declaring that the connection of the counties in this State composing the Tenth and Eleventh Congressional Districts, to which shall be added the county of Wayne, with the other portions of the State is hereby dissolved, and that the people of the said counties are in full posession and exercise of all the rights of sovereignty which belong and appertain to a free and independent State in the United States and subject to the Constitution thereof; and that the said committee be instructed to report a constitution and form of government for said State, to be called the State of New Virginia; and also that they report a declaration of the causes which have impelled the people of the said counties thus to dissolve their connection with the rest of the State, together with an ordinance declaring that said constitution and form of government shall take effect and be an act of this day when the consent of the Congress of the United States and of the Legislature of the State of Virginia is obtained, as is provided for by section 3, Article 4 of the Constitution of the United States."

MR. CARLILE then proceeded with his explanation, when

MR. WHEAT called him to order. He raised the point of order that every proposition like this must be referred to the committee without debate or further explanation.

MR. CARLILE replied that they had adopted a resolution in the Richmond Convention by which all resolutions touching federal relations were to be referred "without debate," as the resolution said. And yet, they were engaged for weeks in the discussion of resolutions of instruction to that committee. This is a resolution of instruction, and even if it were but of inquiry, the resolution adopted yesterday does not prevent debate on it. There were very good precedents for the course he proposed.

MR WILLEY read the resolution creating the Committee on State and Federal Relations, and said the first business was to refer the resolution to that committee.

MR. CARLILE replied that his resolution contemplated a reference to that very committee. The ultimate action of this body of course takes place after the report of that committee.

MR WHEAT regretted that his friend from Harrison should try to forestall the action of the Convention. The resolution instructed the Committee to make a specific report involving questions of great magnitude. It instructs the Committee to report an ordinance to establish an independent government within the State of Virginia. He presumed the Convention was not unprepared to meet that question but this was not the proper mode by which to do so.

MR. CARLILE said: "With a view to conciliation and harmony, I am perfectly willing to put it in the shape of a resolution of inquiry."

MR. WHEAT. That will do.

MR. JACKSON said the resolution ought to be referred. He had intended to move an adjournment, but had given way in order that the gentleman (Mr. Wheat) might read his resolutions. If this proposition was to be entertained a moment, he would take his hat and leave the hall, and the delegation from Wood would go with him. He insisted that his motion to adjourn should be put.

MR. CARLILE said the motion to adjourn had been withdrawn and was not in order, and besides it would be the grossest injustice not to permit him to explain the motives he had in offering his resolution.

GENERAL JACKSON objected, and insisted that his motion to adjourn was in order.

The CHAIR said it was his opinion that no debate upon any proposition looking to the definite action by the Convention was in order until the Committee on State and Federal Relations had reported.

MR. CARLILE. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

GENERAL JACKSON. It is not in order.

MR. CARLILE. The question of order decided by the Chair is not the question before the committee. My resolution as I said is merely one of inquiry. I merely wish to explain.

The CHAIR. He has the right to explain the resolution to be submitted to the committee.

MR. CARLILE: "Mr. President, it is due to me, due to the correct understanding of the country, and due to the position I occupy before the country, that I shall be allowed to make this explanation. It is represented that a proposition looking to a separate State government is revolutionary in its character. I deny it. It is the only legal, consitutional remedy left this people if they do not approve the action of the Virginia Convention.

"I, like the gentleman from Monongalia, desire to exhaust all the legal and peaceable remedies before ever we are compelled to the ultima ratio of nations. But is there, can there be, aything revolutionary in availing ourselves of the constitutional means provided in the organic law of the land, for the very purpose of protecting our interests? Is it possible that a gag law is in force, and that thought and freedom of speech have ceased to exist in this once free land? Is it revolutionary or illegal to discuss the propriety of availing ourselves of a constitutional right? The Constitution of the United States, which is also the Constitution for Virginia; which is the supreme law of the land; which is to be obeyed and respected by all, even by the Constitutions of the several States—which makes null and void every constitutional provision of a State, and every legislative enactment which is in conflict with that instrument—and is there a man here that needs to be told it that the Constitution of the United States provides expressly and in terms plain and unmistakable for the separation of a State and the erection of a new State within the boundaries of a State out of which a new State is to be formed? If that be true, and no man can deny it—if there be such a provision in the Constitution of the United States, pray tell me where is there anything revolutionary in discussing and deliberating and exercising a privilege thus secured to them by that instrument? I desire once for all to say to gentlemen, they are endeavoring to evade the issue by attempting to alarm the fears of men by stigmatizing the exercise of a plain and constitutional right as revolutionary. It is a peaceful, legal, constitutional remedy secured to us by the same instrument which secures freedom of speech and the right of trial by jury. Nor is there anything in this right inconsitent with what gentlemen are pleased to term their 'allegiance' to either the State or Federal Government. There is no treason, as gentlemen would endeavor to impress. There is no perjury in it, as they have attempted to assume. Sir, you may swear to support the Constitution of your State and the Constitution of the United States, but is it a violation of your oath to exercise a plain constitutional right secured to you in the very instrument and by the very instrument you swear to support? Therefore do I beg members of this Convention to weigh well all arguments that may be addressed to their fears. He who takes counsel from his fears is ill fitted for the emergency in which this people is now placed. (Applause.)

"But it has been said that this Convention was called here alone for consultation. Sir, it happens to be my pride that I had the honor to draw up the preamble and resolutions which were adopted by the meeting in my county and which have resulted in the bringing together of this Convention. Now let us see what was contemplated in our assembling here. Every meeting held, and which has appointed delegates here, has been held in response to those resolutions. Those resolves, among other things, say that this Convention was called 'to consult and determine upon such action as the people of Northwestern Virginia should take in the present fearful emergency.'

"That is the call, and such is your duty. It contemplated 'action' that would keep us in the Union, and would preserve to us and to our children and to all posterity, the liberties achieved by the illustrious dead.

"It is said we are not prepared to take action. Sir, when will we be better prepared? If this action be our constitutional right, who will dare to say that anywhere within the limits of this Union, any man is authorized to resist such action? Who dare to say that this remedy can be exercised only by virtue of force? Sir, all the privileges of freemen may be attempted to be suppressed by bad men, and will be, if they can, and if we have not the nerve and courage to repel such force and sustain ourselves in our constitutional rights.—And, sir, there is no more reason why action on the part of this Convention, looking to a separation from another portion of the State, under the Constitution and laws of the land, should not be taken, than there is to resist, by force, the assertion of any other constitutional right. But those who would endeavor to alarm us and deter us from entertaining, and considering, and exercising this right by terming it revolutionary, make the assertion with nothing on earth to sustain it, that we are not in a state of preparation. Sir, we will never be in a state of preparation if we are not now. What means of defense or protection are we likely to have within the next six or twelve months that we have not to-day."

MR. WHEAT called Mr. Carlile to order.

MR. CARLILE. The gentleman will reduce his objections to writing.

MR. WHEAT, after having done so: The gentleman from Harrison by extending his remarks beyond what is known as an explanation is arguing the merits of the proposition contained in his resolution and opening the door to general debate, and denying all other members the right to reply to his arguments, thus forestalling the independent action of the Committee.

MR. CARLILE had understood the Chair to say if he confined himself to an explanation he was in order. He had been explaining the first and most important branch of his resolution, which is the peaceful constitutional right of this separation, as I have shown by authority. Any gentleman had the same right to discuss the question that he had.

The CHAIR said that any general debate was out of order until the Committee on State and Federal Relations had reported, but the gentleman had a right to make an explanation. The Chair thinks though he is now out of order.

MR. CARLILE. "I will try to confine myself to an explanation. I desire to say that this resolution does not contemplate that all action shall be deferred until the country gets into a better state of preparation' than now; and I desire to put the inquiry to the Convention, when will we be better prepared to avail ourselves of this constitutional right than now? After the 23d of this month it will not be a Constitutional right. We will have been transferred to the Southern Confederacy, and the Constitution of the United States, under the theory of those who advocate this doctrine of withdrawing from the Union at will, will no longer shield and support us; the soil upon which we stand will be no longer the soil of the United States; and if every member of the Legislature of Virgina, and every man, woman and child in the State were willing for our separation, the separation could not be made without the consent of the Montgomery government, and that could only be obtained by treaty, and negotiations by ministers on the part of the two hostile governments, as they are now, and as they may remain. And no treaty negotiations can ever be had until the hostility ceases, and the Southern Confederacy is recognized by the Government of the United States. This is where we''—

MR. LAZIER, of Monongalia—It would certainly be better to leave the discussion of this until the report of the Committee.

The CHAIR said he felt compelled to arrest the discussion now.

GENERAL JACKSON claimed the floor. He insisted that his motion to adjourn had precedence. Mr. Carlile, he said, was out of order.

MR. CARLILE then appealed from the decision of the Chair, but subsequently, for the sake of harmony, as he said, withdrew the appeal, and gave way for the motion to adjourn.

GENERAL JACKSON withdrew his motion to adjourn, and on his motion it was ordered that all gentlemen who had propositions to submit to the committee on State and Federal Relations, be requested to hand them in, and that the committee be instructed to consider them. He then renewed his motion to adjourn till 2 o'clock, and the Convention then adjourned.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at the appointed hour and was called to order.

MR. LAZIER said he had just returned from the room of the Committee on State and Federal Relations. The Committee are not prepared to report now, and will not be by 5 o'clock. I therefore move that the convention do now adjourn to meet this evening at 7 o'clock. The motion was put and the Convention adjourned.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met at 7 o'clock, and the Chairman stated the first business before the body would be to receive the report of the Committee on State and Federal Relations.

GEORGE McC. PORTER, of Hancock, Chairman, reported on behalf of the committee, a series of resolutions, comprising those offered in the morning session by Mr. Wheat, with the addition of the following:

"Resolved, That in view of the geographical, social, commercial and industrial interests of North Western Virginia, we pronounce the policy of the Convention in changing the relation of the State to the Federal Government, and annexing us to the Confederate States, unwise and utterly ruinous and disastrous to all the material interests of our section, severing all our social ties and drying up all the channels of our trade and prosperity.

"Resolved, That should the Ordinance of Secession be adopted, then we recommend to the several counties with us, to hold elections at the several precincts therein, on the 4th day of June, 1861, for delegates to a General Convention, to be held at Wheeling on the 11th day of June, 1861, to devise such measures, and take such action as the safety and welfare of Virginia may demand; each County to appoint a number of representatives to said Convention equal to double the number to which it will be entitled in the next House of Delegates; and that the Senators and Delegates to be elected on the 23d instant, to the next General Assembly of Virginia by the Counties referred to, be declared members of said Convention.

"Resolved, That inasmuch as it is a conceded political axiom, that government is founded on the consent of the governed and is instituted for their good, and it cannot be denied that the course pursued by the ruling power in the State, is utterly subversive and destructive of our interests, we believe we may rightfully and successfully appeal to the proper authorities of Virginia, to permit us peacefully and lawfully to separate from the residue of the State, and form ourselves into a government to give effect to the wishes, views and interests of our constituents.

Resolved, That the public authorities be assured that the people of the Northwest will exert their utmost power to preserve the peace, which they feel satisfied they can do, until an opportunity is afforded to see if our present difficulties cannot receive a peaceful solution; and express the earnest hope that no troops of the Confederate States be introduced among us, as we believe it would be eminently calculated to produce civil war.

"Resolved, That ———— be appointed a Committee to prepare an address to the people of Virginia, in conformity with the foregoing resolutions, and cause the same to be published and circulated as extensively as possible."

MR. CARLILE moved to re-commit the report with instructions, and after reading the resolution which he offered in the morning's session, and submitting it as a resolution of instruction, proceeded to address the Convention at considerable length, in advocacy of the motion, and urging that the convention should take some action more effective than the mere adoption of paper resolutions. (We will, at the earliest possible moment, publish a verbatim report of the speech of Mr. Carlile.—Editor. See Appendix.)

After MR. CARLILE had concluded, MR. WILLEY obtained the floor and proceeded at great length to reply to the propositions and arguments of Mr. Carlile. He said the proposition of Mr. C. was a violation of the law, and it was treason not only against the Constitution of Virginia, but against the Constitution of the United States. He assumed all the way through that such action would of necessity bring on war in our midst. After he had concluded,

On motion the Convention then adjourned to 9 o'clock tomorrow.

After the adjournment some one proposed three cheers for New Virginia, which went up with a wild and almost ferocious yell. Three more were given for Carlile, and the spectators and delegates dispersed.

THE THIRD DAY,

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15, 1861.

FORENOON PROCEEDINGS.

The Convention assembled and was called to order at nine o'clock. The opening prayer was made by Rev. R. V. Dodge.

MR. FLESHER, of Jackson, rose to a question of privilege. He read from the Wheeling Union the proceedings of a public meeting in his county, and said that the article was a libel upon the character of the people he helped to represent.

The Secretary then read the journal of the preceding day.

MR. WILLEY having the floor.

MR. CARLILE asked leave to add to the resolution which he submitted yesterday evening the following:

That the said committee provide for submitting the said ordinance to a vote of the people in the said counties of this State at the election to be held on the 23d inst.

A member also asked and obtained leave to read a series of resolutions. The resolutions suggested the propriety of the adoption of the present constitution and laws of the State, and recommending the holding of an election to elect delegates to a convention to revise the Constitution and organize a separate State; that the convention at once organize a provisional government by electing three persons to constitute a committee of safety, whose duty it will be to exercise the constitutional power of Governor and Council of Virginia, until a complete organization could be effected; that the Convention is ardently attached to the Constitution of the United States, and the Federal Government is earnestly requested to establish a line of military posts along up the valley of the Shenandoah, from Harper's Ferry to the Tennessee line, and up the Great Kanawha.

The reading of the resolution occasioned a good deal of merriment. They were referred to the appropriate committee.

MR. WILLEY then resumed his argument, and proceeded to address the Convention at length. He opposed the organization of a provisional government, and said it would be treason against the State Government of the United States and against the Government of the C. S. A. He urged also that it would inevitably bring war and ruin upon this part of the State. He remonstrated against such action, and asked for the mode of redress proposed in the resolutions of the committee. He would never lend himself to an insurrectionary or unconstitutional means of accomplishing an object which he thought could be accomplished according to law.

MR. POLSLEY, of Mason, addressed the Convention at some length, in favor of a separation. He was not terrified by the cry of treason that had been raised here. If there were any treason in the matter they had already commited it. He referred to the precedent set by California in her organization. We had the right to establish a provisional government here for the entire State.

MR. CARLILE was willing to take the position the gentleman had indicated, if it should be the pleasure of the Convention to recommend the report.

JOHN J. JACKSON, JR., moved that the Convention go into secret session.

MR. PIERPONT hoped it would not be done.

MR. LAZIER wished to add to the motion, "that the clergymen of the city be permitted to remain and the ladies be allowed to occupy the side boxes." (Laughter.)

MR. CARLILE was willing, if it were deemed advisable, to vote for the proposition.

JOHN R. HUBBARD, of Ohio county, opposed it, and said it would be but imitating the Star Chamber Convention at Richmond. He spoke of the motion as being that of Mr. Carlile, of Harrison.

MR. CARLILE disclaimed, and said he had merely expressed a willingness to acquiesce.

GENERAL JACKSON trusted the motion would be withdrawn.

MR. BURDETT trusted it would not be withdrawn. He believed it necessary to fight the devil with fire, and was in favor of going into secret session.

MR JACKSON withdrew the motion, and

MR. PIERPONT obtaining the floor, proceeded to address the Convention in favor of the adoption of the report of the Committee on State and Federal Relations, and in opposition to the plan of establishing a Provisional Government. In the course of his remarks he alluded to Mr. Carlile, and said that all other gentlemen were to be driven from the field.

MR. CARLILE protested that he had said nor done nothing, authorizing any such inference; and he said now to this Convention and to the people of Virginia, that he had filled the last office he ever would fill with his own consent. (Applause.)

MR. PIERPONT also incidentally remarked in the course of his speech, that there would soon be any amount of men and money here to protect Union men in Northwestern Virginia.

MR. CARLILE asked Mr. Pierpont to give his authority for the assertion; Mr. Pierpont was about to do so, but on the suggestion of several gentlemen, refrained.

MR. CARLILE said he did not ask it out of any doubt as to the entire truthfulness of the statement. He had understood him to speak of it as a mere supposition.

MR. CARLILE then stated that it had been charged on him, that he was at Washington a short time since, engaged in procuring arms, and that the two thousand now here had been obtained through him. It was not true. The arms were procured by a delegation of gentlemen from Brooke County, and he himself was two hundred miles away from Washington at that time, where he had not been at all.

MR. PIERPONT had alluded to several manifestations on the part of the spectators as an outside pressure, and said that the spectators were endeavoring by such expressions to intimidate gentlemen in the Convention, when

MR. WHEAT arose and said, that he had lived here all his life, and knew well the temper of his fellow citizens of this city. He was sure Mr. Pierpont did them gross injustice. He reminded the spectators that it was improper for them to take any part in the proceeding, even by any expressions of approval or disapprobation.

On motion of Mr. Jackson, Jr., the Convention adjourned; Mr. Pierpont yielding the floor for that purpose.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at two o'clock.

MR. WILLEY obtained leave to read a letter addressed by Mr. J. Hughes of Martinsburg, Va., to J. B. Bowers, Esq., a member of the Convention. The letter gave an account of a Union meeting held in Berkeley county, and exhibited a very favorable view of the sentiment in that county.

On motion of John J. JACKSON, Jr., it was ordered to be recorded in to-day's proceedings as a part of the minutes of the Convention.

MR. CARLILE handed to the Secretary the proceedings of meetings held in Cabell and Wayne counties, appointing delegates to this Convention and instructing the delegates from Harrison to act as alternates, and asked that they be accredited as such.

MR. POLSLEY of Mason, offered an amendment to the resolution of instructions offered by Mr. Carlile yesterday.

MR. CARLILE said for the purpose of evincing his desire for unanimity, he would accept the resolution, as an amendment to his propositon so that all the different views may go before the committee. He offered as an additional amendment the following:

"And that the said committee also provide in the event of the ratification of the Ordinance of Secession for the re-assembling of this Convention on the first Monday in June next, to adopt a Constitution and form of Government for the said counties, if, in their opinion it is premature at this time to adopt said Constitution and form of Government."

He had drawn this up and offered in deference to the views of others—not that he changed his own opinion heretofore expressed here in the least.

JOHN J. JACKSON, Jr., said the Convention was and had been acting entirely without any laws to govern its deliberations, and he moved the adoption of the rules of the House of Delegates of Virginia, so far as applicable to this body.

The motion was put, and the rules adopted.

MR. PIERPONT then resumed his speech. He expressed his regret that he should have exhibited any undue warmth in his remarks during the morning session; and apologized for the same. He was interrupted by a motion to refer all the pending propositions before the Convention back to the Committee on State and Federal Relations.

MR. CARLILE moved to adjourn till tomorrow, in order to give the committee time for deliberation, but withdrew his motion to allow Mr. Latham to read a series of resolutions which he offered as a kind of middle ground for the consideration of the committee. The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Federal Relations.

MR. LATHAM wished then to read a declaratory resolution, for the immediate action of the Convention, but was ruled out of order.

On motion of JOHN J. JACKSON, Jr., the Convention then adjourned till 5 o'clock P. M.

THE EVENING SESSION.

Convention met at 5 o'clock.

The CHAIR stated that the first business before the Convention was the report of the Committee on State and Federal Relations.

The Committee not being ready to report, a call was made for Mr. Latham, of Taylor county, who addressed the Convention. He was followed in a brief address by Mr. Holliday, of Marshall.

JOHN J. JACKSON, JR., stated that the Committee would be ready to report at seven o'clock. He stated that he had received a telegraphic despatch a few moments ago from his own town, informing him that a letter had been written to him giving the details, which he thought he would receive by eleven o'clock to-night; and after the receipt of that letter he thought the committee might see the propriety of waiting a day or two longer before taking action. He read the despatch, which said: "The dogs of war are about: look out for State troops. I will write by mail."

"I know," continued Mr. Jackson, "how utterly unable gentlemen who reside here on this little strip of territory, lying between these two great States of Pennsylvania and Ohio, are of appreciating the situation of the people of the interior counties. Ever since the assembling of this Convention, I have been endeavoring to impress upon this body the conviction on my mind, that within less than a brief time to elapse between now and the 23d of this month, more of the Northwest not now so occupied, would be visited by Southern troops. The Baltimore Sun intimated that Virginia intended sending out here 5,000 troops within the next three days, but had been advised by an officer of the Confederate Government not to do so." He had thought, perhaps, he was the only crazy man in this body, and all the rest were sane, but he thought that when the Convention would see as he believed it would, within 24 hours the necessity for immediate action, he had been endeavoring to impress upon the Convention, they would come to the conclusion not to adjourn tonight, and he moved to adjourn till tomorrow at the usual hour. Motion rejected.

JOHN J. JACKSON, Jr., said he wasn't afraid of Letcher's "dogs of war." Let them come and we will give them a warm reception. He moved to adjourn to 7 o'clock. The motion carried and the Convention adjourned.

THE NIGHT SESSION.

The Convention met at 7 o'clock.

On motion, the Journals of the day's proceedings were ordered to be read.

MR. BURDETT stated that he received a letter, saying that although the counties of Randolph and Jackson[6] were not represented here, they sympathized with the movement and these counties would endorse whatever the Convention may do.

MR. TARR then presented the report of the Committee on Federal Relations, which was read by the Secretary, as follows:

Report of the Committee on State and Federal Relations.

1. Resolved, That in our deliberate judgment the ordinance passed by the Convention of Virginia, on the 17th day of April, 1861, known as the ordinance of secession, by which said Convention, undertook in the name of the State of Virginia, to repeal the ratification of the Constitution of the United States by this State, and to resume all the rights and powers granted under said Constitution, is unconstitutional, null and void.

6. This is an error. A delegation from Jackson county was there on the floor of the Convention. Jefferson county may have been mentioned instead.—V. A. L.

2. Resolved, That the schedule attached to the ordinance of secession suspending and prohibiting the election for members of Congress from this State, is a manifest usurpation of power to which we ought not to submit.

3. Resolved, That the agreement of the 24th of April, 1861, between the Commissioner of the Confederate States and this State, and the ordinance of the 25th of April, 1861, approving and ratifying said agreement by which the whole military force and military operations offensive and defensive, of this Commonwealth are placed under the chief control and direction of the President of the Confederate States, upon the same principles, basis and footing as if the Commonwealth were now a member of said Confederacy, and all the acts of the executive officers of our State in pursuance of said agreement and ordinance are plain and palpable violations of the Constitution of the United States, and are utterly subversive of the rights and liberties of the people of Virginia.

4. Resolved, That we earnestly urge and entreat the citizens of the State everywhere, but more especially in the Western section, to be prompt at the polls on the 23d inst.; and to impress upon every voter the duty of voting in condemnation of the Ordinance of Secession, in the hope that we may not be involved in the ruin to be occasioned by its adoption, and with the view to demonstrate the position of the West on the question of secession.

5. Resolved, That we earnestly recommend to the citizens of Western Virginia to vote for members of the Congress of the United States, in their several districts, in the exercise of the right secured to us by the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Virginia.

6. Resolved, That we also recommend to the citizens of the several counties to vote at said election for such persons as entertain the opinions expressed in the foregoing resolutions, for members of the Senate and the House of Delegates of our State.

7. Resolved, That in view of the Geographical, social, commercial and industrial interests of Northwestern Virginia, this Convention are constrained in giving expression to the opinion of their constituents to declare that the Virginia Convention in assuming to change the relation of the State of Virginia to the Federal Government, have not only acted unwisely and unconstitutionally, but have adopted a policy utterly ruinous to all the material interests of our section, severing all our social ties, and drying up all the channels of our trade and prosperity.

8. Resolved, That in the event of the Ordinance of Secession being ratified by a vote, we recommend to the people of the Counties here represented, and all others, disposed to co-operate with us, to appoint on the 4th day of June, 1861, delegates to a General Convention, to meet on the 11th of that month, at such place as may be designated by the Committee hereinafter provided, to devise such measures and take such action as the safety and welfare of the people they represent may demand,—each County to appoint a number of Representatives to said Convention equal to double the number to which it will be entitled in the next House of Delegates; and the Senators and Delegates to be elected on the 23rd inst., by the counties referred to, to the next General Assembly of Virginia, and who concur in the views of this Convention, to be entitled to seats in the said Convention as members thereof.

9. Resolved, That inasmuch as it is a conceded political axiom, that government is founded on the consent of the governed and is instituted for their good, and it cannot be denied that the course pursued by the ruling power in the State, is utterly subversive and destructive of our interests, we believe we may rightfully and successfully appeal to the proper authorities of Virginia, to permit us peacefully and lawfully to separate from the residue of the State, and form ourselves into a government to give effect to the wishes, views and interests of our constituents.

10. Resolved, That the public authorities be assured that the people of the North West will exert their utmost power to preserve the peace, which they feel satisfied they can do, until an opportunity is afforded to see if our present difficulties cannot receive a peaceful solution; and we express the earnest hope that no troops of the Confederate States be introduced among us, as we believe it would be eminently calculated to produce civil war

11. Resolved, That in the language of Washington in his letter of the 17th of September, 1787, to the President of Congress; "In all our deliberations on this subject we have kept steadily in view that which appears to us the greatest interest of every true American, the consolidation of our Union, in which is involved our prosperity, felicity, safety, and perhaps our national existence." And therefore we will maintain and defend the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, and all officers acting there-under in the lawful discharge of their respective duties.[7]

12. Resolved, That John S. Carlile, James S.Wheat, Chester D. Hubbard, Francis H. Pierpont, Campbell Tarr, George R. Latham, Andrew Wilson, S. H. Woodward and James W. Paxton be a Central Committee to attend to all the matters connected with the objects of this Convention; and that they have power to assemble this Convention at any time they may think necessary.

13. Resolved, That the Central Committees be instructed to prepare an address to the people of Virginia in conformity with the foregoing resolutions and cause the same to be published and circulated as extensively as possible.

MR. POLSLEY suggested that instead of acting to-night on the report of the committee, it be laid upon the table and printed, in order that every member might have an opportunity to inspect it.

GEN. JACKSON objected; he wanted to go home. It was corn planting time.

MR. CARLILE asked Mr. P. to withdraw his motion. He was satisfied that nothing more than was now incorporated in the report could be obtained from the Convention at that time, and he was happy to state that since the adjournment this evening a resolution had been adopted by the committee which he regarded worth all the rest, and which would in a short time realize all their hopes of a New Virginia. That resolution provides for the appointment of a committee possessing all the powers this Convention can exercise, so far as they can be exercised by the committee.

The question on the adoption of the report of the Committee was then put, and the report was adopted with an almost unanimous "aye," only two dissenting voices being heard.

The announcement that the motion had carried, was received with tremendous cheering.

7. The reader will here observe that much of the report of the Committee on Federal Relations, was embodied in the series of resolutions submitted by James S. Wheat the preceding day.—V. A. L.

A CENTRAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

The following gentlemen were named as a Central Committee; viz: Hon. John S. Carlile, James S. Wheat. Chester D. Hubbard, Francis H. Pierpont, Campbell Tarr, George R. Latham, Andrew Wilson, S. H. Woodward and James W. Paxton.

GENERAL JACKSON rose to make a few remarks, but was called to the stand for a speech. He responded in a warm enthusiastic appeal to the Convention to now stand by and maintain what they had here declared to-night.

MR. LAZIER offered a resolution that the thanks of this Convention be tendered to the citizens of Wheeling for the kind and hospitable manner in which they have entertained the members of this Convention, and for the use of this Hall.

A speech from Carlile was called for and he responded and was followed by Mr. Willey, Pierpont and others. (We shall probably publish some of these speeches at an early day.—Editor of Daily Intelligencer,)[8]

REMARKS OF MR. CARLILE.

Having been called to the stand for a speech Mr. Carlile said: "Mr. President and Fellow-Citizens:

"Unity of action and singleness of purpose, I have been taught to believe, will accomplish all that it is in the power of man to accomplish, when wisely directed. I therefore concur most heartily in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Wood that this convention should not separate without first invoking the blessing of Heaven upon the labors inaugurated by it, and which will grow day by day more arduous, in order that we may have that wisdom which is so necessary to direct us through the momentous struggle in which we are about to engage. But if we meet it as brave men should; if we meet it with a determination to accomplish our purpose or die in the effort, success will as certainly crown our efforts as that the sun rises in the east and sets in the west. While it has been well remarked we have yielded each to the other for the purpose of harmonizing, and have thus been enabled to come to the conclusion at which we have arrived, we must remember that the same object is still in view, and the same effort is required to accomplish the purpose, although it may be postponed a few days longer than some of us desire. And it may, gentlemen, require at our hands more arduous efforts than it would if we had earlier entered upon it. Be that as it may, let us go home with a determination to succeed, and let us inspire the same determination into the breast of every citizen in each and every county here represented, and all other counties in which we may chance to be between this and the hour of trial.

I feel that upon us of Northwestern Virginia, and upon our efforts, depend to a very great extent, the restoration of harmony to the whole of our beloved land, and the preservation and perpetuity of those free institutions under which we have been born and reared. This is a government to love; and I cannot for a moment contemplate its destruction without feeling as I never deemed myself capable of feeling in contemplating any subject short of utter annihilation. When I left the Virginia Convention, on the evening on which the Ordinance of Secession passed, and walked solitary and alone to my lodgings, and felt that a home and country remained not to me, I felt as sad at heart as I could have felt had I just returned from the burial ground, having deposited in their last resting place my wife and children. Entertaining these sentiments, placing this estimate upon this government, I have resolved to do all that I can, in any and every position, to preserve it, and aid and co-operate with my fellow-citizens in its preservation. And I believe that preservation is to be secured by and through the agency of this portion of Virginia; by and through the erection of a new State; by and through, it may be, scenes of blood, accomplished by deeds of daring, but deeds that will result to effect its accomplishment. Let each and all determine for himself, and get his neighbors to determine with him. Be the means to be used what they may, come life or come death, it shall be accomplished. (Applause.) I have not voice to say more. I speak with much difficulty, I return to you my sincere thanks for the kindness received at the hands of each and every member of this Convention; and I assure you I justly appreciate the compliment shown me by calling me to the stand. The associations I have formed here, will always be remembered by me as among the most pleasing reminiscences of my life." (Applause.)

SPEECH OF HON. WAITMAN T. WILLEY.

Mr. Willey being loudly called for, came forward and said:

Mr. President and Fellow Citizens:

"Whilst I appreciate with sentiments of heartfelt gratitude the compliment you pay me in calling me out at this period, in the deliberations of our Convention, I am sure you would be disposed to excuse me if you were aware of the pain and suffering under which I am constantly laboring. Ever since yesterday morning at seven o'clock, when I was attacked, I assure you most sincerely that I have been in the most excruciating torture. Last night I slept scarcely one moment; and nothing but the heartfelt and deep, and absorbing interest that I have felt in the deliberations of this body that has kept me on this floor until this time. But I tell you, fellow-citizens, I have felt during all this struggle, from the time it began in the Virginia Convention until now, something of the spirit of the noble Roman youth, who, cap a pie, mounted, armed and equipped for the sacrifice, voluntarily rushed into the opening chasm of the forum, a voluntary victim to appease the gods of strife that were bringing desolation on his country. And I assure you to-night, if by laying down my humble life on the altar of my country I could bring back peace and harmony, and re-organize and restore the glorious Union which our fathers formed for us, I would willingly as I ever sat down to partake of the dainties of life, render that sacrifice this day, and this hour. (Applause.)

"And, fellow-citizens, much as some of you have misapprehended my soundness on this question, in this good city of yours, feeble as I am in health, with a constitution broken by the anxiety of the struggle of the last two-and-a-half months for the perpetuity of that very Union, for a want of fidelity to which I am suspected at this time, I am ready when the hour comes—I am ready when the Constitution has been exhausted—I am ready when it has been ascertained that the great legitimate agency of republican liberty is not sufficient to bring about the revolution that is to secure to us our just rights at the ballot box—when the law fails—when the Constitution fails in securing these rights, I am ready to stand among the foremost of those who have been here to-day to suspect me. It is not because I do not love the Union that I have taken the conservative position on this occasion; it is not because I do not love my fellow citizens of Wheeling; not because I am faithful and true to the common principles to which you are engaged; it is not because I love Cæsar less, but because I love Rome more. (Applause.)

"I have very little of this world's goods; but I have heritage enough—about the 27,000,000th part of the prestige and glory of

"I do not despair of the Republic, either. If we could have two weeks longer until the election, I verily believe, the disheartening anticipation of my friend from Harrison to the contrary notwithstanding, to use a vulgar, but expressive phrase, which may be well applied to this ordinance of secession, we would "knock it into a cocked hat." (Laughter.) Why, sir, I am credibly informed that these soldiers, of whom we have heard so much, and from whom we anticipate so much danger, and who are said to be quartered and posted all over the State for the purpose of public intimidation, have pledged their lives that their own blood shall crimson the streets, but they will cast their votes on the 23rd of this month, against the ordinance of secession. (Applause.) I am informed of one company consisting of 90 men of whom 80 are pledged to vote against the ordinance. You heard a voice to-day from old Berkeley. God bless her! (Applause.) And He will bless her, and all who think like her. God has blessed this country. God has blessed all the men who have loved this Union. His hand has been manifested in all our history. He stood by Washington, its great Founder and Defender. He stood by our forefathers in the establishment of this Government, and by working out our glorious destiny thus far in the space of less than three quarters of a century. God has made the American people the greatest on the earth; and I firmly believe in the hidden councils of His mysterious providence, there is a glorious destiny awaiting an united American people still. (Applause.) I take confidence in the cause as I look at the stripes and stars, and I remember the circumstances that gave rise to the beautiful motto that is as applicable to us to-day as when in the moment of inspiration it was penned:

"Triumph we must, for our cause it is just,
And this be our motto, in God is our trust."

(Great applause.) I was just trying to catch from my memory a couplet from a poem which I read the other day in regard to the banner of our country. I think I can recall it in the sentiment if not in the language:

"Forever float that standard sheet;
Where breathes the foe but falls before us,
With freedom's soil beneath our feet
And freedom's banner streaming o'er us."

Mr. W. pronounced these lines with great vehemence, and when he had ended there arose one universal, loud and thrilling cheer.

"Fellow-citizens, it almost cures one's back-ache to hear you applaud the sentiment. (Laughter and applause.) But then the time for speaking is done. Let me exhort you never to forget the counsels my much esteemed friend, General Jackson of Wood, delivered to us to-night. Never forget to act upon them. I think I see yet sparkling in the old hero's eye something of the ardor which he thought it not prudent to express, yet that even he was ready at his country's call to lead his sons and the sons of his countrymen whenever it may be necessary—whenever our liberties cannot be secured to us otherwise—to lead us into the battle field; —not to be carried to the polls to whisper his vote against this Ordinance of Secession, but to fall upon the field of battle, to wrap himself in his country's flag and pledge his gratitude to God that he was deemed worthy at last to end an honored life by falling in defense of his country. (Applause.) We have worthy sires, my young friends. Let us be sons worthy of those sires. Those sires were law-abiding, constitution-making, constitution-keeping men. They well knew that republican liberty, that free institutions could only be established upon the law, and preserved by keeping the law; and that is the secret of the conservative position we have taken in this convention. I believe God's blessing will rest upon our action, and if at last, in the language of the Declaration of Independence, 'we have remonstrated again and again, we have petitioned and adjured,' and our prayers are all scoffed at and scouted—why, I think I see around me here to-night the men who know their duty—

"'Who know their rights,
And knowing dare maintain.'

"Fellow-citizens, the first thing we have got to fight is the Ordinance of Secession. Let us kill it on the 23d of this month. (Applause.) Let us bury it deep beneath the hills of Northwestern Virginia. Let us pile up our glorious hills on it; bury it deep so that it will never make its appearance among us again. (Applause.) Let us go back home and vote, even if we are beaten upon the final result, for the benefit of the moral influence of that vote. If we give something like a decided preponderating vote of a majority in the Northwest, that alone secures our rights. (Applause.) That alone, at least, secures an independent State if we desire it.

"Fellow-citizens, I am trespassing upon your patience."(Go on! go on!) "I am going up to Marion county to assist my friend Hall, in canvassing that county.—Monongalia is a fixed fact—like the handle of a jug, all on one side. (Laughter.)—Not all on one side either; but on all sides, all over, and under, and in, and out, and through and everywhere. (Applause and laughter.) But I want to help Hall a little. Want to take Frank Pierpont along over there, too. They have threatened to hang him out there, and I am sure if he gets strung up first he will break the rope and I will escape. (Laughter.)

"We have to go to work now. We must appeal to the people; appeal to their patriotism; and let us defeat the ordinance of secession in Northwestern Virginia at least. My advices from the valley are, that where, some weeks since, a Union man dare not hold up his head, he has come out now, and is shaking his fist at his adversary. They are getting bold and numerous; and I should not be surprised if the upper and lower valley, even Jefferson county, right under the shadow of—or rather casting its shadow upon—Harper's Ferry, and under the influence and intimidation of the soldiery there, and old Loudon,with Janney at its head, should all give majorities against this ordinance. They say even in Alexandria the old Union spirit is reviving. Let us hope then—'hope on, hope ever.' Let us work in season and out of season.

"And now, fellow-citizens, good-bye till we meet again, with all our hopes realized, as I trust, under fairer auspices. May we meet each other with gratulation and congratulation, that our old and beloved Commonwealth, the mother of States and statesmen, whose fame is as wide as the earth—every inch of whose soil I love, her mountains and valleys, from the seaboard to the Ohio border—shall be restored to peace and prosperity; until all this land in all her waters, shall reflect back peacefully the stars on the floating banner of our country, re-established as the ensign of universal liberty." (Great applause.)

On motion, a unanimous vote of thanks was tendered to the President and other officers for their official service during the session.

On motion, the delegations from the various counties were requested to appoint the five provided for in one of the resolutions, and that they report to the Secretary before the adjournment of the Convention.

Prayer was then offered and the Star Spangled Banner sung, and with about three times three hearty cheers for the Union, the Convention adjourned sine die, in a perfect blaze of enthusiasm.

APPENDIX.

TO THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE FIRST CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

By reference to the twelfth and thirteenth resolutions of the report of the Committee on Federal Relations as finally adopted, it will be seen that a Central Committee was appointed "to attend to all matters connected with the Convention." Its members were John S. Carlile, James S. Wheat, Chester D. Hubbard, Francis H. Pierpont, Campbell Tarr, George R. Latham, Andrew Wilson, S. H. Woodward, and James W. Paxton. This Committee was required to prepare an "Address to the People of Virginia," and cause the same to be published and circulated as extensively as possible, within six days after the adjournment of the Convention; this "Address" was prepared and given to the press for publication. It was as follows:

AN ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

In obedience to the 13th resolution of the Convention, which met in this city, on the 13th inst., we earnestly conjure you to enter actively and immediately upon the great work of preparing your neighbors and friends, as well as yourselves, for the firm, stern and decided stand necessary to be taken and adhered to at all hazards, and maintained at any and every cost, if we would preserve to ourselves and transmit to our posterity, that unity of government which constitutes us one people, which we justly regard as the palladium of our liberties and the main pillar in the edifice of our independence. In this way, and this way alone, we can save ourselves from the innumerable evils consequent upon secession and all the horrors of civil war.

Why should the people of North Western Virginia allow themselves to be dragged into the rebellion inaugurated by ambitious and heartless men, who have banded themselves together to destroy a government formed for you by your patriot fathers, and which has secured to you all the liberties consistent with the nature of man, and has, for near three-fourths of a century, sheltered you in sunshine and in storm, made you the admiration of the civilized world, and conferred upon you a title more honored, respected and revered, than that of King or Potentate—the title of an American citizen? Will you passively surrender it, and submit to be used by the conspirators engaged in this effort to enslave you, as their instruments by which your enslavement is to be effected?

Freemen who would remain free, must prove themselves worthy to be free and must themselves first strike the blow.

What is secession? A deed not to be accomplished in the broad glare of noon-day sun, but a deed of darkness, which had to be performed in secret conclave, by the reckless spirits who accomplished it, in contempt of the people, their masters under our form of government, but whom the leaders in this work of destruction determined to enslave.

What is secession? Bankruptcy, ruin, civil war, ending in a military despotism. Prior to the adoption of the Ordinance of Secession in Virginia, and to the passage by the Legislature of the bill calling a Convention, all was peace, and the great business interests of our State were uninterrupted. From the hour that it was proclaimed the Ordinance of Secession had been passed, business of every description has been paralyzed, State, corporation and individual credit is prostrate, and bankruptcy and ruin stare us in the face, and war, civil war, with all its attendant horrors, is upon us. Secession, all now see, is war. It is preceded by war, accompanied and sustained by war, ushered into being by war.

Who are to stand the brunt of this contest? Will it be those who have clamored loudest for secession, and who have done the most to bring on the present crisis? These are the first to flee from the very approach of danger. They hurry in every train and by every coach from the anticipated scenes of disturbance. Will the disunion majority of the Richmond Convention come into the ranks and shoulder the musket in the strife which they have inaugurated? They will keep at a respectful distance from danger. —They will fill the lucrative offices and secure the rich appointments which appertain to the new order of things. They will luxuriate on two or three or four hundred dollars per month, with horses, and servants, and rations to match, while the Union-loving people will be called upon, for the honor of Virginia and two shillings per day, to do the fighting and undergo the hardships of war. We are all Virginians, say they, the State must be sustained, and right or wrong, we must all fight for Virginia, etc.

What is it to fight for Virginia. What is it to sustain the State? Is it to urge her upon a course which leads to visible and gaping destruction? Is this the way and the only way in which we can testify our devotion to the Commonwealth? If those feelings which actuated our Revolutionary Fathers be not all dead in us, we shall exhibit our love for Virginia, by repudiating this tyrannical rule which the Richmond Convention has endeavored to impose, and suffer not ourselves to be sold like sheep from the shambles. The people yet hold their destinies in their own hands —it is for them to accept or reject a tyranny, worse many times, than that from which the war of '76 delivered us—not the tyranny of one man, but of many.

But, people of North Western Virginia, why should we thus permit ourselves to be tyrannized over, and made slaves of, by the haughty arrogance and wicked machinations of would-be Eastern Despots? Are we submissionists, craven cowards, who will yield to daring ambition, the rich legacy of Freedom, which we have inherited from our fathers, or are we men who know our rights, and knowing, dare maintain them? If we are, we will resist the usurpers and drive from our midst the rebellion sought to be forced upon us. We will, in the strength of our cause, resolutely and determinedly stand by our rights and our liberties secured to us by the struggles of our Revolutionary Fathers, and the authors of the Constitution under which we have grown and prospered beyond all precedent in the world's history. We will maintain, protect and defend that Constitution and the Union with all our strength, and with all our powers, ever remembering that "Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God." We utterly repudiate the war sought to be enforced upon us without and against the consent and earnest protestations of the people who have not produced it, but who have, we regret to say, thus far offered no resistance, but have submitted to the filling up of armies and the quartering of troops in their midst; taking for the purpose, our young men who had, in a time of profound peace, and with no expectation of ever being called upon to aid in a rebellion, attached themselves to the volunteer corps of our State. The people, stunned by the magnitude of the crime, have, for a time, offered no resistance, but as returning reason enables them to perceive distinctly the objects and purposes of the vile perpetrators of this deed, their hearts swell within them, and already the cry has gone up from our mountains and our valleys, "Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God."

Let us urge you then, that our resistance may be effectual, to act in the spirit of the Resolutions here appended, adopted by the Convention, whose Committee we are. Let all our ends be directed to the creation of an organized resistance to the despotism of the tyrants, who have been in session in Richmond, and who are soon to re-assemble, that we may maintain our position in the Union under the flag of our common country, which has for so many years waved gracefully and protectingly over us, and which, when we behold upon its ample folds the stripes and the stars of Freedom, causes our bosoms to glow with patriotic heat, and our hearts to swell with honest love of country. That this flag, the symbol of our might, challenges our admiration, and justly claims our every effort against those who have dared to desecrate and dishonor it, we all admit. Let us then see that we take the proper measures to make effectual those efforts. The Convention to assemble on the 11th proximo, is looked to to organize our action. Its importance, its necessity, will at once strike your minds; take immediate steps therefore to secure for your representatives in Convention, your most determined, resolute, temperate and wisest men. We have already detained you too long, the time for action, prompt, firm and decided, has come. In the hope that our section will be that of a united people, we take leave of you, confidently calculating that you will give your body, soul, strength, mind, and all the energies of your nature to the work of saving your country from becoming the theatre of a bloody war, brought upon you without your consent and against your will. Let us show Mr. Ex-Secretary Cobb, now President of the Montgomery Congress, that we are not willing to recognize the transfer of us made by the Richmond Convention, nor do we intend to allow our borders, as he says they will be, to be made the theatre of this war.

Fellow-citizens, we ask you to read and ponder well the passages from Mr. Cobb's Speech. We recite:

"The people of the Gulf States need have no apprehension; they might go on with their planting and their other business as usual, the war would not come to their section, its theatre would be along the borders of the Ohio River and in Virginia."

The Convention between Virginia and the Confederate States, by which the control of all military operations is placed in the hands of President Davis, insures this result.

Fellow-Citizens—"These are the times when we must not stop to count sacrifices and costs, where honor, and character, and self-preservation are put in issue." The patriot and sage, Daniel Webster, in a speech delivered at Washington, in 1851, at the laying of the corner stone of the addition to the Capitol, spoke as follows:

"Ye men of the Blue Ridge, many thousands of whom are nearer to this capitol than the seat of Government of your own State, what do you think of breaking up this great association into fragments of States and of people? I know that some of you; and I believe that you all, would be almost as much shocked at the announcement of such a catastrohpe, as if you were informed that the Blue Ridge itself would soon totter from its base—and ye men of Western Virginia, who occupy the slope from the Alleghenies to Ohio and Kentucky, what benefit do you propose to yourselves by disunion? If you secede, what do you 'secede' from, and what do you 'accede' to? Do you look for the current of the Ohio to change and to bring you and your commerce to the tide waters af Eastern rivers?—What man in his senses can suppose that you would remain part and parcel of Virginia a month after Virginia had ceased to be a part and parcel of the United States?"

Fellow-Citizens of Northwestern Virginia, the issue is with you. Your destiny is in your own hands. If you are worthy descendants of worthy sires you will rally to this defence of your liberties, and the Constitution which has protected and blessed you will still extend over you its protecting ægis. If you hesitate or falter all is lost, and you and your children to the latest posterity are destined to perpetual slavery.

THE SECOND CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The first Convention of the people of Northwestern Virginia —that of May—adjourned May 15, 1861, having provided for the meeting of a second Convention, in the event that the Ordinance of Secession should be ratified by the people on the 23d day of May ensuing. This was done by the provisions contained in the eighth resolution of the series reported by the Committee on Federal Relations and adopted by the Convention. It was as follows:

Resolved, That in the event of the Ordinance of Secession being ratified by a vote, we recommend to the people of the Counties here represented, and all others disposed to co-operate with us, to appoint on the 4th day of June, 1861, delegates to a General Convention, to meet on the 11th of that month, at such place as may be designated by the Committee hereinafter provided, to devise such measures and take such action as the safety and welfare of the people they represent may demand, each county to appoint a number of Representatives to said Convention equal to double the number to which it will be entitled in the next House of Delegates; and the Senators and Delegates to be elected on the 23d inst., by the counties referred to, to the next General Assembly of Virginia, and who concur in the views of this Convention, to be entitled to seats in the Convention as members thereof.

Herein it was recommended to the people of the counties there represented and that of all others who desired to co-operate in the movement inaugurated to appoint on the 4th day of the ensuing June, delegates equal to twice the number of members of the House of Delegates, to a General Convention to meet on the 11th of June. Further, the Senators and Delegates to the General Assembly elected at the election on the 23d of May, and who concurred in the views of the said first Convention, were entitled to seats in the second Convention. The Ordinance of Secession was ratified; the delegates elected on the 4th of June, and they together with the Senators and members of the House of Delegates, elected May 23d, in all counties selecting delegates to the Convention, June 4th, assembled at Wheeling, June 11th, ensuing.

SECOND CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE OF NORTH-WESTERN VIRGINIA.

THE FIRST DAY.

TUESDAY, JUNE 11, 1861.

The Convention assembled yesterday at two P. M., in Washington Hall.

On nomination of Francis H. Pierpont, Dennis B. Dorsey, Esq., of Monongalia County, was selected as temporary Chairman. Gibson Lamb Cranmer, of Wheeling was, on nomination of Campbell Tarr, of Brooke, chosen temporary Secretary.

The President returned his thanks briefly for the distinction conferred. He said that taking the chair as temporary Chairman it would be superfluous in him to allude to the vital subjects that would come before the Convention. They had calmly and thoroughly considered them at home and had now come here to act on those reflections. He realized that this was to be the most important Convention that ever assembled in the State of Virginia. He would not impose a speech on the Convention, but would merely say that he would endeavor to discharge the duties imposed on him to the best of his ability.

On motion of Mr. Pierpont, Rev. Gordon Battelle, who was present, was requested to open the sitting of the Convention with prayer.

After the prayer, ARTHUR I. BOREMAN, of Wood, offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to ascertain and report all who are entitled to seats in this Convention as members thereof.

MR. CARLILE offered the following:

Resolved, That a committee of five members of this body be appointed to report rules for the Government of the Convention.

The resolution was adopted.

The following, by MR. PIERPONT, of Marion, was then adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to report on the permanent organization of the Convention.

CAMPBELL TARR submitted the annexed, which was accepted:

Resolved, That this Convention will meet while in session, at 10 A. M.

THE CHAIR then announced the committees, appointed under the resolutions offered; after which, on motion, the Convention adjourned.

The following are the Committees:

COMMITTE ON ORGANIZATION:—Francis H. Pierpont, W. H. Copeland, E. H. Caldwell, John S. Burdett, Chapman J. Stuart.

COMMITTEE OF RULES:—Jno. S. Carlile, Daniel Polsley, Harrison Hagans, Geo. McC. Porter, Andrew Flesher.

COMMITTEE ON CREDENTIALS:—Arthur I. Boreman, Daniel Lamb, Lewis Wetzel, John J. Brown, James Evans.

THE SECOND DAY,

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 1861.

The Convention assembled pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by Rev. Wesley Smith, of this city.

The Secretary read the journals of the previous day, which were, on motion, adopted.

MR. BOREMAN, of Wood county, offered the report of the Committee on Credentials, and on his motion it was received and concurred in: The subjoined is a list of the delegates present:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CREDENTIALS.

The committee report that the following gentlemen are entitled to seats in this body from the counties designated, in the capacities herein set forth, whether as members of the General Assembly elected on the 23d of May, 1861, or as delegates appointed to this Convention, June 4th only:

LIST OF DELEGATES BY COUNTIES.

Alexandria County—Henry S. Martin and James T. Close, delegates.

Barbour County—Nathan H Taft and D. M. Myers, members of the House of Delegates, and John H. Shuttleworth and Spencer Dayton, delegates.

Brooke County—Joseph Gist, Senator, H. W. Crothers, member House of Delegates, and John D. Nicholls and Campbell Tarr, delegates.

Cabell County—Albert Laidley,[1] member House of Delegates.

Doddridge and Tyler—Chapman J Stuart, Senator, William J. Boreman, member House of Delegates, and Daniel D. Johnson and James A. Foley, delegates.

Fairfax County—John Hawxhurst and Eben E. Mason, delegates.

Gilmer County—Henry W. Withers, delegate.

1. Albert Laidley did not remain at Wheeling. He went to Richmond, where he occupied a seat in the General Assembly, session beginning December 2, 1861, as the delegate from Cabell County. On the eighth day of the session his name was dropped from the roll of members of the Convention, he having declined to take the prescribed oath.—V. A. L.

Hampshire County—James R. Carskadon, Senator, and Owen D. Downey. George W. Broski, James H. Trout and James J. Barracks, delegates.
Hancock County—George McC. Porter, member House of Delegates, and John H. Atkinson and William L. Crawford, delegates.
Hardy County—John Michael, delegate.
Harrison County—John J. Davis and John C. Vance, members House of Delegates, and John S Carlile, Solomon Fleming, Lot Bowen,[1] Benjamin F. Shuttleworth, and Charles S. Lewis, delegates.
Jackson County—Daniel Frost, member House of Delegates, and James F. Scott and Andrew Flesher, delegates.
Jefferson County—George Koontz, delegate.
Kanawha County—Lewis Ruffner, member House of Delegates, and Greenbury Slack, delegate.
Lewis County—Blackwell Jackson, Senator, and Perry M. Hale and J. A. J. Lightburn, delegates.
Marion County—Richard Fast and Fountain Smith, members House of Delegates, and Francis H. Pierpont,[2] Ephraim B. Hall, John S. Barns, A. F. Ritchie, and James O. Watson, delegates.
Marshall County—Remembrance Swan, member House of Delegates, and E. H. Caldwell and Robert Morris, delegates.
Mason County—Lewis Wetzel, member House of Delegates, and Charles B. Waggener, James Smith, and Daniel Polsley, delegates.
Monongalia County—Leroy Kramer and Joseph Snyder, members House of Delegates, and Ralph L. Berkshire, William Price, James Evans and Dennis B. Dorsey, delegates.
Ohio County—Thomas H. Logan and Andrew Wilson, members of House of Delegates, and Daniel Lamb, James W. Paxton, George Harrison and Chester D. Hubbard, delegates.
Pleasants and Ritchie—James W. Williamson,[3] member House of Delegates, and C. W. Smith and William Douglas, delegates.
Preston County—Charles Hooton and William B. Zinn, members House of Delegates, and William B. Crane, John Howard, Harrison Hagans and John J. Brown, delegates.
Putnam County—George C. Bowyer, member House of Delegates, and Dudley S. Montague,[4] delegate.
Randolph and Tucker—Solomon Parsons, member House of Delegates, and Samuel Crane, delegate.
Roane County—T. A. Roberts, delegate.
Taylor Coupnty—Thomas Cather, Senator, Lemuel E. Davidson, member House of Delegates, and John S. Burdett and Samuel Todd, delegates.
Upshur County—Daniel D. T. Farnsworth, member House of Delegates, and John L. Smith and John Love, delegates.
Wayne County—William Ratcliff, member House of Delegates, and William W. Brumfield and William Copley, delegates.
Webster County—Henry C. Moore[5]
Wetzel County—James G. West, member House of Delegates, and Reuben Martin and James P. Ferrell, delegates.
Wirt County—James A. Williamson, member House of Delegates, and Henry Newman and E. T. Graham, delegates.
Wood County—John W. Moss, member House of Delegates, and Arthur I. Boreman and Peter G. Van Winkle, delegates.

1. Lot Bowen resigned August 13, 1861, because of a connection with the Army, and was succeeded the following day by Charles S. Lewis.
2. Francis H. Pierpont, having been elected Governor, resigned August 19, 1861, and was succeeded by Ephraim B. Hall.
3. The name of James W. Williamson was, on the eighth day of the session, dropped from the roll of members of the Convention, he not having made his appearance since the beginning of the session.
4. Another delegate from Putnam County qualified and took his seat, August 12, 1861, but his name has not been ascertained.—V. A. L.
5. June 20th—ninth day of the session—Daniel Lamb, Chairman of the Committee on Credentials, reported that the credentials of Henry C. Moore had been examined, and he was found to be the duly accredited Delegate from the Election district comprising Webster and parts of Nicholas and Braxton counties.—V. A. L.

NOTE ON MEMBERSHIP OF SECOND CONVENTION.

(See pages 79, 80.)

James T. Close, as a State Senator from the District composed of the counties of Fairfax and Alexandria; G. F. Watson, a Senator from the District composed of the counties of Accomac and Northampton on the Eastern shore; and John R. McCutchen, a Senator from the District composed of the counties of Nicholas, Fayette, Pocahontas, Raleigh, Braxton, Greenbrier and Clay, were entitled to seats in the Second Convention, but did not occupy them. James Burley, a resident of Marshall county, was a Senator from the District composed of the counties of Wetzel, Marshall, Marion and Tyler; was an active and influential member of the Convention. His name should have appeared in the list of members from Marshall county, in that body. In the list of members from Jackson county, the name of Andrew Flesher appears as a delegate, whereas it should be that of Senator, he representing the District composed of the counties of Mason, Jackson, Cabell, Wayne, and a part of Roane. The name of James Smith appears on page eighty, as a delegate to the Convention from Mason county. This is an error; he was a delegate from Jackson county, and should be so accredited.—V. A. L.

MR. PIERPONT, from the Committee on Permanent Organization, offered the report of that Committee, recommending the selection of Arthur I. Boreman, of Wood, for President of the Convention; for Secretary, Gibson L. Cranmer, of Wheeling, with power to appoint his Assistants; for Sergeant-at-Arms, Thomas Hornbrook, of Wheeling, with power to appoint a door-keeper or door-keepers and pages.

The Committee also recommend that before the President takes his seat he take the following oath:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, as the supreme law of the land, anything in the Ordinances of the Convention which assembled in Richmond, on the 13th of February last, to the contrary notwithstanding, so help me God."

And that the President, after he shall have taken the oath, and before any other business is transacted, shall administer the said oath to each member who shall be, or has been, reported to this Convention as members thereof by the Committee on Credentials, only varying the form of the oath to suit the case.

On motion of Mr. Pierpont the report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Carlile a committee of two was appointed to inform Mr. Boreman of his election and conduct him to the chair, and Andrew Wilson, Esq., of Wheeling, a Justice of the Peace, was requested to administer to him the oath.

MR. CARLILE and MR. TARR were appointed the committee, who conducted Mr. Boreman to the chair.

The President then returned his acknowledgments to the Convention in a brief and pertinent speech. In the course of his remarks he said: "This Convention was assembled under circumstances which knew no parallel in the past history of the country since the adoption of our Constitution. Then we were but a few in the land—in these colonies of the mother country. Our fathers met with opposition, but, few as they were, they determined to throw off the shackles which bound them. They did so successfully, and after a struggle of seven years, succeeded in obtaining from the world a recognition of their independence. They adopted a form of government under which we have gone on from that day to this, prospering and growing in greatness beyond anything that ever occurred in the history of any other nation either ancient or modern. But now in the middle of the nineteenth century we are awakened by the astounding announcement in one section of our country that we have no government worthy of our support, and the announcement is at once accompanied by a rebellion to throw off this government under which we have been so long happy and prosperous, and the inauguration of a system such as would never have been countenanced by our fathers. We of Western Virginia are asked to concur in this action. We are placed in a peculiar position. The Convention of Virginia at Richmond, so far as they have the power, have by the passage of an Ordinance of Secession withdrawn us from the Union of our fathers. They submitted their action to a vote of the people as they proclaimed it, but in a way that made that vote a mockery. The vote in form has ratified the Ordinance of Secession—thus in the estimation of that Convention withdrawing us from the United States of America. Under these circumstances Western Virginia is placed in a peculiar position.—The States north of us and some of the Slave States have made no effort by an official body to withdraw from the Union. States south of us have gone according to their opinions out of the Union. Elsewhere there are no efforts being made in any of them by any regularly constituted bodies to retian their places in the Union, while here in Western Virginia we have determined that by the help of Him who rules on high we will resist the action of that Richmond Convention, which has practiced upon us a monstrous usurpation of power, violated the Constitution of the country and violated every rule of right. We have determined I say, to resist it, and under this determination we are found here to-day to take definite action. If you gentlemen, will go with me, we will take definite, determined and unqualified action as to the course we will pursue. We will take such action as will result in Western Virginia, if not the whole of Virginia, remaining in the Union of our fathers. I am satisfied that the members of this Convention concur with me almost unanimously.

"Then in this Convention we have no ordinary political gathering. We have no ordinary task before us. We come here to carry out and execute, and, it may be, to institute, a government for ourselves. We are determined to live under a State Government in the United States of America and under the Constitution of the United States. It requires stout hearts to execute this purpose; it requires men of courage—of unfaltering determination; and I believe, in the gentlemen who compose this Convention, we have the stout hearts and the men who are determined in this purpose. The definite line of action to be pursued, it is not for me to indicate. Here are learned gentlemen, men of experience, who, no doubt, after deliberation will devise the course proper for us to pursue."

The oath was then administered to him, after which it was on motion,

"Resolved, That certain gentlemen, who presented themselves as delegates to this Convention, and who are not accepted as such by the report of the Committee on Credentials, shall be admitted to seats on this floor, not, however, to participate in the proceedings of this body."

The members then came forward by delegations to the stand, and took the oath of fidelity, which was administered to them by the President.

MR. CARLILE then submitted the report of the Committee on Rules, embracing the rules and regulations adopted by the Constitutional Convention held at Richmond in 1850.

On his motion it was adopted with an additional resolution, that two hundred copies be printed for the use of the Convention.

MR. DORSEY, of Monongalia, offered a series of resolutions for the purpose of eliciting, as he said, the opinions of the Convention in relation to the course to be pursued. He read them as follows:

"Resolved, That it shall be in part the business of this Convention, to make the requisite preparatory arrangements for the separation from Virginia and the formation into a new State, of such counties as are represented in this body, by delegates or otherwise, and are desirous of entering into the new State organization.

"2. That the said preliminary arrangements, when made by the Convention, shall, in compliance with the Constitution of the United States, be submitted for approval to the Legislature now convened in this city, as being the only loyal and legitimate Legislature of the State of Virginia; and afterwards, if approved by it, shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States.

"3. That this mode of meeting the present exigencies of Western Virginia, is preferable to that of reconstructing the Government of Virginia; inasmuch as it is equally legal and yet does not impose upon us the calamity of an overburdening State debt—no part of which we owe in equity—or the scarcely less disastrous calamity of repudiating that debt, and thus ruining the financial credit of the State."

MR. CARLILE asked Mr. Dorsey to withdraw his resolutions for the present. All knew his own sentiments, but many members were not yet prepared to entertain these propositions. They could, however, be entertained in a short time. He thought there were good reasons why the views entertained by them both should not at this time be pressed.

MR. DORSEY withdrew the resolutions.—All he had desired was to elicit the opinions of the Convention that they might the better survey the field before them and prepare for action.

MR. CARLILE then submitted the following resolutions. He was sure the sentiments they expressed would receive the unanimous approbation of this body. He read them as follows:

RESOLUTIONS OFFERED BY MR. CARLILE.

"Resolved, that the thanks of the loyal people of Virginia are due, and are hereby tendered to the Federal authorities for the prompt manner in which they have responded to our call for protection.

"2. That we tender our thanks to Major General McClellan for rescuing from the destruction and spoilation inaugurated by the rebel forces in our midst, the people of North-western Virginia included within his military division.

"3. That the gallant and soldierly bearing of the troops from Ohio, and Indiana, who with our own gallant 1st regiment, commanded by Western Virginia's loyal son, Col. Kelley, have scattered the rebel forces in our midst, has won our admiration, and we gladly hail them as our deliverers from the ruin and slavery provided for us by the conspirators who have temporary possession of the power of the State.

"4. That we deeply sympathize with our fellow-citizen, Col. Kelley, in his sufferings from the wound received in our service, and earnestly pray that he may be speedily restored to perfect health, and again resume his command at the head of our own 1st regiment.

"5. That we utterly repudiate the heresy sought to be inculcated by secessionists, that it is an invasion of Virginia's soil for American troops to march to the defense and protection of Virginia's citizens, but on the contrary, we declare Virginia soil to be American soil, and free to the march of American soldiery and sojourn of American citizens, from all and every portion of American territory; and it is only by such recognition that the Federal authorities could discharge a plain Constitutional duty imposed upon them by the clause guaranteeing to each State in the Union a Republican form of government."

DR. LOGAN, of Wheeling, moved that the Secretary of the Convention be instructed to transmit copies of the foregoing resolutions to the President of the United States, to General McClellan, Brigadier-General Morris, and the Colonels commanding in the division of the United States Army in Northwestern Virginia.

It is moved to so amend that 500 copies be printed, to be transmitted as proposed, and the residue to be distributed among the soldiers.

DR. LOGAN objected to the amendment. He thought it would be an unnecessary expense. It became them as representatives of Western Virginia to practice rigid economy. He subsequently, however, accepted the amendment, and the motion as amended was adopted.

MR. CARLILE submitted a resolution as follows:

Resolved, That a Committee of thirteen members be appointed to pre- and report business for the Convention.

CHESTER D. HUBBARD, of Wheeling, moved to amend by adding all resolutions touching our State and Federal Relations, be referred to said Committee.

MR. CARLILE accepted the amendment and the motion, as amended, was then adopted.

The Convention then, on motion, took a recess until 2 o'clock,

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at the appointed hour.

The Chair announced the Committee on Business as follows:

COMMITTEE ON BUSINESS:—John S. Carlile, of Harrison, Daniel Lamb, of Ohio; Francis H. Pierpont, of Marion; Harrison Hagans, of Preston; P. G. Van Winkle, of Wood; Ralph L. Berkshire, of Monongalia; Daniel Polsley, of Mason; William J. Boreman, of Tyler; E. H. Caldwell, of Marshall; Daniel Frost, of Jackson; George McC. Porter, of Hancock; Daniel D. T. Farnsworth, of Upshur; William H. Copley, of Wayne.

THE CHAIR stated that the next business in order would be the reception of resolutions and other matters for the Committee on Business.

MR. DORSEY then called up the resolutions he had offered in the morning's session. They were read and referred to the Committee.

MR. PIERPONT submitted a resolution, which was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate with the clergymen of this city with a view to provide for opening the sessions of the Convention each day with prayer.

On motion of MR. CARLILE, it was ordered that when the Convention assemble next it be in the United States Court Room in the Custom House.

The Convention then on motion, adjourned to afford the Committee time to prepare business for its action.

THE THIRD DAY,

THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1861.

The Convention met at the appointed hour, in the United States Court-room, at the Custom House.

The sitting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Wesley Smith of this city.

The minutes of the previous day were read, and, after some trifling amendments, were approved.

On motion of Mr. Burdett, of Taylor, an opportunity was offered those delegates who had arrived since yesterday to take the oath. Several came forward, and the oath was administered to them by the President.

On motion of Mr. Burdett, the Committee on business was increased from 13 to 17 members, by the addition of the following gentlemen: James T. Close, of Alexandria county; John Hawxhurst, of Fauquier; James R. Carskadon, of Hampshire, and Mr. Crane, of Randolph.

MR. CARLILE: "The committee whose duty it is to report business for this Convention, after several hours of labor, have instructed me to report a declaration I hold in my hand. We would gladly have had more time for subjects so important, but anxious to show a dispositon to discharge the duties imposed upon them, they have agreed upon this declaration, and will as rapidly as practicable, report further business for the action of the Convention, and hope all matter acted upon will be returned to them for engrossment."

MR. CARLILE read the fofllowing:

A DECLARATION OF THE PEOPLE OF VIRGINIA REPRESENTED IN CONVENTION AT THE CITY OF WHEELING, THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1861.

The true purpose of all government is to promote the welfare and provide for the protection and security of the governed, and when any form or organization of government proves inadequate for, or subversive of this purpose, it is the right, it is the duty of the latter to alter or abolish it. The Bill of Rights of Virginia, framed in 1776, reaffirmed in 1830, and again in 1851, expressly reserves this right to a majority of her people, and the existing constitution does not confer upon the General Assembly the power to call a Convention to alter its provisions, or to change the relations of the Commonwealth, without the previously expressed consent of such majority.—The act of the General Assembly, calling the Convention which assembled at Richmond in February last, was therefore a usurpation; and the Convention thus called has not only abused the powers nominally entrusted to it, but with the connivance and active aid of the executive, has usurped and exercised other powers, to the manifest injury of the people, which, if permitted, will inevitably subject them to a military despotism.

The Convention, by its pretended ordinances, has required the people of Virginia to separate from and wage war against the government of the United States, and against the citizens of neighboring States, with whom they have heretofore maintained friendly, social and business relations:

It has attempted to subvert the Union founded by Washington and his co-patriots in the purer days of the republic, which has conferred unexampled prosperity upon every class of citizens, and upon every section of the country:

It has attempted to transfer the allegiance of the people to an illegal confederacy of rebellious States, and required their submission to its pretended edicts and decrees:

It has attempted to place the whole military force and military operations of the Commonwealth under the control and direction of such confederacy, for offensive as well as defensive purposes.

It has, in conjunction with the State Executive, instituted, wherever their usurped power extends, a reign of terror intended to suppress the free expression of the will of the people, making elections a mockery and a fraud:

The same combination, even before the passage of the pretended ordinance of secession, instituted war by the seizure and appropriation of the property of the Federal Government, and by organizing and mobilizing armies, with the avowed purpose of capturing or destroying the Capital of the Union:

They have attempted to bring the allegiance of the people of the United States into direct conflict with their subordinate allegiance to the State, thereby making obedience to their pretended Ordinances treason against the former.

We, therefore, the delegates here assembled in Convention to devise such measures and take such action as the safety and welfare of the loyal citizens of Virginia may demand, having maturely considered the premises, and viewing with great concern, the deplorable condition to which this once happy Commonwealth must be reduced, unless some, regular adequate remedy is speedily adopted, and appealing to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe for the rectitude of our intentions, do hereby, in the name and on the behalf of the good people of Virginia, solemnly declare, that the preservation of their dearest rights and liberties and their security in person and property, imperatively demand the reorganization of the government of the Commonwealth, and that all acts of said Convention and Executive, tending to separate this Commonwealth from the United States, or to levy and carry on war against them, are without authority and void; and the offices of all who adhere to the said Convention and Executive, whether legislative, executive or judicial, are vacated.

J. W. PAXTON, of Ohio, submitted the following which was referred:

Resolved, That the people of Northwestern Virginia have long and patiently borne the position of political inferiority forced upon them by unequal representation in the State Legislature, and by unjust, oppressive, and unequal taxation, but that the so-called ordinance of secession, passed by the Convention which met in Richmond on the 13th of February last, is the crowning act of infamy which has aroused them to a determination to resist all injustice and oppression, and to assert and forever maintain their rights and liberties in the Union and under the Constitution of the United States.

MR. PAXTON said: "In considering matters that come before us for action here it is very difficult but very important that we all realize the actual existence of war—civil war. We must not forget, sir, that we are now engaged in a struggle for the nation's very existence; that our differences are not now being settled as hertofore at the ballot box, peacefully and quietly, but by the bayonet and at the cannon's mouth. You, sir, and I, and every American citizen this day are parties to this struggle on one side or on the other—either as loyalists or rebels. And he who sympatizes with, who directly or indirectly, aids or encourages either side, is just as much a party to this war as if on the tented field itself. I assert, and in doing so appeal to all past observation and experience for my justification, and there is not, and there can be, no real neutrality; that assumed neutrality either by a State or by an individual is practical secession. It is well to remember this in coming to the consideration of our duties in this great emrgency.

What is our duty? For what are we convened? What is expected of us by that patriotic and Union-loving constituency whom we represent, and who well know are resolved never to submit to the military despotism inaugurated at Richmond? Sir, they expect of us action. They not only expect but they demand prompt, decisive and organized resistance to traitors and to treason. Shall we disappoint them? Shall we disappoint not them alone but the just expectations of the whole country? No, sir. We are fully committed to the war of patriotism against treason; and I am very sure from the indications here that there will be neither faltering nor hesitancy now.

The time has come for action—for active resistance to the despotism that will overwhelm us surely if we remain tacit and inactive. Duty, patriotism, and even self-preservation demand that we shall now promptly recognize the responsibilities that have devolved upon us, and shall take action worthy of the occasion; such action as, in the language of the resolution I have offered here 'will assert and forever maintain our rights and liberties in the Union and under the Constitution of the United States.'

Mr. President, we are now called upon to perform our part—and it is no unimportant one—towards the preservation and the perpetuity of this great Government.—We must and will be sustained in the effort by the whole force and power of the Federal Government. And, sir, we shall succed in driving treason and rebellion beyond our borders. This, sir, is our mission.—Let us do the work."

MR. HAWXHURST, of Fairfax, offered the following:

1. Resolved, That we recognize the Union sentiment of the whole State as the proper basis of this body.

2. That when worthy Union men of the different counties of the State, who cannot have proper facilities for consultation and action, send delegates to this Convention, we will receive them and their assistance in freeing the State from the rule of despotism that now oppresses a portion of them.

MR. CARLILE: "The Committee have instructed me to report a resolution, and I trust the gentleman will withdraw his, if this meet his approbation. It is as follows:"

Resolved, That the loyal people of the counties of this Commonwealth that have not yet appointed delegates to this Convention, or are not actually represented here, be, and they are hereby earnestly requested to appoint such delegates without avoidable delay.

MR. HAWXHURST withdrew his resolution.

MR. PIERFONT, of Marion, hoped every member would see the importance and propriety of adopting the resolutions of the Committee at once. He trusted after that was done, that effective measures would be taken to communicate the information contained in the resolutions, to those counties without delay.

The resolution was then adopted.

MR. FROST, of Jackson, offered a resolution more especially, he said, with reference to his section of the State. It is as follows:

Resolved, That for the better preservation of the peace of the citizens of Virginia, this Convention most earnestly requests all persons within her limits engaged in rebellious movements against the Federal Government, to desist from all such demonstrations and return to their allegiance; and that this Convention does peremptorily require all seditious assemblages to disperse, and all companies mustered into the service of the Southern Confederacy to be immediately disbanded.

The resolution was appropriately referred.

MR. CARLILE suggested that if there were no business before the Convention, it would greatly facilitate their objects to have the committees at work, and if agreeable, he would move to adjourn till to-morrow morning. He subsequently withdrew the motion to adjourn, and asked that a genral order be adopted that the committees have leave to sit during the sittings of the Convention, which leave was granted.

MR. BURDETT said a gentleman from Barbour was here with but partial credentials.—Barbour was a Union county, and the member of the Legislature from that county having run off with the secession army, he wished to enquire if it was not competent for this Convention to declare this gentleman the delegate elect to the House of Delegates from that county, and thereby make him a delegate to this Convention. He therefore moved

That this Convention declare Nathan H. Taft the delegate for Barbour county in the Legislature.

MR. FARNSWORTH, of Upshur, said the claims of the gentleman were now under consideration by the Committee on Credentials. Their report would be made shortly, and he asked respectfully that a little time be given them.

MR. BURDETT withdrew the resolution.

MR. LAMB, of Ohio, suggested to the gentleman from Taylor, that the proper course to pursue would be to pass Mr. Taft's credentials over to the Committee on Credentials. That would be the proper course in any instance of the kind.

MR. PARSONS, of Tucker, thought it altogether wrong to take the consideration of such matters out of the hands of the committee appointed for the express purpose of considering them.

MR. BURDETT said the gentleman from Tucker misapprehended his remarks. He believed it competent for this Convention to fill vacancies for the House of Delegates. There appears to be one in the county of Barbour. We have a right to indicate Mr. Taft as the Delegate, and receive him here as such; but I think it better for the committee to report on the matter first. I, therefore, move to refer the claims of Mr. Taft to a seat in this body, to the Committee on Credentials.

The resolution was adopted.

MR. FROST said that in glancing over the rules, he discovered that according to rule 21, select committees should be composed of not less than 5 nor more than 13. He called attention to the rule to prevent infringement. He thought, in view of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Taylor, and adopted by the Convention, increasing the Committee on Business from 13 to 17, it would be proper either to alter the rule, or reconsider the resolution by which the increase was made.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved to amend the rule by adding the words, "unless by authority of the Convention."

MR. LAMB suggested that it would be better to reconsider the motion.

MR. VAN WINKLE explained that the object of his motion was to legalize the action taken by the Convention this morning.

MR. BURDETT favored a reconstruction.

MR. VAN WINKLE withdrew his motion, and after some further discussion, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Committee on Business was increased in violation of the rule, prevailed.

On motion of MR. LAMB, the 21st rule was then suspended.

On motion of MR. BURDETT, the committee was then increased by adding to it the four gentlemen appointed under his former resolution.

THE CHAIR stated in justification of himself that the committee had been formed hastily, and without particular thought as to whether the members were from the east or west of the Alleghanies. It never occurred to him that he was omitting gentlemen from any one section of the State. The additional appointments on the committee, however, would remedy the omission.

On motion the Convention took a recess till 2 o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at 2 o'clock. THE CHAIR stated that the first business in order, would be the reception of the reports of such committees as might be prepared to report.

There being no reports offered,

MR. FLESHER, of Jackson, said if there were nothing before the Convention, he would move to adjourn till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock

SAMUEL B. TODD, of Taylor, said he wished to ask leave of absence of the Convention for a few days. His private affairs rendered it necessary.

On motion, leave of absence was granted him.

MR. FLESHER, of Jackson, then renewed his motion, and the Convention adjourned.

THE FOURTH DAY,

FRIDAY, JUNE 14, 1861.

The Convention met yesterday at the usual hour and was opened with prayer by Rev. David Hervey.

The minutes of the preceding day were read and approved.

COL. KRAMER, of Monongalia, who was present for the first time, came forward and took the oath of office.

MR. CARLILE, from the Committee on Business, reported the following Ordinance: On his motion it was ordered to lie on the table and be made the order of the day for to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

AN ORDINANCE FOR THE RE-ORGANIZATION OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT.

The people of the State of Virginia, by their delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. A Governor and Lieutenant-Governor for the State of Virginia shall be appointed by this Convention to discharge the duties and exercise the powers which pertain to their respective offices by the existing laws of the State, and to continue in office until their successors be elected and qualified.

2. A Council, to consist of five members, shall be appointed by this Convention to consult with and advise the Governor respecting such matters pertaining to his official duties as he shall submit for consideration, and to aid in the execution of his official orders. Their term of office shall expire at the same time as that of the Governor.

3. The Delegates elected to the General Assembly on the twenty-third day of May last, and the Senators entitled, under existing laws to seats in the next General Assembly, who shall qualify themselves by taking the oath or affirmation hereinafter set forth, shall constitute the Legislature of the State, to discharge the duties and exercise the powers pertaining to the General Assembly. They shall hold their offices for the terms for which they were respectively elected. They shall assemble in the city of Wheeling on the ——— day of ——— and proceed to organize themselves, as prescribed by existing laws, in their respective branches. A majority in each branch of the members qualified as aforesaid shall constitute a guarantee to do business. A majority of the members of each branch thus qualified, voting affirmatively, shall be competent to pass any act specified in the twenty-seventh section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the State.

4. The Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, members of the Legislature, and all officers now in the service of the State, or of any county, city or town thereof, or hereafter to be elected or appointed for such service, including the Judges and Clerks of the several courts, Sheriffs, Commissioners of the Revenue, Justices of the Peace, officers of city and municipal corporations, and officers of militia and volunteers of the State not mustered into the service of the United States shall each take the following oath or affirmation before proceeding in the discharge of their several duties:

I solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, as the Supreme law of the land, any thing in the Ordinances of the Convention which assembled at Richmond on the 13th day of February, 1861, to the contrary notwithstanding; and that I will uphold and defend the Government ordained by the Convention which assembled at Wheeling on the 11th day of June, 1861, and the Legislature, Governor and all other officers thereof, in the discharge of their several duties as prescribed by the last mentioned Convention.

5. If any elective officer who is required by the preceding section to take said Oath or Affirmation, fail or refuse so to do, it shall be the duty of the Governor, upon satisfactory evidence of the fact to issue his writ declaring the office to be vacant, and providing for a special election to fill such vacancy, at some convenient and early day to be designated in said writ of which due publication shall be made for the information of the persons entitled to vote at such election, and such writ may be directed, at the discretion of the Governor, to the Sheriff or Sheriffs of the proper County or Counties, or to a special Commissioner or Commissioners to be ordered by the Governor for the purpose. If the officer who fails or refuses to take such oath or affirmation be appointed otherwise than by election, the writ shall be directed to the appointing power, requiring it to fill the vacancy."

He also from the same Committee reported back the resolution submitted by Mr. Frost, of Jackson, on Thursday, commanding the dispersion of seditious assemblages, &c., with the recommendation that it pass.

On motion, the question was put and the resolution adopted.

MR. LAMB, from the Committee on Credentials, reported that John Love, of Upshur county, had presented proper credentials entitling him to a seat in this Convention from that county, and he moved that his name be entered upon the roll as such.

The report as far as made was adopted. Mr. Love's name was entered upon the roll, and he came forward and was qualified.

MR. LAMB—"The Committee also instructed me to report that Nathan H. Taft is entitled to represent the people of Barbour county as one of the delegates in this Convention, in the place of Spencer Dayton, who has been heretofore admitted as a member." He moved that Mr. Taft be received in place of Mr. Dayton.

MR. STUART, of Doddridge, wished to know some of the facts in the case. He was aware that the Committee had the power to displace a member already qualified. He thought such action irregular.

MR. LAMB said the facts were briefly these:

"The appointments in that county had been made by subscription. Mr. Shuttleworth was upon all the subscription papers presented to the Committee. When we first acted upon the case and presented that roll of members to the Convention, Mr. Taft had not his papers to lay before us. We therefore presented the name of Mr. Dayton, because his was the only second name appearing upon the papers we had to act upon. Mr. Taft, upon due notice to Mr. Dayton, has since brought forward his papers, and it appears now by the whole of the papers which we now have before us, that Mr. Taft is appointed to represent that county, by a larger number of citizens than Mr. Dayton. Mr. Shuttleworth is unanimously appointed, and the county is entitled to but two members.

MR. STUART renewed his objection on the ground of irregularity. Mr. Dayton had been qualified, and there should be some regularity in the mode by which he should be displaced.

MR LAMB referred to the proceedings of the day before. The claim of Mr. Taft had been regularly referred to the Committee. A consideration of it necessarily involved a contest with Mr. Dayton. Under order of the Convention, it was incumbent on the Committee to report on the respective claims, and they had done so.

MR. STUART said he had understood the resolution of yesterday (submitted by the gentleman from Taylor) to express that Mr. Taft should be entitled to take his seat as a representative in the Legislature, and not whether he or Mr. Dayton should take a seat here as delegate to this Convention only.

The Secretary read Mr. Burdett's resolution. It is as follows:

"That Nathan H. Taft be admitted to a seat in this Convention, as the delegate from Barbour county to the Legislature."

MR. BURDETT said that at the time he submitted that resolution, he was not aware that Mr. Taft had credentials showing him regularly elected. He had not offered it to give Mr. Taft a seat in preference to Mr. Dayton, but he thought the Committee on Credentials had full power to determine and decide who are delegates to this Convention, particularly with the concurrence of this body itself.

MR. FLESHER, of Jackson, inquired if they could both hold seats in the Convention.

THE CHAIR said that was a matter for the Convention to decide.

MR. MOSS, of Wood, moved as a substitute for the report of the Committee, that the office of delegate to the House of Delegates for Barbour county be declared vacant, and that Mr. Taft or Mr. Dayton be declared such delegate.

MR. CARLILE said there was no power in the Convention to appoint a delegate for the county of Barbour. Neither was there any power to increase the number of representatives to which she is entitled on this floor. He trusted the gentleman from Wood would withdraw his motion, and allow the report of the committee to be adopted.

MR. DAYTON, who was present, took occasion to express his willingness to acquiesce in the action of the committee. He had come here determined that Barbour should be represented, and without being aware that any gentlemon except Mr. Shuttleworth would be here. There was no contest between himself and Mr. Taft. He would already have resigned in favor of that gentleman (having since his arrival here become acquainted with his superior claims) but that he should have been subjected on his return home to the imputation of having shrunk from taking part in the action of the Convention. He desired, therefore, that when he retired that it might be by the action of the Convention. With this explanation he would let the matter rest.

MR. MOSS withdrew his motion.

The question was taken on the report of the Committee, and it was adopted.

MR. PAXTON moved to reconsider the vote by which, a few minutes since, the report of the Committee on Business was made the special order for to-morrow at eleven o'clock. The printed report could not be in the hands of the members before that hour. He wished to substitute a later day.

MR. CARLILE remarked that the suggestion met the concurrence of the committee. He hoped a later day would be named.

The question was put and the vote reconsidered.

MR. PAXTON then moved that the ordinance reported by the Committee on Business be made the special order for Monday at 11 o'clock.

MR. CRANE, of Tucker, moved to amend by substituting Wednesday for Monday. He was obliged to absent himself till that time, and was very desirous of being present when the consideration of the ordinance came up.

MR. PAXTON accepted the amendment and the motion as amended was concurred in.

The order of the day was called.

MR. LAMB moved to suspend its consideration until the Committee on Credentials could conclude their report.

The order being susepnded,

MR. LAMB said that he had been instructed additionally to report that Wm. F. Mercer, of Loudon county, claims a seat in the Convention; that the Committee regard the credentials offered by Mr. Mercer as insufficient and so report to the Convention. He asked that Mr. Mercer himself be heard.

MR. MERCER spoke at some length in support of his claims.

MR. CARLILE read the credentials of Mr. Mercer, and made some remarks [in] refutation of his claims and urging that the duty of the Convention required them, however much their sympathies might be enlisted, to strictly require that none but such as were regularly appointed should be received as delegates.

MR. STUART suported Mr. Mercer's claims in a few remarks.

MR. BURDETT submitted a motion that the gentleman from Loudon should be declared a delegate of this Convention; which he afterwards withdrew.

The question on the adoption of the report of the committee was taken and the report was adopted.

MR. CARLILE read to the Convention an invitation for them to attend a strawberry festival given by the Union ladies of Wheeling in the evening, at Washington Hall. He hoped all would go.

He also announced that the Central Committee, appointed by the May Convention, had taken such steps as enabled them to announce that 2,000 stand of good arms had been procured, 500 of which arrived in the city to-day, and the other 1,500 to be here this evening or in the morning.

The order of the day was then again taken up.

On motion of Mr. Dorsey it was postponed until 2 o'clock P. M.

The Convention then took a recess until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention assembled at two o'clock.

MR. HAGANS asked and obtained leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That, in consideration of the peculiar circumstances that have surrounded our loyal brethren of Loudon county, as well as of their geographical position, this Convention now extends to them a cordial and special invitation to accredit and send their number of delegates as soon as possible, and that Wm. F. Mercer be made the medium of this invitation.

The resolution was adopted.

MR. TAFT, of Barbour, then went forward and took the oath of office.

THE CHAIR then anonunced the order of the day to be the Declaration reported by the Committee yesterday. The question is on its adoption.

MR. DORSEY, of Monongalia, said he had no special objection to this Declaration of itself. He thought there was an error or an inadvertence in the wording of one sentence:

"The act of the General Assembly, calling the Convention which assembled at Richmond in February last, was therefore a usurpation; and the Convention thus called has not only abused the powers nominally entrusted to it, but, with the connivance and active aid of the executive, has usurped and exercised other powers, to the manifest injury of the people, which, if permitted, will inevitably subject them to a military despotism."

This sentence gave peculiar force to the one which preceded it, which reads thus: "The Bill of Rights of Virginia, framed in 1776, re-affirmed in 1830, and again in 1851, expressly reserves this right to the majority of her people, and the existing constitution does not confer upon the General Assembly the power to call a Convention to alter its provisions, or to change the relations of the Commonwealth, without the previously expressed consent of such majority." Taken in connection with the one first read, this seems to mean with the previously expressed consent of such majority, the General Assembly has the power to change the relations of the Comonwealth, and if that means the Federal relations, this is a virtual concession of the doctrine of secession. The objection however, which he had to this document related to its connection with other documents reported to this Convention by the Committee on Business, as being a part of a systematic plan which had been prepared by the committee reporting the declaration—a plan which he objected to and to which he would report his objections.

MR. CARLILE: I thank my friend from Monongalia for allowing the committee an opportunity to explain, and show, if we can, that the language referred to is not justly subject to the criticism to which it seems to have been exposed. Before he enters upon substantial objections he has kindly consented that we shall be allowed to perfect the Declaration.

I think, Sir, upon a careful reading of the Declaration gentlemen will see that there is nothing in the world squinting towards the heresy of secession, in the slightest degree. The right spoken is the right of the people to alter or abolish their government. No man doubts that right; it is as old as liberty itself. It is a right that any and every people have, successfully if they can, to resist a government which they believe to be oppressive or unsuited to their wants. If they succeed in their efforts they are patriots, if they fail they are rebels. It is the right of revolution.

The people of Virginia in establishing themselves a government deemed it best that it should be divided into two parts, if I may use the expression, and you will allow me to use language which I understand, and which all can understand. What is government? It is an agent. All governments are the agents of the people governed; and the people of Virginia in establishing government for themselves deemed it best to create two agents. The Federal Government is one, and the State Government is the other; and they have expressly declared that the acts within the limits of the attorney that the acts of the federal agent, within its powers, limited and defined by the instrument creating his agent, shall be supreme. Any act done or performed by the State agent in conflict with the powers conferred upon the Federal agent is to be null and void.—Thus it will be seen that within the powers conferred the federal agent is supreme, independent of, and above the State agent. Hence the doctrine of Mr. Clay when he said: "I owe a supreme allegiance to the Federal Government, a subordinate one to my own State."

The State agent, as to the exercise of its power, is wholly independent of the Federal agents. The Federal agent can exercise no power other than that conferred upon him by the instrument creating him. The State agent can exercise all power that the people themselves were they personally present could exercise, which is not forbidden to be exercised by it, in theConstitution creating it. There is the distinction between the two agents.

How was the Federal agent created? The State agent was created solely and alone by the people of Virginia themselves; it is responsible to no one else, derives its powers from no one else; is the creature of the people of Virginia alone.

The Federal agent is the creature of all the parties to the Federal compact. The people of Virginia agreed with the people of the other twelve colonies—there were but thirteen at the time—agreed with them that in connection with them they would create this common agent for common purpose, and the discharge of common duties. And how was that agent created in each one of the States? In their sovereign capacity, in convention assembled, ratifying and approving the instrument creating the agency known as the Constitution of the United States. That very instrument provides for its own alteration, amendment or change. On the application of two-thirds of the principals creating it, amendments can be proposed to it and changes effected, which will become a part and parcel of the original act itself, when ratified by three-fourths of the principals through their legislatures or in their conventions assembled.

Now, Sir, what is this clause to which reference has been made? It merely asserts what all know to be true, that the Bill of Rights declares that this State agent which we have created, cannot change the agency itself, as defined, limited and prescribed by the instrument creating the agency, the Constitution of Virginia; that no agent, created either mediately or immediately, directly or indirectly, can affect, change, alter, or abolish the powers of the agent, either direct or indirect. That can only be done by the people creating the agents—therefore, we say that when this one of these agents—the Legislative Department of the State Government—assumed to itself the power to convene an assembly known constitutionally as embodying the sovereign power of the whole people of the State, they were guilty of an usurpation. And thus the legitimate inference to be drawn is that they have by this usurpation forfeited their agency and our power under the instrument; that this act which they assumed to do is in violation of authority conferred upon them by the instrument establishing them as the agent, and therefore void; and that such power can only be assumed by the principal himself, the sovereign people of Virginia.

MR. DORSEY: Will the gentleman from Harrison county permit me to ask a question? What "relations" are meant in the clause? Or how "change the relations of the Commonwealth?"

MR. CARLILE: I am coming to that. If the Constitution of the United States, providing as it does, for its own amendment and change, should be by the constitutional number of States so changed as to effect the present relations which Virginia has to it, and give it another and different relation, and the people of Virginia shall ratify that amendment in convention as they ratified the constitution itself, or through the Legislature in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, I would like to know if they have not the right to do it? Sir, I hope to see the relations of Virginia changed before many years. If peace shall once more be restored to this once happy land, I trust that among the first acts of the people of the States will be to convene a National Convention which shall, if it do nothing else, change our relations so far as treason is concerned. I want to see a little more stringent provision on that subject. I want that which goes to destroy the perpetuity of our government, whether it be an overt act or not, to be punished as treason. That is all, Sir, this Declaration means. It may be meant to cover the great right never denied—the right which is dear to every freeman—the right of revolution—the right which our fathers exercised and asserted successfully upon the fields of Yorktown and Bunker Hill. But was never intended—and it canont be made to appear by a fair construction—that the convention assembled for the purpose of putting its foot upon this heresy of the constitutional right to withdraw from the Union and destroy a government, could or does express a recognition of that very right which it holds does not exist. It never can be supposed that a convention assembled for that purpose could or would by any inference in any line that it might adopt, recognize the right of secession.

Now, if the gentlemen will address themselves to the task of employing better language, less objectionable or open to the criticism than that which is employed in the Declaration, to express the ideas which we all desire to enforce, the Committee, I am authorized to say, will feel gratified to this Convention if they will do it. But, Sir, in the limited time that was given to us from the adjournment on Tuesday to the meeting on Wednesday, after a night's reflection, after careful revision, writing and re-writing by different hands—the language that is found in the declaration was employed; and I believe it is to be not only happy, but the best that can be employed in any reasonable time by this body.

The relations of this State to the Federal Government can be constitutionally changed—will be, I trust, constitutionally changed, and will result in saving two ages that are to come after us, I trust, from the destruction that now threatens our beautiful system of government.

MR. DORSEY. of Monongalia. The remarks explanatory of the clause in this Declaration, are to my mind sufficiently clear; and perhaps as they will go forth with this declaration, they may be sufficient explanation of it. I shall not therefore urge my objections. In fact it was a mere passing remark I made.

The remarks, however, Mr. President, that I presume to make are more in reference to the relation that this document sustains to the other documents which have already come before the Convention, and others which they indicate will come before it, than in reference to the language of the declaration itself. This is part of a plan, a part of a systematic arrangement that is to be proposed for the action of this body; and in making reference to it, it may perhaps be well to put it in comparison with another plan that has been spoken of frequently, and by some members at least earnestly.

The plan proposed by the Committee is, if I understand it, first to declare that the offices in the State of Virginia are vacant, then to proceed to make arrangements for filling those offices; then to proceed step by step to the other arrangements necessary for the reconstruction of the Government of Virginia.

The other plan alluded to, and which was indicated, rather than drawn out in full in my resolutions submitted on Tuesday is to go as far in this other plan as is necessary; to call together the legislature of the State of Virginia, and then to submit to that legislature the proposition of separating Western Virginia from Eastern Virginia and establishing a new State Government.

Now, the principle, you will observe, Mr. President, in each of these cases is the same. The principle upon which this Convention will act in either case is the same. The principle upon which the committee proposes to act is this: All power is vested in the people. They are the sovereigns in this Government; they have delegated their power, however temporarily, to certain servants. Those servants have proven to be unprofitable servants, and now the people propose through the medium of their Convention to call other servants to attend to their interests. The Legislature that may be convened for that purpose of attending to those interests, may be convened during the sitting of this Convention—consists of those servants. The people propose now that the interests belonging to them shall be put into the hands of that Legislature. The same principle prevails in the other proposition. We begin as they begin and proceeded thus far as they proceeded; but we do not propose that this new State organization shall continue permanently in operation. I repeat the principle is the same in either case; and unless we assume that principle this Convention can do nothing at all—would have no authority to do anything at all. It is on that principle that it has been assembled; on that principle it has been acting, and upon that I propose to act in the future in all its deliberations.

Another matter is that the legality in either case is the same. I have heard much private conversation and much public discussion in regard to what the general government will recognize and approve. Now, Sir, the general government can recognize the one plan as readily as the other. The Wheeling Intelligencer has admitted that. Gentlemen who are advocating this plan—gentlemen who have proposed this plan to the committee, and gentlemen on the committee who have been favoring it acknowledge that; and it is generally believed by those who understand anything about the views of the loyal people of the United States, and who can guess at the views of the Administration—it is generally believed, if not fully understood, that the general government will recognize anything that Virginia shall do to keep herself in the Union, and at the same time preserve peace and order within her borders. Wherever there is illegality in the one plan there is in the other. Wherever there is an over-riding of technicalities in the one there is the same in the other; and I wish just here to call attention of those who may defend the plan that is before the convention in part—I wish to call their attention to this point, to say, if they can, that the Administration will probably reject the one plan and receive the other. I admit indeed that there are abundant indications that the Administration would prefer the plan that is proposed by this committee. I see the indications in the newspapers, and hear them in private conversation. But are we to infer from that that the general government will not recognize our plan at all if adopted by us? The Administration has a certain plan before it as a plan of operation. This may, if adopted, be made a special plan to these operations—an agent, an instrument in the hands of the Administration to accomplish its purpose more readily perhaps than it could without such a plan. That is admitted by the advocates of a division of the State, but we insist that the general government will also adopt our plan if we do not see proper to adopt the other plan.

It is a revolutionary movement altogether. Both plans are revolutionary; and if the General Government can recognize one, it can the other. I may say that I know from private conversations with those who know something about the views of the Administration, that they expect us not to quibble about technicalities, not to be squeamish about little points of law, in our action in this convention; and if we are afraid of little points of law; if we are squeamish, really, about these little technacalities, it is time for us to begin to tremble already. We have already done acts which viewed in the light of formal law, are treasonable. It requires boldness to enter into a revolutionary project of this kind, and if we have it in the one case, we ought to have it in the other. When we have already committed a revolutionary act, we ought to consider what lies before us, in view of our own local interests, as well as in view of the general interests of the country.

Now, I ask the question, What shall decide us between these two plans that have been proposed? The legality cannot decide us, because they are equally legal; and I think the gentleman who will advocate this plan before the Convention, will admit this—admit it as the Intelligencer has done. Legally, indeed? We propose to do something in due form of law, and yet we have already trembled about the forms of law, and not only that, but we propose to override all forms of law in carrying out the plan that is now proposed by this committee. It is the understanding, though not formally proposed in the report of that committee, that we shall overhaul the Constitution of Virginia, change its provisions, make such arrangements in the change of those provisions, as will enable us to carry out this project of reconstructing the State Government. In fact, the project itself is a change of the Constitution of Virginia as to some of its specific laws.

Well then, shall the simple consideration of the expectation of the United States, and the desire of the Administration indicated in a variety of ways, decide us as between these two plans that are proposed to the members of this Convention? I admit, Mr. President, that there is some force in the proposition that is made. I admit there is some propriety in the accomplishment of the object which the administration propose to accomplish by the action of this Convention, in accepting the plan proposed and suggested by the committee. I can see that the design is to introduce this same plan in all the border States. The design is, as rapidly as the troops advance to establish a similar government to this proposed in the report of the committee—establish a simple government and call on the local Union men of the Commonwealths in the various States, to rally around the government. I see it will have a mighty moral influence in the border States in which such government shall be established, and also on the States still further South. But then here I ask that the Administration shall not solicit us to do that, while we have local interests embarrassing us of such a character. If we had no complication of interests in this matter, it might be kind, prudent and appropriate, for the Administration to request us indirectly, as it has, to take such action. But, Sir, if this action anticipated is the desired thing—if the effort of this new project upon the border States and the States South of them, is the desirable thing, I suggest that Western Virginia shall be separated from Eastern Virginia, and then that Eastern Virginia, as pressure is removed, shall enter into this enterprise, and establish a provisional government, and set the precedent the Administration desires this Convention to set. They have no local difficulties pressing upon them as we have. Let them attend to that matter. And especially is it proper they shall do it, because it will not only not embarrass them in their local interests, but will greatly advantage them.

I believe the interest of Western Virginia ought to decide as between these two plans, and I think so especially because this whole movement was professedly inaugurated for its benefit. I remember the gentleman from Harrison justly boasted that he was the author of this whole movement, and he defined his design to be in its inauguration to separate Western from Eastern Virginia. Now, Sir, at that time that Convention which assembled on the 13th of May, did not see proper to make arrangements for the separation. They could not at that time decide upon the proper policy for that purpose. They thought the proper policy was to call together a general Convention. For what purpose? To carry on the original design of the author of the resolutions that had brought them together. If so then, Sir, are we now to turn about and receive and adopt a plan here which will ignore the special interests of Western Virginia and will tend to the general interest of Virginia as a whole? I know, Sir, the anticipations of Western Virginians would be disappointed should we go home to them and they ask us "What plan have you adopted for dividing the State?" And we should throw down to them this plan of the Committee. I know that the constituents I have the honor in part to represent will be seriously disappointed.

Now, Sir, it seems to me that if we were in earnest, if we were sincere in the original movement we will take such action in the premises in the present Convetnion as will secure a separation of the State. I need not speak here, Sir, of the necessity of that project. I need not speak of the necessity, the dire necessity of separating Western from Eastern Virginia. Gentlemen here are all fully acquainted with the history of the case. They all know and appreciate that necessity. But I want to know now, Sir, if after having initiated a movement for the purpose of meeting the necessity we are to turn about and inquire the necessity which all know we have been making preparations to meet. The present plan, it seems to me, Mr. President, will not meet the exigency. It will not secure the division of this State.

It is a well known fact, and I need only utter it merely to connect my remarks, that the General Government intends to whip in Eastern Virginia. And we all believe it will whip her in.

Well, now, meanwhile, we set this projection on foot and establish this seat of government of the State of Virginia; and when Eastern Virginia is whipped in she forms a part, and her citizens will take a hand in this government. The question then will turn upon who is the majority, who is in the minority. The interests of Eastern and Western Virginia are entirely antagonistic. There is an "unnatural connection" between them and us. They will of course keep us down, as they have already done, if it be possible to for the purpose of meeting their little bills. It is very convenient to have somebody for this purpose. They will burden us as they always have done. That they have the majority is evident when we remember that all the Southern portion of Western Virginia, considering the Blue Ridge as the line, sympathizes with Eastern Virginia.—Their interests are the same as hers. They lie along the line of Tennessee and Kentucky, connected with Eastern Virginia by railroads. That section of the country is filled up with persons who emigrated from the Eastern part of the State, and their sympathies are all there. Unless we in Western Virginia are a united people, it is impossible for us to carry out this project. I insist that we shall not enter into a plan to put ourselves at the mercy of Eastern Virginia and our neighbors who symaphtize with her, any more, and I propose therefore that this plan shall proceed just so far, with the understanding that immediately as soon as Congress has taken action on the case, or as soon as the Administration has recognized this government that is propoed to be set up, a separation shall be made. And I make these remarks, Mr. President, more for the purpose of committing this convention to the design, than for the purpose of objecting to this plan of itself considered. I do not object to the legality of it, or the prinicple upon which it proceeds, or any formal arrangement, except the verbal one I mentioned. They are all legal as we can get.

But I object that no provision has been made, specific and definite, for the separation of Virginia, Western from Eastern, just as soon as it is possible to do it, and come as near meeting the technicalities as the nature of the case will allow.

In a word, Sir, I deem that the separation of Western Virginia from Eastern is the paramount object in the minds of Western Virginians; and I hope, Sir, indeed I believe, that that is a paramount object in the minds of a majority of the members of this convention. What I want is, that they shall explicitly say so, inform, if they choose; or, if not then, in the formal documents that are being successively presented by this committee; or they should do it in a specific resolution; or, if not in that way, they should say so in debate.

Now, Sir, if this government be established as proposed in the report of the committee it will gain an impetus which will urge it forward, and keep urging it forward, and I want to know, Sir, the specific time at which this government may be arrested to the consideration of this proposition of a separation of Western from Eastern Virginia. I want a specific time, and I want to say to you, Sir, and to this convention today, that I shall not vote for a single proposition proposed by that committee—a single provision that shall come up before this Convention looking to the establishment of a provisional government, looking to the reconstruction of the government of Virginia, unless I can see clearly that there is a distinct intention in those arrangements to separate Western Virginia from Eastern Virginia; and I think I speak at least for a majority of the delegation of Monongalia in saying that they will not do so either, unless that ultimatum be secured by some definite action beforehand, or at least as I said before, committing the majority of this Convention in discussion. If such an indication as that may be made I shall, to use a familiar term, hold up both hands for their ordinance that has been proposed and all that shall hereafter be proposed, looking to the accomplishment of that design.

MR VAN WINKLE, of Wood, followed Mr. Dorsey. He took substantially the grounds occupied by Mr. Carlile, in favor of re-organizing a government for the whole State, and in opposition to Mr. Dorsey, who had favored the immediate division of the State. In the course of his remarks he said, however: "I have been long convinced, Sir, that every interest of N. W. Virginia demands a separation from the East, and under other circumstances I believe such a separation ought to be effected in a friendly manner." But he urged they could not now know where the boundaries of a new State could be run, and he never could consent to go and leave behind the people of those loyal counties that were not yet represented here in the Convention.—"Whenever the time comes I am willing to do everything to effect a separation.—I admit that everything is in danger, still there is something like a moral obligation, a pledged faith, and I cannot consider it in any other light than that we are bound by this single county of Loudon, and by the other loyal counties now in possession of the secessionists."

MR. CARLILE said: "I think, Sir, that a moment's consideration will satisfy this Convention that upon this question there is at least no difference of opinion between the advocates of a separation of this State. If I may be allowed, I can claim some credit for my sincerity when I say that it has been an object for which I have labored at least since the year 1850. The Convention that met in Richmond in that year and adopted our present State Constitution clearly disclosed, to my mind, the utter incompatibility consistent with the interests of the people of Northwestern Virginia of remaining in a connection with the Eastern portion of the State. And, Sir, the first favorable opportunity that discovered itself to me for effecting that separation was in the Convention that met in this city in May last. And I appeal to members who are present and who were members of that Convention to say if I did not zealously press that measure. Why did I do it? For the reason which I then stated—for the reason that now prevents me doing it. I then stated that we were still citizens of the United States according to even the theory of the disunionists; that a separation could be effected then by the provision of the United States Constitution providing for it, but when the 23rd of May came and went the sun had set behind the hills in the evening of that day we would be transferred according to the theory of the secessionists to another and different confederacy, and would be deprived of the Constitution of the United States, and the mode and manner in which a separation could thereafter be effected under the authority of these Secessionists by virtue of that transfer could only be by treaty and recognition; that although all Virginia should agree to the separation, yet she would have to obtain the consent of the Southern Confederacy expressed in accordance with the Constitution which she had adopted for its government before we could be allowed to transfer ourselves to what they would then call another, a different and hostile government. I saw difficulties innumerable and insurmountable if we did not act then. But the wisdom of that body thought otherwise and I gracefully, as I should, bowed to its decision.

Now, Sir, where are we? I call the attention of my friend from Monongalia, and I tell him if he beats me in this race of separation he will have to be swifter than I think he is. We have no legislature now. And mark you it is only by the assent of the legislature a separation can be effected. The people themselves through their representatives assembled cannot assent to a separation. It can only be done as is provided in the Constitution of the United States by the assent of the Legislature of the State. Now, Sir, have we a Legislature? Governor Letcher would say that we have; and its members will be sworn to support the Constitution of the Southern Confederacy. Then you see we can never effect a separation in the manner in which we should have accomplished it.

Now, Sir, let us pursue the policy laid down in the Declaration, and let us repudiate Letcher and his transfer; let us assemble a Legislature here, of our own, sworn to support, not the Southern Confederacy Constitution, but that which Washington and Madison formed, the constitution of our fathers, under which we have grown and prospered, as never people grew and prospered before. Let us maintain our position under that tree of liberty, watered by the blood and tears of the patriots of the revolution—planted by them, its roots having taken deep hold and firm hold in the hearts of a great people, and having from a little spot on earth spread from the Atlantic to the Pacific, embracing, I might say, a continent, and spreading its branches of protection over the whole unbounded land.

Let us organize a Legislature, swearing allegiance to that government, and let that Legislature be recognized by the United States Government, as the Legislature of Virginia.

Then we have still a direct recognition of the protecting care of our ancient government, and then we will effect this separation. But now, with no Legislature recognized as owing allegiance to the Constitution of the United States, we could not do it. But with the Legislature recognized as still the Legislature of the State; with Virginia in the Union; with a Legislature recognized by the Government of the United States and with its assent to our separation, our way is clear. If the Southern Confederacy dares to interpose, we have the strong arm of that same old government to be thrown around us, and to shelter us from harm.

Let us then go on as we propose. Let us be recognized as the true and lawful authorities, speaking for and on behalf of the loyal people of the whole State of Virginia. Give us that recognition, and then the separation will come. And I here say that one of the first acts I shall perform, if no one else does it—and I believe it a duty I owe to the people who have honored me with a seat in Congress, will be to obtain from that body a legislative declaration recognizing this Legislature you will assemble here, as the Legislature of the State; and then let my friends, the representatives, assent to it, and my word for it, we will be the State of New Virginia.

It is a mere question now, of whether we shall wait until we are solemnly recognized as the true, legal, constitutional representatives of the people of Virginia; or whether we shall now attempt an impossibility—for every man who will reflect a minute, will know that until rebellion is crushed, no assent will be obtained for our separation from the rebellious portion of this State.

But, Sir, there is another object which I have at heart. Two great objects influence and govern my actions. The first, I am free to say, the dearest, the highest, and the nearest to my heart, is the perpetuity of the Union.

Keeping forever undimmed the thirty-four stars that now deck the constellation of our national ensign, adding to them as we have done, star after star—when that is done—when safety and perpetuity are again secured to that flag—then we can consider our own State interests; then we can consider the interests of our own immediate section of this State; but until then, we owe it to our loyal brothers throughout the length and breadth of this great land to stand by them and aid them in resisting a crime, the greatest that has ever been attempted to be perpetrated on humanity. Let us do this, succeed in this, and we will succeed in all we desire in a very short time. Let us bring peace again to our Loudon, Alexandria and Hampshire friends. Let our brothers over the mountains through our aid and assistance, and that of this great and good government of ours, again see harmony throughout the land; again sit around their hearthstones with their families, and again instill the quiet hours of peace the lessons the Father of his Country has bequeathed to us in his farewell address. Then we may say to them: "We love you still as brothers, but your interests and ways and our are diverse. Let this line be drawn between us. We will have two separate and distinct sovereign States, but, brethren, we will all be American citizens!"

MR. NICHOLLS, of Brooke, succeeded. He favored the plan of the Committee.—Among other things he said: "The people of Brooke feel in relation to a division of the State like my friend from Monongalia. They feel that they have no identity of interest with the eastern part of the State, and have long sought to effect the purpose indicated by that gentleman. But we feel at the same time that owing obligations to the Constitution of the United States as the supreme law of the land, there are steps that cannot be taken at this preliminary stage of the proceedings. We owe constitutional obligations to the Federal Government. Where would we of Western Virginia have been to-day but for the protection of the Federal Government. We must consider whether our acts will contravene the acts of the Federal Government. We cast off our allegiance to the Southern Confederacy; we do not care for their protection, but we do care for the protection of the Federal Government, and about sustaining it in its constitutional obligations, and we do know that it cannot extend its arm or afford any protection to us except it treads upon every plank in the Constitution, the great platform of our national liberties. The plan proposed by the committee is the only one which we can adopt at this stage of our proceedings, to insure recognition and continued favor with the General Government."

MR. DORSEY wished to explain that he had not favored (as they all seemed to have understood him) a violent and informal separation of the State without any intervention of any preliminaries whatever. He disclaimed any such purpose, in particulars and in general. I propose to go on with the plan so far as it is necessary to the reassembling of the Legislature, then to propose this matter of dividing the State to that legislature; then submit its action to Congress for ratification, in accordance with the spirit and very letter of the Constitution of the United States.

MR. STUART, of Doddridge, differed in many respects with the gentlemen who had addressed the Convention. He thought this talk about the division of the State was rather out of place. We have loyal men from extreme portions of the State who are here claiming our protection. He was favorable to a division of the State if it could be done by the agreement and consent of the loyal people of the whole State; but he never would consent to cut loose from our loyal friends in the east who are helping us to aid the Government of the United States. He never wanted to separate from that part of the State that held the remains of Washington and Jefferson. They were here to frame a State Constitution, and when their brethren in the eastern portion of the State were freed from the rebellious reign of terror they were willing to come into the Government the Convention was assembled here to establish.

MR. CRANE, of Tucker, in a brief speech assured the Convention that although his people occupied the Southern extreme of Northwestern Virginia, and from their position the most exposed part of the border, yet he was authorized to say that his people were not only willing to a separation of Western from Eastern Virginia, but they want nothing short of a separation. He was ready, and his constituents were, to go in any direction, in arms or peacefully, for their deliverance from the bondsmen of Eastern Virginia. Nevertheless he pledged himself and his constituents to go along with the movement which was proposed here. It was, he believed, the best that could be inaugurated at this juncture.

On motion of MR. LAMB, the Declaration was made the order of the day for 11 o'clock to-morrow and thereafter each day until disposed of.

MR. STUART moved that when the Convention adjourn to-morrow it be to meet on Tuesday next. Many of the members had come unprepared to stay for a great length of time, and it was necessary for them to go home to make necessary arrangements for a prolonged absence.

MR. LAMB objected to the motion on the ground that if the convention adjourn till the time named the committees would have to suspend their labors meanwhile.

MR DORSEY suggested that the order of the day for next Wednesday was the ordinance reported this morning by the com committee, and if he understood the motion making it the order for Wednesday the object was to give the Convention time and opportunity to discuss the declaration now before the body, and he thought it would occupy all the time allotted to it. He thought it would be improper to adjourn over.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn till Tuesday, it was rejected.

On motion, the Convention then adjourned.

THE FIFTH DAY,

SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1861.

The Convention met at the appointed hour, and was opened with prayer by Rev. S. R. Brockunier.

The minutes of the preceding day, were read by the Secretary.

MR. VAN WINKLE, of Wood, wished to amend the minutes by correcting an expression in the Declaration before the Convention, as it stood recorded in the journal. The reading "they have attempted to bring the allegiance of the people of the United States, into direct conflict, &c."—should read "allegiance of the people to the United States, &c."

The correction was made.

MR. VAN WINKLE resuming, said objection had been made yesterday to the phraseology of the concluding portion of the second sentence of the first paragraph of the Declaration. On behalf of the committee, he was authorized to say that they had unanimously agreed to obviate the objection by striking out the objectionable words as follows; "and the existing Constitution does not confer upon the General Assembly, the power to call a convention to alter its provisions, or to change the relations of the Commonwealth, without the previously expressed consent of such majority." Also to add in the succeeding sentence, after the words "in February last," the words: "Without the previously expressed consent of such majority."

MR. CARLILE, as Chairman of the Committee that had re-reported the Declaration, asked, inasmuch as the report had not yet been acted on, that the corrections be made as alterations, and not as amendments, which was granted, and the journal was corrected accordingly.

The minutes, as corrected, were then approved.

MR. CARLILE asked and obtained leave to read a letter, addressed by a citizen of Kanawha county to a member of the convention.

The letter gave a very favorable account of the strength of the Union sentiment in that section.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved a reconsideration of the vote yesterday, by which the gentlemen from Loudon was refused a seat in the convention. He followed up the motion with some remarks renewing that gentleman's claims.

This proposition elicited a discussion in which several gentlemen took part, which was finally cut short by the moving of the previous question. The call for the previous question was sustained. The question on suspending the rules to allow the reconsideration of the vote, being then put, the motion to reconsider was rejected.

So the Convention still refused to admit the gentleman from Loudon to a seat.

MR. CALDWELL, of Marshall, asked and obtained leave of absence till Monday.

MR. LAMB, Chairman of the Committee on Credentials, then obtained permission to say that the Committee having examined the credentials of all the members present, announced the fact that no member had been admitted to a seat on this floor, who did not represent a large and substantial vote of his county. The Committee paid but little attention to mere forms, but they did act on the rule in regard to substantial constituencies.

The order of the day being the Declaration of the Committee, it was then taken up.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved that the Declaration as altered, be reprinted for the use of the members. Adopted.

On motion of MR. FROST, of Jackson, the order of the day was passed by, and made the special order for Monday at eleven o'clock, and each day thereafter until disposed of.

MR. FLESHER, of Jackson county, submitted the following resolution, which was appropriately referred.

Resolved, That all levies or orders made by any county or corporation court in this commonwealth for the purpose of raising money for arming, assisting or supporting the rebel army of this State or the so-called Southern Confederacy is a gross usurpation of power—sapping the very foundations of our liberties, requiring money to be levied from free citizens to support the enemies of our government in their acts of cruelty and butchery.

Be it, therefore, Ordained, That all such levies or orders shall be null and void and shall not be collected by any of the officers of the Commonwealth.

MR. FLESHER said he offered this resolution more especially from having understood that the Jackson County Court had ordered a levy of $3,000 for the support of the rebel soldiers who have enlisted from that county in the service of the Southern Confederacy.

On motion, the Convention then adjourned to Monday morning at ten o'clock.

THE SIXTH DAY,

MONDAY, JUNE 17, 1861.

The Convention assembled at the appointed hour.

The session was opened with prayer by Rev. R. V. Dodge, of Wheeling.

The minutes of Saturday were read and approved.

MR. HOOTON, of Preston, said he deemed it due to the Convention as well as to Dr. Parsons, of Tucker, (now absent) to state that the reason of his absence was that he was confined to his room by indisposition, but that he was now much better and would be in his seat in a few days.

The hour of eleven not having yet arrived and there being no business pressing, Mr. Carlile suggested that the order of the day be now taken up. There being no objection the Declaration of Rights, which had been made the order of the day for eleven, was taken up and the Convention proceeded to its consideration.

The Declaration was read by the Secretary, after which

MR PIERPONT, of Marion, said: (The speech of Mr. Pierpont here, has been because of its length, inserted in this work as APPENDIX A, following the Journal of the regular session of this Convention—V. A. L.)

MR. CARLILE followed in a few remarks, expressing the hope that a vote would be taken at once.

The question on the adoption of the Declaration was then demanded.

MR. DORSEY called for the yeas and nays, which call was sustained, with the understanding that members now absent have an opportunity of recording their votes on their return to the Convention. It was further suggested and concurred in, that the publication of the names be deferred until the full vote of the Convention was obtained.

MR. DORSEY subsequently withdrew the call, to make way for a motion to pass the Declaration to its engrossment, prior to its being put upon its final passage.

The motion prevailed, and it was ordered to be engrossed on parchment.

The Convention then took a recess until two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at the appointed hour.

MR. CARLILE, from the Committee on Business, reported an ordinance for the appointment of State officers, which was read.

On motion of Chester D. Hubbard, it was ordered to lie on the table, and that the usual number of copies be printed.

MR. FROST, of Jackson, moved that the Declaration of Rights be now taken up and put upon its final passage.

The Declaration was read by the Secretary.

MR. DORSEY called for the yeas and nays, with the understanding that as the absentees came in they be allowed to record their votes.

The yeas and nays on the adoption of the Declaration were then taken, and resulted, yeas fifty-six, nays none.

On motion of MR. CARLILE, Thursday next, was fixed as the day for the signing of this Declaration.

MR. CARLILE remarked that this vote just taken exhibited a happy coincidence, and one that he hailed as an auspicious omen. 'We have," he said, "Fifty-six votes recorded in favor of our Declaration, and we may remember that there were just fifty-six signers to the Declaration of Independence." (Great applause and feeling throughout the Hall.)

The Convention then adjourned.

THE SEVENTH DAY,

TUESDAY, JUNE 18, 1861.

The Convention assembled at ten in the morning, and was opened with prayer by Rev. Wesley Smith.

The minutes of Monday were read and approved.

MR. PARSONS, of Tucker, took occasion to explain the cause of his absence, and asked to record his vote in favor of the Declaration of Rights passed by the Convention yesterday. A number of gentlemen who had come in since yesterday's session also came forward, and without exception cast their votes in its favor, among others, James G. West, of Wetzel county, who first took the oath of office, he having heretofore been detained from attending.

MR. CARLILE, from the Committee on Business, reported the following amendment to the Ordinance for the re-organization of the State Government: In the 36th line to strike out all after the word "appointed," and insert: "by the Governor, he shall at once fill the vacancy without writ, but if such officer be appointed otherwise than by the Governor, or by election, the writ shall be issued and directed to the other appointing power requiring it to fill the vacancy."

The amendment was adopted.

MR. CARLILE, from the Committee on Business, reported the following resolution, with a recommendation that it pass:

Whereas, The great and lesser seals of the Commonwealth are in possession of the late Executive of the State, and whereas it is necessary for the dispatch of public business, that seals should be provided, therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of five persons be appointed to procure a great and lesser seal for the Commonwealth, that shall correspond with the great and lesser seals, respectively, now in possession of the late Executive of the State, with the addition on each seal on obverse and reverse sides, of these words, "Liberty and Union."

The resolution was adopted.

The following gentlemen were appointed the committee provided for in the resolution: John S. Carlile, of Harrison; D. D. T. Farnsworth, of Upshur; E. H. Caldwell, of Marshall; H. H. Withers, of Gilmer; Chas. B. Waggener, of Mason.

MR. CARLILE, from the same Committee, also reported the following:

ORDINANCE TO AUTHORIZE THE APPREHENDING OF SUSPICIOUS PERSONS IN TIME OF WAR.

The People of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain that the Sixth and Seventh Sections of the Seventeenth chapter of the Code of Virginia be amended and re-enacted to read as follows:

The Governor may cause to be apprehended and secured, or may compel to depart from this State, all suspicious subjects or citizens of any foreign State or power at war with the United States.

And whereas, The Convention at Richmond have declared the union between the State of Virginia and the other States, under the Constitution of the United States, to be dissolved; and have attempted to transfer the allegiance of the People of this State to an illegal confederacy of rebellious States, called the Confederate States of America; claiming that the State of Virginia and the said Confederate States are rightfully and in fact foreign States or powers in reference to the United States: Now, therefore, all persons in this Commonwealth adhering to and supporting the said Convention at Richmond, or the said Confederate States; or professing to owe allegiance or obedience to the same, shall be deemed, (for the purposes of this Ordinance only,) subjects or citizens of a foreign State or power at war with the United States.

The Governor may send for the person and papers of any such person, within this State, in order to obtain information to enable him to act in such cases.

Any warrant or order of the Governor under this Ordinance may be directed to any Sheriff or other officer, civil or military, and shall be executed according to the terms thereof by such officer, who shall have all the powers necessary for the purpose, either in or out of his county or corporation.

2. If the Governor shall have just cause to believe that any persons in this State, claiming to be subjects or citizens of the said Confederate States, or adhering to and supporting the said Convention or the said Confederate States, or professing to owe allegiance or obedience to the same, are about to assemble together, or have assembled together, for the purpose of drilling or receiving military instruction, or to organize themselves as a military force, or to attempt any military operation, or do any act which may endanger the safety or welfare of the good people of this Commonwealth or any portion of the same; he may cause such assemblage to be prevented or dispersed, and the persons who may be about to assemble or have assembled as aforesaid, to be apprehended and secured, or may compel them to depart from this State; and for this purpose he may issue his warrant or order directed to any Sheriff or other officer civil or military, which warrant or order shall be executed as aforesaid, and any assemblage of two or more persons for any purpose inimical to the government of the United States, or of this State as organized by this Convention, shall be deemed an unlawful assemblage, and the persons so offending may be proceeded against and punished as provided in chapter 195 of the Code of Virginia.

3. If any Sheriff or other person shall transmit or pay any money, or any check, draft, bill, or order, note or certificate for the payment of money, to any officer or other person at Richmond or elsewhere, for the use of the said Confederate States, or of the illegal State Government at Richmond, now waging war against the United States; or shall furnish any money, arms, military equipments or ammunitions of war, or other aid or support, to the said Confederate States, or State Government, or to any military force under the control or direction of the same, or to any person or persons about to join any such military force; the Governor may cause to be apprehended and secured, or may cause to depart from this State, the Sheriff or other person guilty of such offence, and for this purpose may issue his warrant or order and cause the same to be executed as hereinbefore provided.

4. This Ordinance shall take effect from its passage, and may be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

MR. FLESHER, of Jackson, moved that the ordinance be laid on the table, and the usual number printed, which motion was adopted.

MR. CARLILE, from the same Committee, reported another ordinance as follows:

AN ORDINANCE FIXING THE COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS THEREIN MENTIONED.

1. The People of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain that the compensation of the several officers herein mentioned shall be as follows:

Of the Governor, at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum;

Of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, at the rate of fifteen hundred dollars per annum;

Of the Auditor of Public Accounts, at the rate of two thousand dollars per annum;

Of the Treasurer, at the rate of fifteen hundred dollars per annum;

Of the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Delegates, and the President of this Convention, eight dollars to each for every day's attendance;

Of the other members of the Senate, House of Delegates, and of this Convention, four dollars to each one for every day's attendance; but no person shall receive compensation for the same day both as a member of this Convention and of the Legislature;

Of the Secretary of this Convention, eight dollars for each day's attendance, out of which he is to pay his assistant;

Of the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this Convention, and the Sergeant-at-Arms for the Legislature, four dollars for each day's attendance; and one dollar and fifty cents per day for each door keeper and police officer employed, and fifty cents per day for each of the pages.

2. The Secretary of the Commonwealth, Auditor of Public Accounts and Treasurer, shall once at least in every quarter, submit to the Governor their several accounts for office expenses, including printing, stationery, blank books, fuel and other things necessary for the transaction of their official business; which accounts when approved by the Governor, and such approval certified in writing, shall be allowed and paid. All expenses incurred by the Governor in transaction of his official business shall be submitted to the Auditor of Public Accounts, in the same manner as other claims against the State.

3. The members of the Senate and House of Delegates shall be allowed mileage at the rate of ten cents for every mile of necessary travel, to be computed by the nearest and most direct route from their several residences to the city of Wheeling.

4. This Ordinance shall take effect from its passage, and may be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

On motion of MR. NICHOLLS, of Brooke, the ordinance was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

MR. FARNSWORTH, of Upshur, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That one of the great objects of this Convention reorganizing the State Government, is that we may place the same in a position of legality to the United States, in order that we may soon be able by Constitutional legislation to separate ourselves from our oppressors in Eastern Virginia and be admitted a new and separate State in the glorious union of States.

MR. FARNSWORTH explained that his object in introducing this resolution was to show to the people by an authorized expression of the Convention that it intended to take such steps as would create a new State, and to show the object in taking the steps the Convention was now taking.

MR. CALDWELL thought the resolution a proper one and that it was at once a courtesy and due to the Federal Government that something like this indicated in this resolution should be communicated to the President of the United States and his Cabinet, as an expression of the views and intentions of this Convention.

MR. FROST moved the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Business. He had no objection to the resolution or the spirit of it. It seemed to him that every step yet taken contemplated the separation of the State.

MR. DORSEY said it was well known that he had been advocating this new State movement as earnestly as he knew how, but after mature consideration of the subject, and after having had several resolutions like the one under consideration submitted to his consideration in private, he had come to the conclusion that it would be exceedingly inappropriate for this Convention at the present time in the present stage of its proceedings to pass such a resolution, since "by doing so we are anticipating," said he, "the future action of the Legislature of Virginia, as well as of this Convention This is not the proper time to make a proposition or a division of the State. We have all agreed upon that matter in private conversation, and the public discussion that have been had upon this subject. It does seem to me that if we desire a division of the State, the proper method to be pursued would be to proceed with the business now in hand, and when the State government is fully organized, then such propositions as this may be submitted. This announcement may seem to be incongruous with my former position. I think, however, the plan I proposed looked to just such an arrangement. After deliberating on the course I proposed myself, and that proposed by this resolution, I have thought it would be exceedingly imprudent to urge this matter at the present time. I hope my friend from Upshur will see proper to withdraw that resolution. He knows that I am an unyielding advocate for the division of the State, and I assure him, as I assure the Convention, that I shall not be satisfied as an individual, until that shall be accomplished."

MR. NICHOLLS, of Brooke, said that he understood the object of the resolution to be to give to our constituents at home, some evidence of the tone of the sentiment of this Convention, touching this question of a division of the State. He thought the remarks made in the discussion on that very subject, and which had gone forth in the public prints, ought to give abundant assurance to them of what the sentiment here was upon that subject . He agreed with his friend from Monongalia, that the Convention should not at this time take any hasty steps, touching that matter. Still, if the gentleman from Upshur should persist, he would favor the reference of the resolution to the proper committee, that they might deliberately weigh it, and report before they take any action on the resolution.

MR CARLILE supposed his friend from Upshur was not present the other day when this matter was discussed on the proposition of the gentleman from Monongalia. "So far as I know, we all agree with him in desiring a division of the State, but how is it to be done? It can be done only by virtue of a provision of the Constitution of the U. S., and how can that be had now? That provision makes it necessary for us to obtain the assent of the Legislature of the State, and where is the Legislature, recognized as such, that can give its assent? It is no longer under the protection, or entitled to the provision, of the Constitution of the United States. It is now out of our power to effect a separation, if every man, woman and child in the State should give their consent. There is no Legislature yet that acknowledges its fealty to the Constitution of the United States. Therefore, what we desire is simply an impossibility at this time. If it be our purpose to divide the State at some future time—and it certainly is my purpose—we are taking the only course in which it can be accomplished. Once get the government which we propose to organize here acknowledged by the Federal Government as the government of Virginia, and then you have a Legislature that can constitutionally assent to this separation. Now you have it not. Even if the Legislature that acknowledges its allegiance to the Southern Confederacy were to give its assent it would not be worth a piece of blank paper. The soil and people of Virginia are to all intents and purposes, so far as her State authorities are concerned, transferred to the Confederate States, and that so-called Confederacy can only consent to the transferrence of any portion of the soil of that so-called Confederacy, to a power with whom they can treat. Now, Sir, the Federal Government and the loyal people of Virginia do not acknowledge that transfer. This rebellion must be crushed out, or it must be successful, and a treaty had between it and the United States, acknowledging its independence, before they can enter into any treaty.

But the method we are pursuing is the easiest, the only practicable mode by which the objects we have at heart can ever be accomplished, and such declarations as are contained in this resolution, do nothing in the world but throw obstacles and embarrassments in the way of accomplishing this separation.

The great question now foremost in the minds of all is the preservation of our Union and the perpetuity of the Federal Government. So long as our efforts are directed to this we have the sympathy of the twenty millions of loyal people who sympathize with us. Therefore it being impossible to accomplish our object now, a persistence must tend only to array against us an influence against our recognition of the Government.

And, Sir, where is the great bulk of the bonds of this $49,000.-000 of public debt? It is held in the great centre of capital, New York. If the holders were to suppose that a recognition of us, as a separate State, would diminish their securities, possibly their interests might come in conflict with their patriotism, and we would have the influence of this lobby at Washington against our recognition. Now, Sir, let us from this time forward say nothing more upon this subject. Let us wait until we are recognized as part and parcel of the United States, and as the lawful authorities of Virginia.

I regret that we have to postpone this subject of a separation for an hour, but high above all else, is the perpetuity of the Union. What would a separation be worth—what would an admission as a new State into the Union be worth, if that Union should hereafter be destroyed? Let us then direct all our energies solely at this hour, more especially to preserving and maintaining the government."

MR. VAN WINKLE said the public expectation in the Western counties had been turned to this Convention, as if its only business were to separate Eastern from Western Virginia. It had been the predominant expectation up to, and even since, the assembling of the Convention. "But, we come here, and we find that it is necessary for us to take an entire different course of action. That course we are progressing with. There can be no doubt as to the propriety of re-organizing a government for the whole State. I saw and spoke of the difficulties in the way of a division of the State, from our geographical position and other circumstances—as [you] gentlemen will remember. But is it not due to the constituents of many of the members, that there should be some authorized, expression by the Convention on this subject, exhibiting the reasons that induced us to abandon a course which, it was supposed, we were about to adopt, and to explain to them that their representatives have yielded to a necessity in postponing their views? In my opinion, if it had been practicable, for other reasons, to have made the separation, there is nothing in all this constitutional provision to have hindered us for a moment."

MR. CARLILE said if their constituents at home should see by the discussions in this body, the reasons that have influenced their representatives to postpone their wishes, then they would be satisfied with the same reasons that satisfied their representatives. He was sure he had no constituents more anxious for the time to arrive for a separation than he was. When they should see the gentleman from Monongalia representing a county where the vote was taken on this subject, and which gave 801 votes in favor of a division of the State, and coming from a constituency representing such views—when they see him yielding to the necessity which all feel, will not they be satisfied without an official report from a committee of this body?

MR. BURDETT had no objection to the resolution. "The world knows we are looking ulteriorly to a division of this State.—Wall street will know it despite all your efforts to cover it up. The lobby interest will be in Washington just the same, and you will have to fight that anyhow." He did not think that any serious obstacle would then be thrown in the way. He did object, however, to the reporting of every little resolution reported here, to the President of the United States. He and his cabinet had enough more important business to engross them. A better plan would be, at the conclusion of the labors of this Convention, to send them a copy of its journals.

MR. CARLILE suggested that if this resolution was to be pressed, a special committee should be raised, and that it be referred to them.

MR. FROST said the object of the resolution was simply to get an official expression from the Convention. He knew the people expected some authoritative expression of the opinions and views of this Convention. The course of the Convention, however, a reconstruction of the State government, was the only practical movement that could be made in the premises. He would withdraw his motion, and move that a special committee of five be raised, to whom the resolution should be referred. He suggested that the committee thus raised should prepare an address to the people of Virginia.

MR. CARLILE said, that as they were now assuming to act for the Union men of the whole State, those men in many parts of the State would be embarrassed by such action, as we are here proposing, looking to a separation from them. The argument would be employed against them, that they were acknowledging the authority of a State government which looked to the dismemberment of the State.

MR. FROST said he was not in favor of a separation of the State, unless it were necessary. He hoped they might never be driven to that result.

MR. DORSEY, of Monongalia, moved that the resolution lie upon the table. He withdrew the motion, however, to make way for his colleague, Mr. Snider, who obtained leave to read the following resolution:

Resolved, That the geographical position and business and social relations of Western Virginia, are such, that her vital interests demand a division of the State; that the proper time to make such demand will be when Virginia has a legally constituted Legislature; and that then we will use our utmost endeavors to consummate that division.

MR. SNIDER declared that he was uncompromisingly for a division of the State, and nineteen-twentieths of the constituency he represented were equally so.

MR. BARNS, of Marion, also read a resolution (it being out of order to submit it,) as follows:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient at this time to take into consideration the subject of a division of the State.

MR. HUBBARD said that the case before the people of the Northwest, was no longer one of choice, or even preference, but had become a matter of duty. "We are not here to create a State, but to save one; not here to create a government, but to help save a government. Let us go forward in the great work, and not higgle about what our taxes will be hereafter, or questions of that character. Let us save this government, let us save Virginia, and then save the Union; for the banner we are lifting up here, will be the banner for the salvation of the country. As the arms of the government go forward and rescue our State from revolution, we must save what they gain. I hope we shall say nothing more now about the division of the State; our first and highest object is to perpetuate the Union and the government, and the next to rescue and save Virginia. If we find in the future that we cannot remain in the State, and that we can do better to separate, I shall be as willing as any other man. I believe this movement will not stop with Virginia, but will spread all over the seceded States, as they are delivered from the military despotism that now rules them. Let us not fall short of our duty in this hour or hesitate in the course which is before us, as true men. Let us go forward as Virginia in the Union."

MR. NICHOLLS followed in some remarks. He said when they had come to discuss grave constitutional questions which cover this whole subject of separation, they saw that at this time—there was no member of the Convention but what saw—that there is a constitutional barrier in the way of this Convetnion meeting the first wish of their people for a separation of the State. That question was settled in the minds of the members of this Convention. When the Government shall have been rescued from anarchy and destruction, perhaps the causes of which they complained in the East, might be removed, and the necessity for the separation have disappeared.

MR. FARNSWORTH said that in offering the resolutions he merely wanted the people to know by some expression of the Convention that we were in earnest, when we said to them before we left our homes that we would go for a division of the State at the proper time. "I know it is out of their power to understand the will of the Convention as we understand it without an expression of some kind. The resolution does not contemplate for a moment to create a new State at this time, but only to let the people know why it is that we are re-organizing the State government for the whole State —and Mr. President, if we are afraid to show our hands to the people we represent, our cause must be a poor one." Nevertheless he would withdraw the resolution as he found serious objection was made to it.

MR. VANCE, of Harrison, hoped he would not withdraw it. His people, he said, were in favor of an immediate division of the State. They had sent him there to assist in accomplishing that purpose. But they did not all understand how it was to be done. Some thought the Convention could do it; but it could not be done without the consent of the Legislature. When the Legislature should meet it was his desire, and that of his constituents, to divide the State, and he would then use every effort to accomplish what they desire. He hoped the motion to lie on the table would be voted down, and the resolution would take the direction indicated by the gentleman from Jackson.

MR. TARR regretted very much to see the course the debate had taken. The first inquiry should be, have we a State Government? "If not, let us first procure the endorsement of the Federal Government and then provide the ways and means for a division of the State. Many gentlemen who have seats here, represent counties lying along the borders of Maryland, which are very desirous of being connected with Western Virginia. Perhaps in the division of the State we will secure the counties bordering on Maryland. It may be that we should attach ourselves to the State of Maryland. We all know that our territory is small—that the taxes that may be collected from it will be barely sufficient to cover our ordinary expenses. If we should add to this the portion of the State debt which we would be bound in fairness to pay, it will make our taxes burdensome.—But, Sir, I have reason to know that the Federal Government is entirely opposed to any division of the State, and I think there is no gentleman on the floor of this Convention who can assure me from any authority whatever, that the Federal Government will recognize any division at all.—Are we so strong that we shall dictate our terms to the Federal Government? Or must we not rather act in obedience to their wishes. And I submit to my friends who are in favor of this precipitate action, that this motion now be laid on the table; but before that proposition is submitted to a vote, I move, for the purpose of having some opportunity to canvass this question, that the Convention take a recess till two o'clock."

MR. CARLILE—"Will my friend from Brooke withdraw the motion for a recess for a moment?"

MR. TARR—"Certainly."

MR. CARLILE then announced that the Convention had been invited to visit the soldiers and officers at Bellaire, and witness a dress parade, during the evening, and that Mr. Ford, the Agent of the B. & O. R. R., had kindly provided a special train for their accommodation, and that, as the train would start at half past three, he suggested that the Convention, when it adjourn, should adjourn till to-morrow.

MR. CARLILE continued: "In relation to this thing of dividing, I find that even I, who first started the little stone down the mountain, have now to apply the rubbers to other gentlemen who have outrun me in the race, to check their impetuosity. Those who know what I have done in behalf of this movement, and would do now, if practicable, know that it is from no lack of sympathy with their desire, that I am now drawing the brakes. I believe I know the people of Harrison county, and of all the counties of Northwestern Virginia, for in some capacity I have served them nearly all, except these Panhandle counties—and they know just as well as we do, and have probably found it out a little in advance of us, that at this time a division of the State cannot be effected, for the reason which they see in the Constitution of the United States, that it is only through it, and by virtue of its provisions, that a division can be had. They know another thing, too, that a separation is worth nothing without the perpetuity of the Government to which we desire to attach ourselves, and that they must first address themselves to maintaining the Government."

MR. VANCE: "We are perfectly aware, and so are the people, that the first object is to maintain the government and secure its perpetuity; but the resolution does not contemplate that the State be divided unil that be accomplished. What we want is to show that this is the ulterior object."

MR. CARLILE: "I do not think it necessary to declare that I am of the same opinion that I was thirty, or sixty, or ninety days ago. When I change my views on this subject, then I shall take occasion to announce them in the proper way. But why, at this time, when we are surrounded by most embarrassing circumstances, add to our embarrassments? Why create obstacles? Why build up barriers that may not come in our way if we but take proper time for action? The truth should always be spoken when we speak at all. But the whole truth should not always be spoken. There are times when men should keep their mouths closed. What if we do contemplate a division of the State, would it forward that object to promulgate the declaration in a special and authorative manner?

In an hour like this when the question is: Shall we save the State; when we are particularly helpless to save it ourselves; when the very Government itself has by this rebellion been bankrupted; when it is engaged in this death struggle to maintain its own existence, and when we have come here to aid, if we can, this effort of the Government in this struggle,—why should we now be discussing that which is utterly impossible and which more belongs to days of peace than to the hours of war? That is the question to put to ourselves. If we could divide the State to-day, who would desire to do so under existing circumstances. In a short time the power of this Government may be established. Then we may be acknowledged as the Government of Virginia; then we can provide for that which is essential to our interest. If peace is to be banished for long years from our borders, what does it matter whether we are separated from the East or not? Separation is to enable us to promote our interests in time of peace. Separation in time of war amounts to nothing.

There is no man within the limits of this State that is more thoroughly convinced than I am and have been for long years, of the necessity of this separation. There is no power on earth that can prevent it. But it cannot take place now, and we are but embarrassing our movements, which must first be addressed to the perpetuity of the government and the maintenance of our free institutions before we can act on what is and must be a secondary consideration. I do trust this discussion which has occupied so much of our time will be allowed to wait till the time comes for action.—'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.'

And now, Sir, with a Southern army advancing upon us in two columns, we know not how soon we may have to close our doors and discussions here, and seek safety elsewhere; when we are striving now to resist this attempt at transferring us to a rebellious government, shall we be distracted with issues of secondary importance, as all must admit this question of a separation to be at this hour?"

The question "Shall the main question be put?" having been decided in the affirmative the main question "Shall the resolution lie on the table?" was then put.

MR. VANCE demanded the yeas and nays. The question being then taken by yeas and nays resulted as follows:

YEAS:—Jno. H. Atkinson, Jno. S. Barns, J. J. Brown, George W. Broski, H. W. Crothers, Wm. L. Crawford, Jno. S. Carlile, W. B. Crane, J. T. Close, James Carskadon, W. H. Copley, D. B. Dorsey, O. D. So the resolution was laid on the table.

GEORGE HARRISON, of Ohio, offered the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased the God of Nations and of Battles, in His inscrutable wisdom, to remove from our midst in these our days of peril and trial, the distinguished Senator of Illinois, Stephen A. Douglas, whose patriotic devotion and principles have endeared his memory to our hearts, and whose loss we deplore and regard as a national calamity. Be it, therefore, by the people of Virginia, in solemn Convention assembled:

Resolved, That this Convention has heard with feelings of the deepest sorrow and regret of the recent demise of the patriotic and distinguished Senator of Illinois, Stephen A. Douglas—a man who, when our present unhappy troubles commenced, regardless of party predilections, stood among the first and foremost in defence of the laws and Constitution of this great Union, thereby still further gaining our love and admiration.

2. That we sincerely sympathize with the widow and children of the deceased Senator under their severe affliction, and as a testimonial of our regard and esteem, that these resolutions be entered on the minutes of the proceedings, and a copy, signed by the President and Secretary of this Convention, be forwarded to the family.

On motion, the Convention then adjourned.

THE EIGHTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1861.

The Convention assembled at the usual hour, and was opened with prayer by Rev. J. T. McLure of this city.

The minutes of the preceding day were read and adopted.

The reports of Committees were called for. There being none to offer,

MR. CALDWELL, of Marshall, suggested that as there were several members present this morning who had been absent at the time the vote was taken on the Declaration or Rights, an opportunity be afforded them to record their votes.

The several gentlemen referred to announced their votes without exception in favor of the adoption of the Declaration.

MR. VANCE, of Harrison, arose to a privileged question. He desired to call the attention of the Convention to the character of the report of yesterday's proceedings of this Convention in the Intelligencer of this morning. The report in some portions was meager and unsatisfactory. If the reporter attempts to report anything here he should report it correctly or not at all. They would find in the report that the remarks made by gentlemen in favor of the motion offered by the gentleman from Upshur, but partially and incorrectly reported. On the other hand, the remarks of the gentlemen who spoke in opposition to the adoption of the motion are reported fully and correctly. This was calculated to leave a wrong impression on the minds of those who read the printed report, and were not present in the Convention. This was a species of partiality which should not be exhibited by any reporter; and, if this partiality was to be shown here and in this way the sooner the people know it the better. From the remarks of gentlemen as reported it would seem that the members advocating the resolution were attempting to embarrass the Convention, and the report does not relieve them from that imputation.

"I now say to the reporter, that he will either report me correctly or not at all. I do not particularly desire to be reported. I did not come here to make speeches, but for the good of my people; but I do hope hereafter that if he attempts to report anything at all he will report it correctly.

I would just say that the gentleman from Upshur gave many very good reasons in support of his resolution, and they were not noticed at all. Speeches of certain gentlemen were not noticed at all, while those of others were given almost word for word."[6]

MR. CARLILE asked that the order of the day be taken up.

The order of the day, being the Ordinance for the Reorganization of the State government, was taken up.

MR. CARLILE wished to amend the third section by striking out in

6. To this criticism of Mr. Vance, Mr. Archibald W. Campbell made editorial reply, as follows:

"Mr. Vance, of Harrison, yesterday called the attention of the Convention to the fact that the debates, as reported in the Intelligencer were not full; and, as he said, were partial. He made the point against us that those who were opposed to Mr. Farnsworth's resolution, or rather those who were in favor of laying it on the table were reported much more at length than those who were not.

Mr. Vance is probably under the impression that we are publishing an official report of the debates, under pay from the Convention. If so, we beg to undeceive him. We are under no obligations to publish a word of the debates. Our reports are our private enterprise, undertaken at our own suggestion, and at our own expense. We are at liberty just to publish or omit as we please, or condense or abbreviate just as our space compels us. We publish our reports as full as we can, and where we cannot, we make that which is valuable and interesting take precedence over that which is not. It is simply a physical impossibility for us to publish verbatim reports, though we usually take them verbatim. We, therefore, content ourselves with such a summary as will be most interesting to the public, and afford them the best information of what transpires.

On the point concerning Mr. Farnsworth's resolution, we have this to say: If we had consulted our own desires, we should just have reversed the fullness of our report, for we were very sorry to see that resolution go to the table, being well persuaded that it ought to have gone to a special committee, as was desired, by the mover.

With these remarks, we trust that we have satisfied the criticism of Mr. Vance."

the sentence beginning in the eleventh line, after the word "offices," the word "for" and insert, "from the passage of this ordinance until the end of."

The amendment was concurred in.

MR. CALDWELL moved that the ordinance be taken up and voted on section by section which was agreed to.

The Secretary read the first section.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved to amend the section, by inserting in the third line, after the word "office," the words "for six months or;" and by adding at the end of the section the words "and the General Assembly is hereby required to provide by law for the election of Governor and Lieutenant Governor, by the people, as soon as in their judgment such election can be properly held."

The amendments were concurred in, and the section passed.

The second section was read.

MR. HOOTON enquired if any provision for the compensation of the members of the Council created by this section, was made. He moved that the word "five" before the word "members;" be stricken out in the first line of the section, and the word "three" inserted instead.

MR. CARLILE hoped the gentleman would withdraw that motion. He thought five none too many, and hoped dollars and cents would not be allowed to deprive the governor of assistance so much needed. He continued at some length, to urge the necessity of retaining that number.

MR. HOOTON consented to withdraw his motion.

MR. BURDETT moved that the section be amended by providing "that such council ex officio shall constitute a board of public works." He subsequently withdrew the motion at the request of other members.

The second section was then passed, and the third section read.

MR. FROST moved to recur to the first section and amend it by inserting the words "Attorney-General," after the words Lieutenant Governor. The amendment was agreed to and the section was so amended, also the amendment in which the same words occur.

MR. VAN WINKLE inquired what would be the effect of adopting these amendments in this manner. Had they not better resolve themselves into a committee of the whole, in order that after all the amendments were adopted, the whole ordinance as such could be adopted.

THE CHAIR stated if they proceeded to amend each section by general consent, as they were doing, without adopting them separately, the vote could then, when the amendments were completed, be taken on it as a whole.

The Secretary re-read the third section, and there being no amendments proposed it was passed and the fourth was read.

MR. CRAWFORD, of Hancock, moved to strike out in the 20th line the word "volunteers" and insert the words "officers and privates of volunteer companies."

The amendment was concurred in.

MR. WEST moved to amend by adding after the word "duties" in the 22d line the words, "provided, however, that any person having voted for the ordinance of secession shall be ineligible to hold any post of office or honor, public or private, civil or military, in this State during the existence of hostilities by the seceding States against the general government of the United States of America."

MR. LAMB objected to the amendment..

A lengthy discussion followed, Mr. West and his colleague, Mr. Martin, advocating the proposition, and Messrs. Carlile, Flesher, Pierpont, Berkshire, Johnson of Preston, Roberts and others opposing.

The previous question was finally called by Mr. Vance.

The main question, being on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. West, having been ordered to be put.

MR. WEST demanded the yeas and nays. The demand was sustained, and the yeas and nays being taken resulted as follows:

YEAS:—Messrs. Brumfield, Close, Douglas, Harrison, Hawxhurst, Reuben Martin, Mason, C. W. Smith, West, and Jas. W. Williamson—10.

NAYS:—Messrs. Atkinson, W. J. Boreman, Bowen, Barns, Berkshire, Brown, Burdett, Broski, Barrick, Crothers, Crawford, Carlile, W. B. Crane, S. Crane, Caldwell, Carskadon, Copley, Dorsey, Davidson, Downey, Evans, Ferrell, Farnsworth, Flesher, Fast, Frost, Fleming, Graham, Hale, Hubbard, Hagans, Hooton, Howard, Johnson, Kramer, Logan, Lamb, Lightburn, Love, H. S. Martin, Moss, Morris, Nicholls, Newman, Porter, Pierpont, Polsley, Price, Paxton, Parsons, Ritchie, Roberts, F. Smith, J. H. Shuttleworth, Scott, Snider, Swan, B. F. Shuttleworth, Tarr, Trout, Vance, Van Winkle, Withers, Wetzel, Wilson, Waggener, Zinn, Mr. President, (A. I Boreman)—66.

ABSENT:—Messrs. Davis, Foley, Gist, Laidley, Michael, Ratcliffe, J. L. Smith, Stuart, Taft, Todd, Watson, and Jas. A. Williamson—12.

So the amendment was rejected.

MR. CALDWELL made a proposition to amend the 20th line of the same section, but afterwards withdrew it.

The 5th section was read.

MR. BOREMAN, of Tyler, proposed to insert, in the 30th line, after the word "do," the words "or adhere to the Convention assembled at Richmond on the 13th of February, 1861, by the former Executive of this Commonwealth." He, however, after an extended discussion, in which a strong opposition was elicited, withdrew the amendment.

The question upon the adoption of the entire ordinance, as amended, was then ordered.

MR. LAMB called for the yeas and nays, but afterwards withdrew the call.

MR. CRANE, of Tucker, wished to inquire if it had been ascertained that the Federal Government would sustain the action the Convention was taking. He did not propose to shrink from his part, but merely wished to suggest the inquiry.

After a good deal of general discussion as to the propriety of taking the vote before an adjournment, and as to filling the blank in the ordinance naming the time at which the Legislature should be convened, the Chair having stated that the vote could be taken and the blank filled afterwards, the question on the adoption of the ordinance as a whole was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted as follows:

YEAS:—Messrs. Atkinson, Boreman, Bowen, Barns, Berkshire, Brown, Burdett, Brumfield, Broski, Barrick, Crothers, Crawford, Carlile, W. B. Crane, S. Crane, Close, Caldwell, Carskadon, Copley, Dorsey, Douglas, Davidson, Downey, Evans, Ferrell, Farnsworth, Fast, Flesher, Fleming, Frost, Graham, Hale, Harrison, Hagans, Hooton, Howard, Hawxhurst, Johnson, Kramer, Lamb, Lightburn, Love, Henry S. Martin, Reuben Martin, Logan, Moss, Mason, Morris, Nicholls, Newman, Porter, Pierpont, Polsley, Price, Paxton, Parsons, Ritchie, Roberts, Fontain Smith, C. W. Smith, J. H. Shuttleworth, Scott, Snider, Swan, B. F. Shuttleworth, Tarr, Trout, Van Winkle, West, Withers, Wetzel, Jas. W. Williamson, Wilson, Waggener, Zinn, Mr. President, (A. I. Boreman)—76.

NAYS:—None.

ABSENT:—Messrs. Davis, Foley, Gist, Hubbard, Laidley, Michael, Ratcliffe, J. L. Smith, Stuart, Taft, Todd, Vance, Watson and James A. Williamson—14.

THE CHAIR stated that those now absent could have an opportunity of recording their vote at any time when they might come in.

The Convention then took a recess until 3 o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at three.

MR. MOSS asked to have his name recorded in favor of the Ordinance adopted in the morning session.

MR. VANCE moved to proceed at once to the election of Governor, the Convention being now authorized to take that step.

MR. CARLILE suggested that the blank in the ordinance should first be filled. He proposed to fill it by inserting the "1st day of July next," which was agreed to.

MR. VANCE renewed his motion, and supported it with some remarks.

MR. CARLILE suggested to-morrow at eleven o'clock as affording a little time for considering so important a matter.

MR. EVANS reminded him that to-morrow at that hour was the time set apart for the signing of the Declaration of Rights. He moved to amend by substituting to-morrow at 2 o'eclock, which was finally agreed to.

MR. PORTER offered the following:

Resolved, That we recommend the immediate organization of volunteer companies in every county represented in this Convention, to support the State Government as organized by this Convention.

The resolution was, after some discussion, put upon its passage, and was adopted.

On motion of MR. CARLILE, the second ordinance, to authorize the apprehending of suspicious persons, &c., was taken up, and the first, second, third, fourth and fifth sections passed, after correcting a few typographical errors.

MR. HUBBARD, of Ohio, asked to have his vote recorded in favor of the adoption of the first ordinance, having been absent at the time the vote was taken.

The sixth section was read.

MR. HARRISON, of Ohio, moved to recur to the fifth section, and amend by inserting in the 18th line, after the word "same," the words, "or refusing to ackonwledge the acts of this Convention as legal."

The proposition provoked a good deal of discussion, and the question being taken on it, it was rejected.

MR. DORSEY then moved to amend the sixth section by adding the words "and if such person be an officer of this Commonwealth, his office shall be declared vacant, and shall be filled according to the law in that case made and provided."

The proposition was discussed at considerable length; the question was taken on its adoption, and it was rejected.

MR. VAN WINKLE offered the following amendment to the same section, and it was agreed to: To insert in the 34th line, after the word "secure," the words "for trial as for misdemeanor."

MR. JOHNSON, of Wetzel, moved that the same words be inserted in the first line of the first section after the word "secured," but afterwards withdrew the motion.

MR. CARLILE with the concurrence of the committee, proposed this additional section which was adopted:

SEC. 7. "That the powers vested in the Governor by this ordinance shall only be exercised upon satisfactory evidence and with the concurrence of a majority of his council."

The question having called on the adoption of the entire ordinance,

MR. VANCE denied the power of the Convetnion to pass such an ordinance. He did not want to make such a star chamber of this Convention as had been done at Richmond. It was a matter that belonged entirely to the Legislature, and should be left for its action. If this Convention was to do all the legislating for the State there was no need of a Legislature at all.

MR. LAMB said, in reply to the objections of the gentleman from Harrison, that by the action of the May Convention, the people had authorized this Convention "to devise such measures and take such action" as the safety and welfare of the people they represent might demand. That was their authority, and they all knew that the exigencies of the times did demand that they should take this action.

MR. BURDETT remarked that in revolutionary times like these, they could not and must not be bound down to the strict letter of laws and constitutions. For his part, he meant to take his part of the responsibility.

The yeas and nays having been demanded, the question on the adoption of the ordinance was then taken, and resulted as follows:

YEAS:—Messrs Atkinson W. J. Boreman, Bowen, Barns, Berkshire, Brown, Burdett, Broski, Barrick, Brumfield, Crawford, Carlile, W. B. Crane, S. Crane, Close, Caldwell, Carskadon, Copley, Dorsey, Davidson, Douglass, Downey, Evans, Ferrell, Farnsworth, Flesher, Fast, Fleming, Frost, Gist, Graham, Hale, Harrison, Hubbard, Hagans, Hooton, Howard, Hawxhurst, Johnson, Kramer, Logan, Lamb, Lightburn, Love, R. Martin, H. S Martin, Moss, Mason, Morris, Newman, Porter, Pierpont, Polsley, Price, Paxton, Ritchie, Roberts, F. Smith, C. W. Smith, J. H. Shuttleworth, Scott, Snider, J. L. Smith, Swan, Stuart, B. F. Shuttleworth, Trout, Van Winkle, Withers, West, Wetzel, Wilson, Waggener, and Zinn—74.

NAYS:—Messrs. Vance, J. W. Williamson, Mr. President, (A. I. Boreman)—3.

ABSENT:—Messrs. Crothers, Davis, Foley, Michael, Nicholls, Parsons, Ratcliffe, Taft, Tarr, Todd and Watson—11.

MR. POLSLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the first ordinance had been adopted, for the purpose of offering a substitute for the fourth section; which substitute he read as follows:

"All officers except members of the Legislature, elected on the 23d of May, 1861, now in the service of the State, or of any county, city, or town thereof, including the Judges and Clerks of the several courts, Sheriffs, Commissioners of the Revenue, Justices of the Peace, Constables, officers of city and municipal corporations, and the officers of the militia volunteer companies of the State, not mustered into the service of the United States, shall be vacated on or after the —— day of ——, or so soon thereafter as their successors shall be elected or appointed, and qualified; and the Governor, Lieut. Governor, Attorney-General and members of the Legislature, and all the aforesaid officers, and all other officers civil or military, hereafter to be elected or appointed, as well as privates of volunteer companies, shall each take the following oath or affirmation, before proceeding to the discharge of their several duties."

This motion was opposed strongly by Messrs. Carlile, Pierpont, Lightburn and others, and after a good deal of debate, Mr. Polsley withdrew it.

At the suggestion of MR. CARLILE, the names of Albert Laidley and James D. Williamson were stricken from the roll.—the former having declined to take the oath and returned home for instructions, and the latter not having made his appearance, and hence as Mr. Carlile explained, neither being at present members of the Convention properly on the list of names.

On motion, the Convention adjourned.

THE NINTH DAY.

THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1861.

The Convention met at the usual hour and was opened with prayer by Rev. David Hervey.

The minutes of the preceding day were read and approved.

JAMES O. WATSON, of Marion, who was in the Convention for the first time, came forward and took the oath of office.

MR. LAMB offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be instructed to procure a suitable book for the recording of the Ordinances of this Convention, the record to be equivalent to the enrollment of said Ordinance.

MR. CARLILE offered the following as additional to the resolution submitted by Mr. Lamb, which was adopted:

Resolved, That all Ordinances passed by this Convention shall be recommitted to the Committee on Business, for revision and correction and when reported back to the Conventions as revised and corrected, they shall be recorded as provided in the foregoing resolution.

MR. DORSEY offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business, be and are hereby instructed to report to the Convention, an Ordinance declaring vacant the offices of all office holders in the Commonwealth, who voted for the Ordinance of Secession passed by the Richmond Convention, which assembled on the 13th of February last.

MR. CRANE, of Tucker, moved to amend the resolution by striking out the word "report," and inserting "enquire into the expediency of reporting."

MR. DORSEY accepted the amendment but subsequently withdrew the acceptance.

MR. CRANE insisted on the amendment.

MR. LAMB arose to a privileged question. He presented the credentials of Henry C. Moore and Duncan M'Laughlin, representatives from Webster county. On his motion the credentials were referred to the Committee on Credentials.

MR. CRANE then proceeded to support his amendment in some remarks. He thought the resolution would not touch many of the cases arrived at, if the resolution merely instructed the committee to vacate the offices of those who voted for the ordinance. There were many persons who did not vote for the ordinance of secession, who now held offices, and were yet secessionists of the worst stamp, and for these men the resolution did not provide. He thought it would be better to wait a short time, when peace might be restored, and the secession forces now terrorizing over the people, driven out of the country, than to take this kind of action now. He thought the resolution looked a little vindictive. In his county, and he doubted not elsewhere, many strong Union men were compelled to vote for the ordinance, who were now as heartily in favor of supporting this movement here and the United States Government as any member on this floor, and as soon as they could be relieved from the presence of the secession soldiery they would make that support effective. This resolution would not be just he thought, to these men. He hoped the Convention would simply authorize the committee to enquire into the expediency of declaring the offices of such persons vacant.

MR. DORSEY said the resolution was intended to meet a case not met by any of the ordinances yet adopted. There might be many who voted for the ordinance of secessinon that would be willing to take the oath prescribed in one of the ordinances of this Convention, but for his part he would not be willing to take the oath of any of them. He denied that such were sound Union men. If they had been they would not have signed the ordinance. They were not as good Union men as he was; for he would not have voted for that ordinance at the point of the sword and bayonet. If they had been good Union men they would not have even looked sideways at that ordinance. As to the objection that the resolution did not provide for all the cases that needed correction, he thought that no reason why they should not provide for any of them. He believed that those who would be left in office, unless this resolution or its equivalent should be adopted, would give them a great deal of trouble. He wanted the offices to be in the hands of good Union men whom they could trust, so there would be no danger of having the authority exercised against the new State government in times of war.

MR. WEST said he felt proud that he had the honor to inaugurate this move in a resolution he had offered yesterday, although that resolution was then voted down and although the gentleman who now offered this resolution, was one of those who opposed its adoption, yet he was not prepared now to make any distinction between his proposition and the one now made. The only difference between the two propositions was, that this one was more stringent than his own—and stringency was the ground on which objection to it had been founded. His resolution only provided that such parties as were therein named, should be debarred from holding office during hostilities.—This one made that provision without limitation. He would vote for the gentleman's resolution in any shape, though it be ever so stringent. He was glad to see that since yesterday there were indications that the Convention was waking up to the importance of arresting those parties who had given evidence of their disloyalty to the United States Government and the Government of Virginia now being re-organized here. For his part, he would shoulder the responsibility of such a course. He in part represented a people who it had been proclaimed in Richmond as a disunion people. He wanted to restore the reputation of that people, and relieve them from the false and odious charge. He would stand up for the people who had sent him here, if he should have to die for it, and he intended the world to know that Wetzel county was not represented in this Convention by Leonard S. Hall. (Applause—suppressed by the Chair.)

He came here under the threat that he would lose his scalp if he did so. He hadn't lost it yet, and did not feel very much terrified about the probability of doing so.—In his county, which gave a Union majority of 700 against the ordinance of secession, all the officers were secessionists.—They held all the machinery of the county government, and used their prerogative for the purpose of annoying and insulting loyal citizens. He insisted that such a condition of things ought to be corrected. He wanted the gentleman to urge the adoption of the resolution, and he would support him in doing so.

The hour of eleven having arrived,

MR. CARLILE demanded the order of the day be taken up.

MR. CRANE moved to suspend the rule in order to postpone the special order until half past eleven. The motion was lost, and the order of the day being the signing of the Declaration of Rights, it was taken up.

MR. VAN WINKLE then offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the mode of signing the Declaration shall be as follows: It shall first be signed by the President in his place, and then by the members of the Convention in the order of their Counties as reported by the Committee on Credentials. The Secretary shall call the name first of the Senator, then of the Delegate or Delegates to the General Assembly and then of the Delegates to the Convention from each county. The person called shall then advance to the table sign his name and return to his seat—all the other members of the Convention remaining seated until their names are called.

The resolution was adopted.

The Declaration, engrossed on parchment was then brought forward and was signed by all the members present—eighty-three—in accordance with the resolution.

THE CHAIR stated that the members now absent could have an opportunity of signing it on their return. On motion of Mr.

Van Winkle, the Secretary was then instructed, after all the members shall have signed the declaration, to certify to the signing, and affix his own signature.

The Convention then took a recess until two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convenction re-assembled at 2 o'clock P. M.

MR. FLESHER, of Jackson, obtained leave to read the following paragraph from the Virginia Chronicle, a paper published in his county, relating to the fact which he stated a day or two since when he submitted his resolution, that the Court of that county had voted $3,000 to be raised by a levy to support Secession soldiery.

THE STATE LEVY.

If there is anything in all the acts of the Secessionists of the county which is calculated more than another to arouse the indignation of the people it is the infamous act of last Monday, perpetrated by the Secession Magistrates of Jackson county. The Magistrates, certainly without due consideration, voted to tax the people of Jackson county $3000 for the support of Secession soldiers and their families.

Mr. Turner, Prosecuting Attorney, sanctioned the act, and said the Court was bound by every consideration of loyalty and duty to do it.

He had read the paragraph, he said, with a view of calling the attention of the Committee to the subject. Certainly, something ought to be done to prevent such levies.

MR. LAMB, from the Committee on Credentials, reported that the Committee had examined the credentials of Henry C. Moore, and find him the duly accredited delegate from the election district comprising Webster and part of Nicholas and Braxton counties. He moved that Mr. Moore's name be entered on the roll. It was done, and that gentleman came forward and took the oath of office.

THE CHAIR stated that the first business before the Convention, was the election of a Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Attorney-General and Council, as provided in one of the ordinances adopted.[7]

7. On the evening of June 19th, the members of the Convention held a caucus, with closed doors, at their room in the Custom House, and unanimously nominated Francis H. Pierpont of Marion county, as their candidate for Governor; Daniel Polsley of Mason county, for Lieutenant-Governor; James S. Wheat of Ohio county, for Attorney-General; and for members of the Council of State, William Lazier of Monongalia county; Daniel Lamb and James W. Paxton of Ohio county; Peter G. Van Winkle, of Wood county; and William A. Harrison, of Harrison county. The election of these officers the next day—June 20th—was therefore, but a mere matter of form. See the Daily Intelligencer of Wheeling, June 20, 1861.

MR. LAMB—"I desire, Mr. President, to present to the Convention for the office of Governor, the name of Francis H. Pierpont, of Marion. Mr. Pierpont needs no eulogium at my hands. He is well known to all of us. He is known throughout this country as having been one of the ablest, the most decided and indefatigable advocates of our cause from the very start.—We all know that heart and soul he is with us.

Should it be the pleasure of the Convention to elect Mr. Pierpont, I trust we will all recollect that we, too, have a duty to perform in this matter. It will be necessary for us to secure, if it be possible, the hearty and united co-operation of the people in the support of our Governor. All may depend upon this; the execution of every measure which we here initiate, may depend upon the prompt, efficient and decided support which we may be able to secure from the people to the acts of that officer.

It is necessary that we should rise to the magnitude of the occasion. We are at war. There is war in the midst of us—war all around us; and the measures which were sufficient to secure our quiet and tranquillity in times of peace, will not answer in the great exigencies that are upon us. This movement here—this great movement for the support of the Union—may become, instead of a success, a by-word and a reproach, unless we are prepared not merely to elect a man to the office of Governor, but to give him a decided and efficient support when he occupies the office."

There being no more nominations offered, the roll was called, and after the result was ascertained the President announced that Mr. Pierpont received seventy-seven votes (all that were present,) and was therefore elected Governor of the State of Virginia. (Applause.)

MR. CARLILE said that as it was desirable that the officers to be elected should take the oath of office at once, the committee to whom was entrusted the revision of the ordinance containing that oath had thought proper to present it at this time that, as revised, it might be acted on by the Convention. He read it as follows:

OATH OF OFFICE.

I solemly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, as the supreme law of the land anything in the Constitution and Laws of the State of Virginia or in the Ordinances of the Convention which assembled in Richmond on the 13th day of February last, to the contrary notwithstanding, and that I will uphold and defend the Government of Virginia as vindicated and restored by the Convention which assembled in Wheeling on the 11th day of June, 1861.

The revision was accepted by the Convention.

THE CHAIR stated that the next business in order was the election of a Lieutenant-Governor.

MR. MOSS.—"I rise for the purpose of nominating before this Convention for the office of Lieutenant-Governor, the name of Daniel Polsley, of Mason.

MR. POLSLEY is so well known to most of the members of this Convention that it would be a work of supererogation if I were to pronounce before this body an extended eulogy on his private character and his qualifications for this important position. Those who are acquainted with Mr. Polsley know him to be a gentleman of courteous manner, of high intelligence, of sound sterling judgment, and of strong practical common sense. Such qualifications, Sir, as I advert to certainly should not be disregarded by this Convention.

In addition to that I would say that Mr. Polsley has never been in public life; that he has never been what we call a politician; and therefore, Sir, is not conversant with the tricks and wiles of that class of public men. In my judgment, Sir, this is an additional reason why his claims to this office should meet with the favorable consideration of this Convention.

Upon all the great questions of the day, Sir, Mr. Polsley is firm and uncompromising; and, Sir, I know his character will justify me in saying, come weal or come woe, he will ever be found in the front rank fighting for the Constitution and the Union."

The roll was called and the result having been ascertained, the President announced that Daniel Polsley had received seventy-six votes, and was therefore elected Lieutenant-Governor of the State of Virginia.

MR. DORSEY moved that the election of Attorney-General be postponed until Saturday next.

MR. CALDWELL objected. He said it was well understood that Col. Jas. S. Wheat of this city, was a candidate before the Convention. For his part he was prepared to give that gentleman a hearty support.

MR. DORSEY explained that it was at the request of the friends of that gentleman he had made the motion.

MR. LAMB said he felt assured he could convince the gentleman from Marshall that there were good and proper reasons for postponement.

The election for Attorney-General was postponed.

THE CHAIR: The next business is the election of a Council to the Governor.

MR. DORSEY: "I nominate for that position P. G. Van Winkle, of Wood; Wm. A. Harrison, of Harrison; Wm. Lazier, of Monongalia, and Daniel Lamb and James W. Paxton, of Ohio.

I need utter no eulogy on these gentlemen. They are all well known to this Convention as calm, clear-headed, judicious men; just such men as we want in this position."

The roll was called, and Mr. Van Winkle received 73 votes; Mr. Lamb, 73; Mr. Harrison, 72; Mr. Lazier, 73; Mr. Paxton, 70; E. H. Caldwell, of Marshall, 1; and Andrew Wilson, of Ohio, 82.

8. BEGINNING OF THE RESTORED GOVERNMENT—MEETING OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY THEREUNDER.

With the election of the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, and the members of the Council of State, the Executive branch of the new State Government, was fairly inaugurated. At five o'clock that evening, the new State officials, together with nearly all the members of the Convention, crossed over to "Camp Carlile" on Wheeling Island, where they were received by six hundred soldiers on dress parade, under the command of Captain George R. Latham. Two cannons were fired in quick succession, the echoes of which fairly shook the neighboring hills on both sides of the Ohio river. Governor Pierpont appointed Nathan Wilkinson, Auditor of Public Accounts; and Samuel P. Hildreth, Treasurer of the Commonwealth. Six days previously—June 22d—he had issued a proclamation convening the General Assembly in extra session at Wheeling on the 1st day of July, 1861. In accordance with this, that body convened on that date, and was in session until the 26th of that month. Eleven Senators were present, and forty-nine members of the House of Delegates representing forty-eight counties were in attendance. Daniel Polsley, Lieutenant-Governor, and ex-officio President of the Senate, presided over the deliberations of that body, in which William W. Lewis was clerk; Jesse S. Wheat, Sergeant-at-Arms; D. V. Thorp, Door-keeper, and Alexander Campbell, page. In the House of Delegates, Daniel Frost of Jackson County was elected Speaker. Gibson Lamb Cranmer was elected Clerk; Evans D. Fogle, Sergeant-at-Arms. James O. Hawley, First Door-keeper; and James Musgrave, Second Door-keeper.

At 7:00 P M on the evening of the first day, both branches received the message of Governor Pierpont and five thousand copies were ordered printed. In this the Governor said:

"I regret that I cannot congratulate you on the peace and prosperity of the country, in the manner which has been customary with Executives, both State and Federal. For the present, those happy days which as a nation, we have so long enjoyed, and that prosperity which has smiled upon us, as upon no other nation, are departed. We are passing through a period of gloom and darkness in our Country's history, but we must not despair. There is a just God who 'rides upon the whirlwind and directs the storm.' Let us look to Him with abiding confidence. You have met, gentlemen, in the midst of Civil War, but I trust you may yet be assembled under happier auspices, when the strife shall be over and peace and prosperity be restored to this once happy country."

Accompanying this message were his correspondence with President Lincoln, together with letters received by him from Simon Cameron, Secretary of War, and Caleb B. Smith, Secretary of the Interior, all showing recognition of the movement to restore Civil Government to Western Virginia.

On July 9th, the Election of State Officers was the joint order of the day. For Secretary of the Commonwealth, William B. Zinn nominated Lucian A. Hagans of Preston County; John W. Moss nominated George Loomis of Wood County; L. E. Davidson nominated Ellery R. Hall, of Taylor County. Hagans was elected on the first ballot.

For Auditor of Public Accounts, Samuel Crane and Nathan Wilkinson were placed in nomination. Crane was elected on the first ballot.

THE CHAIR announced the election of Messrs. Van Winkle, Lamb, Harrison, Lazier and Paxton as members of the Council to the Governor of Virginia.

THE CHAIR announced the next business in order as being the resolution of the gentleman from Monongalia, and the question on its adoption.

MR. CARLILE wished to postpone for the present the consideration of the resolution. He moved that the Governor-elect be informed of his election at once; and if convenient the oath be now administered to him. It was important that he should be installed in office. A proclamation ought to go forth in the morning's paper if practicable, providing for a special election for the Senatorial Districts, and House of Delegates in those counties where vacancies exist, and a special messenger be sent to those counties.

The suggestion was adopted, and Messrs. Carlile and Lamb, were appointed a Committee to notify Mr. Pierpont of his election.

The Committee retired, and after a time, returned, accompanied by the Governor, whose appearance was greeted with a round of applause, which was joined in by the outsiders.

He ascended the Speaker's stand, and, after being introduced by the President, spoke as follows:

For Treasurer of the Commonwealth, Fontain Smith nominated Campbell Tarr of Brooke County; James H. Trout nominated Samuel P. Hildreth, of Ohio County. Tarr was elected on the first ballot.

Another joint order for the same day was the Election of United States Senators. At 2:00 P. M. the Assembly proceeded by joint ballot to elect a successor to R. M. T. Hunter, U. S. Senator from Virginia, who resigned his seat in that body, and John S. Carlile of Harrison County, was elected without opposition. Then followed the election of a successor to fill the unexpired term of James M. Mason, who like Hunter, had resigned his seat after Virginia adopted the Ordinance of Secession. H. W. Crothers nominated Daniel Lamb, of Ohio County; Lewis Ruffner nominated Peter G. Van Winkle, of Wood County; and Leroy Kramer nominated Waitman T. Willey, of Monongalia County. Willey was elected on the first ballot.

On July 24th the Committee to examine the bonds of public officers, reported that Samuel Crane, Auditor of Public Accounts, had executed a bond July 9, 1861, for $20,000.00, conditioned according to law, with Chapman J. Stuart, of Doddridge County, James Burley, of Marshall County, and Wm. Ratcliffe, of Wayne County, as securities therein, which had been approved by the Governor. That Campbell Tarr, Treasurer of the Commonwealth, had executed a bond July 10, 1861, in the penalty of $50,000.00 conditioned according to law, with Wm. T. Hammond, Nathaniel Wells and Joseph Applegate, as securities therein, which had not as yet been approved by the Governor. That Lucian A. Hagans, Secretary of the Commonwealth, had executed a bond, dated July 12, for $5,000.00, conditioned according to law, with Harrison Hagans, Wm. Hagans and Wm. Frey, as securities therein and approved by the Governor.

Thus was completed the organization of the Restored Government of Virginia, its origin and its operation form the most remarkable chapter in the history of the governments of the individual American States. With the General Assembly adjourned, it remained for the Second Convention of the People of Northwestern Virginia to re-assemble in Adjourned Session, and prepare the way for the division of the State and the formation of West Virginia.—V. A. L.

SPEECH OF THE GOVERNOR-ELECT.

"Gentlemen of the Convention:

I return to you my sincere thanks for this mark of your confidence in placing me in the most critical and trying position in which any man could be placed at the present time.

This day and this event mark a period in the history of constitutional liberty. They mark a period in American history. For more than three-quarters of a century our government has proceeded, in all the States and in all the territories, upon which our fathers erected it—namely: upon the intelligence of the people; and that in the people resides all power, and that from them all power must emanate.

A new doctrine has been introduced by those who are at the head of the revolution in our Southern States—that the people are not the source of all power. Those promulgating this doctrine have tried to divide the people into two classes; one they call the laboring class, the other the capital class. They have for several years been industriously propagating the idea that the capital of the country ought to represent the legislation of the country, and guide it and direct it: maintaining that it is dangerous for the labor of the country to enter into the legislation of the country. This, gentlemen, is the principle that has characterized the revolution that has been inaugurated in the South; they maintain that those who are to have the privilege of voting ought to be of the educated class, and that the legislation ought not to be represented by the laboring classes.

We in Western Virginia, and, as I suppose in the whole of Virginia, adopted the great doctrine of the fathers of the Republic that in the people resides all power; and that embraced all people. This revolution has been inaugurated with a view of making a distinction upon the principles that I have indicated. We of Western Virginia have not been consulted upon that subject. The large body of your citizens in the eastern part of the State have not been consulted upon that subject.

American institutions lie near to the heart of the masses of the people, all over this country, from one end of it to the other, though not as nearly perhaps in Louisiana, Georgia and Texas, as in some of the Western and Northern States.

This idea has been covertly advanced only in portions of Virginia. She has stood firm by the doctrines of the fathers of the Revolution up to within a very short period. Its propagators have attempted to force it upon us by terror and at the point of the bayonet. We have been driven into the position we occupy to-day, by the usurpers at the South, who have inaugurated this war upon the soil of Virginia, and have made it the great Crimea of this contest. We, representing the loyal citizens of Virginia, have been bound to assume the position we have assumed to-day, for the protection of ourselves, our wives, our children, and our property. We, I repeat, have been driven to assume this position; and now we are but recurring to the great fundamental principle of our fathers, that to the loyal people of a State, belongs the law-making power of that State. The loyal people are entitled to the government and governmental authority of the State. And, fellow-citizens, it is the assumption of that authority upon which we are now about to enter.

It will be for us by firmness, and by prudence, by wisdom, by discretion, in all our acts, to inaugurate every step we take for the purpose of restoring law and order to this ancient Commonwealth; to mark well our steps, and to implore the divine wisdom and direction of Him that ruleth above, who has every hair of our heads numbered, and who suffereth not a sparrow to fall unnoticed to the ground, and His guidance and direction in enabling us to carry out the great work we have undertaken here, in humility, but with decision and determination.

With these remarks I thank you again for the honor you have conferred upon me, and promise you that I will do the best I can in administering your wishes, and in trying to carry out the great object we have been working for here, and for which we expect to work for some time to come. I thank you gentlemen." (Great Applause.)

The oath was then administered by Andrew Wilson, Esq., a Justice of the Peace, and Mr. Pierpont became de facto the Governor of Virginia.

THE CHAIR: "The next business in order is the resolution of the gentleman from Monongalia, and the amendment of the gentleman from Tucker."

MR. DORSEY: "Will the gentleman from Tucker for a moment withdraw his amendment? I purpose to withdraw my own resolution to give way for another, which, it is thought, will harmonize the opposing elements on this question."

He withdrew the resolution.

MR. FROST: "I move that a committee of three be appointed to wait on the Governor and inform him that this Convention is now ready to receive any communication from him that he may see proper to send in."

The resolution was adopted, and Messrs. Frost, of Jackson; Crane of Tucker; and ——— of Wetzel[9], were appointed the committee.

MR. CARLILE then, by general consent, proceeded to submit some remarks for the consideration, as he said, of those inclined to favor such propositions as that of the gentleman from Monongalia. The points he made in his remarks were that such a resolution violated the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, as it was equivalent to an ex post facto law. He contended that at the time the men, whom it was proposed to turn out of office for voting for the ordinance of secession, gave that vote there was no penalty attached to the act, and thus depriving them of a prerogative on that account was equivalent to establishing a penalty—or was in fact a penalty—for an act done when no such penalty was in force.—That penalty was the loss of the office conferred by virtue of the implied contract between the party and the appointing power.

He said also that it would be punishing their own citizens for the exercise of an undoubted constitutional right. To inflict a penalty for having exercised a guaranteed right would be to abridge that right. It would never do for us to inaugurate any such practice as this in a body assembled for the purpose of protecting the rights and liberties of a free people.

MR. DORSEY followed, contending that it was not the design of the resolution to inflict punishment, but to protect the people against official acts of those who had committed themselves to a doctrine and a series of projects inimical to the rights of the people.

MR. STUART said it was the first time he had ever heard that a man holding an office under the Constituion of the United States, had the right to vote for the ordinance of secession.

9. The name of the member of this Committee from Wetzel county is omitted in the report from which we print.—V. A. L.

Such an act was a violation of the oath taken by all officers to support that Constitution, and was therefore a crime and a perjury.

MR. CARLILE replied, that if it was perjury, then the prosecuting attorneys in the different counties ought to punish all those who had been guilty of this crime, and this would, if enforced, be all the punishment needed, as perjury would forever disqualify them from holding any office thereafter.

THE PRESIDENT cut the discussion short by announcing that he had just received an invitation for the Convention to attend a firing of salutes on the Island, between four and five o'clock, in honor of the election of Governor.

On motion the Convention at once adjourned.

THE TENTH DAY.

FRIDAY, JUNE 21, 1861.

The Convention met at ten o'clock, A. M., and was opened with prayer by Rev. Gordon Battelle.

The minutes of the preceding day were read and adopted.

Ordered, That until the Seals of the Commonwealth ordered by this Convention are procured, the Governor shall affix his private seal to such writs and other documents as it shall be necessary for him to issue.

Ordered, That until the appointment of a Secretary of the Commonwealth, the Governor be authorized to employ some suitable person to fill said office temporarily.

MR. DORSEY offered the following:

Resolved, That a committee on offices to consist of nine members be appointed.

He said the design of that resolution was to raise a committee to which the various resolutions that had been offered by gentlemen in relation to vacating the offices of the State might be submitted so as to arrive at some harmonious action on that subject.

MR. CRANE, of Tucker, did not know what end the gentleman proposed to reach with the resolution. The committee so raised could of its own volition report nothing. Some matter for them to inquire into would have to be offered after all. If this was another mode of reaching the end sought to be obtained by the resolution offered by the gentleman yesterday morning it would not effect the purpose unless another committee were raised to consider that matter.

MR. DORSEY replied that the design attributed was not the design of the resolution at all, but it was to present these resolutions one after another, and refer them to the committee. The expectation was that the committee would report back some of them, or a different resolution on the general subject, or else present some explanation which might go out to the people, giving them to understand why the Convention had refused to take action on these resolutions.

MR. CARLILE said that if this resolution was to elicit discussion, he would move to let it lie over for the present. He submitted a motion, that when the convention adjourn, it adjourn over till Monday at 2 o'clock.

After some discussion, the motion was adopted.

On motion, then, the ordinance relating to the receipts and disbursements of the public revenue, and providing for the appointment of an Auditor, Treasurer and Secretary of the Commonwealth, was taken up, and after having been considered, section by section, and various amendations made, was passed unanimously.

The ordinance as passed, is as follows:

AN ORDINANCE RELATING TO THE RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS OF THE PUBLIC REVENUE, AND PROVIDING FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF AN AUDITOR, TREASURER, AND SECRETARY OF THE COMMONWEALTH:

The people of Virginia, by their delegates assembled in Convention, in Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. The General Assembly, as soon as it shall be organized at Wheeling, pursuant to the Ordinances of this Convention, shall elect by joint vote of the two houses, an Auditor of Public Accounts, a Treasurer, and a Secretary of the Commonwealth; whose terms of office shall respectively commence as soon as they shall be duly qualified, and shall continue for the unexpired portion of the current term of said offices, and until their successors be respectively elected and qualified.

2. The officers so to be elected shall discharge the duties and exercise the power pertaining to their several offices by existing laws, so far as such law may be consistent with the ordinances of this Convention.

3. Each of said officers shall give bond, with security, to the satisfaction of the Governor, which bond shall be payable to the Commonwealth of Virginia, and be conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of the office. The penalties of the bonds shall be respectively as follows: that of the Auditor of Public Accounts, Twenty Thousand Dollars; that of the Treasurer, Fifty Thousand Dollars; and that of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, Five Thousand Dollars. Each of these bonds shall be submitted to the Governor for approval; and if he be of opinion that it is in proper form, and duly executed, and that the security is sufficient, he shall endorse his approval thereon, and cause the same to be deposited in some secure place for safe keeping.

4. The Auditor of Public Accounts, and the Treasurer, shall each keep an office in the City of Wheeling, for the transaction of their official business; and the hours for transacting business at said offices shall be from eight in the morning, until three in the afternoon, between the first day of April and the first day of November, and from nine in the morning, until three in the afternoon, during the remainder of the year.

5. It shall be the duty of the several Sheriffs, and all other persons who have in their hands, or are liable for, any monies which by existing laws are payable to the Treasury of the State of Virginia forthwith to adjust their several accounts with the Auditor to be elected as aforesaid and pay over to the Treasurer herein provided for, the amounts which shall respectively be found due to the State.

6. If any Sheriff or other person, having in his hands, or being liable for, any monies which by existing laws are payable to the Treasury, fail or refuse to adjust his account, or pay over such monies as herein required, the Auditor of Public Accounts shall immediately publish a notice of such default in some Newspaper in the City of Wheeling and if such Sheriff or other person shall not, within thirty days after such publication, have duly adjusted his account and paid over such monies, he shall forfeit and pay to the Commonwealth, the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, to be levied by distress under warrant of the Governor, which warrant it shall be the duty of the Governor to issue, on satisfactory evidence that such default has occurred, directing the same at his discretion to the Sheriff of any county, or to a special Commissioner or Commissioners for the purpose, and the Sheriff or other person making default as aforesaid, and his or their securities, shall further be liable to judgment, in the name of the Commonwealth of Virginia, for the amount appearing to be due, with interest thereon from the time of such default till payment, and fifteen per centum upon the principal, as damages to be recovered by motion on ten days' notice in any Court of Record in the State.

7. The several Commissioners of the Revenue and Sheriffs, having first taken the oath or affirmation required by the Ordinances of this Convention, and being otherwise duly qualified, shall proceed, with all convenient despatch, to the discharge of their several duties in relation to the assessment and collection of the public revenue, under the existing laws, so far as the same may not be inconsistent with the Ordinances of this Convention.

8. All monies to be paid into the public Treasury, shall be paid into the Merchants' and Mechanics' Bank of Wheeling, at the City of Wheeling, or one of its Branches, at Point Pleasant, Clarksburg and Morgantown; or into the North-Western Bank of Virginia, at Wheeling, or one of its Branches at Parkersburg and Wellsburg, but if collected East of the Blue Ridge of Mountains, into the Bank of the Old Dominion in Alexandria, to the credit of The Treasury of Virginia; and the person so paying the same shall take from the proper officer of such Bank or Branch, a certificate of the fact. The Treasurer, on the delivery of such certificate, shall retain and file the same, charging the amount therein specified to the proper Bank or Branch, and delivering to the person who made the payment at Bank, duplicate receipts for the amount so paid, specifying on what account the money was paid. The person making the payment shall forthwith hand over one of the said receipts to the Auditor of Public Accounts, to be retained and filed by him, and charged to the Treasurer's account; upon the other receipt, which is to be retained by the person making the payment, the Auditor shall endorse as follows:—"A duplicate hereof has been filed in the Auditor's office," and affix his signature and the proper date to such endorsement.

9. No receipt of the Treasurer shall be an acquittance or discharge to any person for any sum of money due to the Commonwealth, unless such receipt be endorsed by the Auditor of Public Accounts as aforesaid. And any person bound to pay money into the Public Treasury, who shall pay the same otherwise than according to this Ordinance, shall remain liable for such money, and be subject to every fine, penalty or forfeiture to which he would have been subject if he had not paid the same.

10. If the Governor, at any time when this Convention, and the General Assembly, re-organized under the ordinances thereof, shall not be in session, shall be of opinion that the safety of the public funds requires that no more public monies should be paid into any one or more of the depositories, specified in the preceding section, or that the monies which may be in the same, to the credit of the Treasury, should be withdrawn, he may announce the fact by proclamation to be published in some newspaper in the City of Wheeling, and in the City of Alexandria, in the proclamation he may, if it be necessary, designate another depository or depositories, at which monies due to the Commonwealth may thereafter be paid. And after such proclamation is published it shall not be lawful to pay any sum of money on State account into any depository or depositories to which such payment shall be thereby forbidden; and the Auditor of Public Accounts and Treasurer, if required by the Governor, shall cause the monies held by such depository or depositories, to be transferred to some other lawful depository or depositories of the Public Funds. But all such Proclamations and orders of the Governor shall, as soon as possible, be submitted to the Convention or to the General Assembly, for their revision.

11. Any person claiming to receive money from the Public Treasury, shall apply to the Auditor of Public Accounts for a warrant for the same. And the Auditor if he find such money to be due by the State, and that the payment thereof has been authorized by any Ordinance of this Convention, or Act of the General Assembly as re-organized under the ordinances of this Convention, shall issue his warrant therefor upon the Treasurer, specifying on what account the money is to be paid, and to what appropriation the same is chargeable. And the Treasurer, on the presentation of said warrant to him, shall, if satisfied that such warrant has been duly authorized as aforesaid, endorse upon said warrant, his Check, directed to some one of the depositories in which there shall be money to the credit of the Treasury, which check shall be payable to the order of the person entitled to receive the amount therein specified. The Treasurer shall, however, at no time, draw a check on any Bank, Branch, or other depository, unless there be money enough therein, to the credit of the Treasury, to pay such check. And no Bank, Branch or other depository, holding money to the credit of the Treasury, shall pay any check drawn by the Treasurer, unless the same be endorsed upon a warrant, authorizing the same issued by the Auditor of Public Accounts.

12. This ordinance shall take effect from its passage. It may be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

The Convention then took a recess until two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

MR. LAMB offered a verbal amendment to the ordinance organizing the State Government, which was adopted.

MR. CARLILE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be requested immediately to notify the members of the Governor's Council, not now in the city, of their election as such. Adopted.

MR. MOORE offered the following:

Resolved, That this Convention, in view of the extraordinary condition in which our portion of the United States is now placed, we earnestly recommend to the Federal authorities, the construction of a military road from Webster, a point on the B. & O. R. R., southward through the State of Virginia, or to some such point as would be suitable for the concentration of forces in the struggle in which our General Government is now engaged.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Business.

On motion of Mr. Carlile, the ordinance fixing the salaries of certain officers, &c. was then taken up.

MR. STUART moved to amend the line fixing the salary of the Governor at $3,000 per annum by striking out that sum and substituting $2,000.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. LAMB moved to insert between the first and second lines the words "Of the Attorney-General at the rate of $1,000 per annum."

The amendment was adopted.

MR. HUBBARD moved to amend the line fixing the salary of the Secretary of the Commonwealth at $1,500 per annum by striking out that sum and substituting $1,200.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. LIGHTBURN moved that the line fixing the pay of the doorkeepers be so amended as to allow them $2 per day, instead of $1.50.

The amendment was adopted.

On motion of MR. WEST, the line fixing the pay of the pages was so amended as to allow them $1 a day, instead of fifty cents.

On motion of MR. LAMB, the second section, requiring that the expenses incurred by the Governor, shall be submitted to the Auditor, the same as any other claims against the State, was so amended as to require the same in regard to the expenses of his council.

The Ordinance, as a whole, was then adopted unanimously.

MR. CLOSE offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved. That a copy of the Declaration adopted by this Convention, and the signatures thereto appended, be sent by special messengers, to be designated by the President of this body, to the President of the United States.

On motion of MR. WEST, the rule was suspended for the purpose of reconsidering the vote by which the election of Attorney-General was postponed until Saturday, and on his motion, the Convention proceeded to the election.

MR. HUBBARD nominated Jas. S. Wheat, Esq., of the city of Wheeling.

No other nominations being made, the roll was called, and Mr.

Wheat received 70 votes; Mr. Farnsworth, of Upshur, 1; Wm. A. Harrison, of Harrison, 1.

THE CHAIR announced that Jas. S. Wheat was elected Attorney-General for the State of Virginia.

MR. FLESHER offered the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Business:

Resolved, That for the better security and safety of the loyal citizens of this Commonwealth, and the perpetuity of their liberty, it is highly and exceedingly necessary that there should be placed, at least in each of the counties of Western Virginia, by the Federal Government, a recruiting officer, whose duty it shall be to enlist all such young men as may be desirous of engaging in their country's service, and when enlisted, to send them to "Camp Carlile," or elsewhere, for discipline and drill, so as to muster them into the service, of the United States, at as early a day as possible; and that to this end, we invite and solicit the proper officer of the general government, to send us such officers without delay.

MR. BURDETT suggested an inquiry into the whereabouts and disposition of the 2,000 stand of arms now in the city.

MR. CARLILE stated that he had been instructed to say that the Committee of which he was Chairman, had had that matter under consideration, and had unanimously come to the conclusion that the guns referred to, should be handed over to the State authorities here, for arming the volunteer militia of the State, which will be organized in a few days.

MR. DORSEY moved to suspend the rule for the purpose of reconsidering the vote by which the Convention had resolved to adjourn over till Monday. Lost.

MR. MOORE moved that a committee of five be appointed to prepare an address for circulation.

THE CHAIR stated that the Committee on Business already had that mater under consideration.

MR. MOORE withdrew the motion.

The Convention then adjourned till Monday next at two o'clock.

THE TWELFTH DAY,[9]

TUESDAY, JUNE 25, 1861.

Convention met at 10 A. M.

Prayer by Rev. J. L. Clark.

MR. LAMB, from the Committee on Credentials, reported Wm.

9. It will be observed that on the tenth day of the session—Friday, June 21st—the Convention adjourned to meet the following Monday, the 24th, at 2:00 P. M. In all the files of the Wheeling Daily Intelligencer for 1861, known to the writer to be extant, the issue for Tuesday June 25, 1861, which contained the Proceedings and Journal of the Convention on Monday, the 24th—eleventh day of the session—is missing. It is hoped that the record of the proceedings of this day may yet be found.—V. A. L.

Radcliffe, of Wayne county, member elected to the House of Delegates, from that county, entitled to a seat as such in the Convention.

MR. LAMB, on behalf of the Committee to whom was referred the ordinances passed by the Convention for revision, reported them back with an order that they be duly enrolled. He moved that they be signed by the President and Secretary of the Convention as such.

The report and motion were adopted.

MR. RADCLIFFE came forward and took the oath.

MR. MARTIN, of Wetzel, moved to amend the fourth section of the ordinance for the reorganization of the State government by inserting in the 22d line after the word "duties," the following:

"Provided, nevertheless, that any person having taken the oath of the officers of the government of the United States, and afterwards voted for the ordinance of secession, and since that time have advocated secession principles, shall be disqualified for exercising the functions of any office in this Commonwealth until the cessation of hostilities between the United States, and the seceded States."

MR. MARTIN moved that his resolution be referred and proceeded to make some remarks in support of it.

On the question of referring this resolution, Mr. Martin called for the yeas and nays. The call was not sustained and the question being taken the Convention refused to refer.

So the resolution was tabled.

MR. CARLILE, from the Committee of Seventeen, reported an ordinance, which was adopted, entitled "An ordinance recognizing the Constitutional duty of the Commonwealth of Virginia, to call forth the militia of the State in obedience to the lawful requisition of the Government of the United States, to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection and repel invasions."

MR. CALDWELL, from the same, reported the following which was also adopted:

AN ORDINANCE RELATING TO THE COLLECTION OF THE REVENUE.

The people of Virginia by their Delegates in Convention, at Wheeling assembled, do ordain as follows:

1. That on all taxes hereafter collected, there shall be allowed to the person from whom they are collected, by the officer collecting the same, ten per centum on the amount thereof, if such payment be made on or before the 15th day of September next; if made after the 15th of September and prior to the 15th day of October next, six per centum on the amount paid; and if made after the said 15th day of October and prior to the tenth day of November next, three per centum shall be allowed on the amount paid.

2. It shall be the duty of the Auditor of Public Accounts to credit the amounts of the several Sheriffs with the percentage allowed to be deducted from said taxes under the terms of the preceding section, provided said Sheriffs shall account for and pay over the said taxes collected within ten days after each respective period stated in said section.

3. This Ordinance shall take effect from and after the day of its passage and may be repealed or amended by the General Assembly.

MR. LAMB, from the same, presented an ordinance, which was adopted, entitled an ordinance providing that the copies of the ordinance printed under the authority of the Convention shall be received as evidence.

On motion of MR. LAMB, the following order was adopted:

Ordered, That the Attorney-General be invited to occupy a seat in this Convention with liberty to participate in the discussions, but not to vote.

MR. CARLILE, from the Committee of Seventeen, reported the following ordinance which was adopted:

An Ordinance requiring the evidence of the taking certain Oaths to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The people of Virginia, by their delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. When a person heretofore elected or appointed, or who shall be hereafter elected or appointed to any office in this State, shall take the oaths required of him in a Court of record he shall procure a transcript from the record of the Court stating the fact of his having taken such oaths, and when he takes such oaths before a Judge, Notary or Justice, he shall procure a certificate of the person administering the same stating the fact.

2. When the oath prescribed in the ordinance for the reorganization of the State government shall be taken as aforesaid, the person taking the same shall cause the said transcript or certificate to be delivered to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, who shall file and preserve the same in his office. And if such transcript or certificate be delivered as aforesaid to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, it shall not be required of the person taking the oath to deliver the transcript or certificate as prescribed by the 6th section of the 13th chapter, or by the 19th section of the 24th chapter of the second edition of the Code of Virginia.

3. This ordinance shall take effect from its passage and may be altered or repealed by the Geenral Assembly.

MR. FARNSWORTH offered the subjoined resolution:

Resolved, That if in the opinion of the Legislature, there shall be no necessity for the meeting of this Convention on the first Tuesday in August next, they have the power so to decide; but that the Governor shall have the power to call this Convention together at a later period than the time now fixed on, unless the Legislature shall otherwise direct.

MR. FARNSWORTH moved the suspension of the rule, for the purpose of reconsidering the vote to which the Convention resolved to adjourn to the first Tuesday in August.

The question being taken on the suspension of the rule, it was decided in the negative.

So the Convention refused to reconsider.

On motion, the Convention then took a recess until 4 o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

MR. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Business, reported the Ordinances adopted during the morning session, as revised and corrected, and they were adopted and ordered to be enrolled.

On motion of MR. TARR, a vote of thanks was returned to the President, for the very able and impartial manner in [which] he had discharged the duties of his position.

MR. PORTER also moved that the thanks of the Convention be tendered to the Secretary, Sergeant-at-Arms, and other officers, for the manner in which they have discharged their respective duties.

THE PRESIDENT: "Most cordially do I thank you, gentlemen of the Convention, for the complimentary manner in which you have seen fit to speak of my conduct as an officer called to preside over the deliberations of this body.

I part from you, one and all, with the kindest feelings, with emotions of heart that I have not language to express. We have been engaged in a duty of the highest importance not only to ourselves but to the State of Virginia, and it may be to the United States. I may be sanguine but I am convinced the action of the body will redound to the good of this whole country. We came here, some of us, through difficulties, some at the peril of their lives, some yet trembling, fearing not the consequences of their action, but fearing lest the call for this convention should not be responded to by the neighboring counties. But how agreeably have we been disappointed. We have representatives here from Hancock to Wayne from the Ohio to the mountains, Randolph, Tucker, Gilmer on the one hand, while Kanawha in its strength is with us on the other. We have thirty-four counties; almost one-third of the white population of the State of Virginia is represented by the territory within the counties from which delegates here hail. The people, our constituents, if they once are relieved from military rule, and have permission to express their sentiments, will hail our action here with joy and gladness, and will respond to it with hearts of gratitude, and with actions that will tell on the future destiny of this country.

We all love Virginia. We have always been devoted to our institutions, I am sure. It is not our interest to do any injury to the mother of us all. It is our duty to advance her interests, her prosperity and the happiness of the people. I am sure our action here will result in that happiness and prosperity.

Yet our work is not done with the action of this Convention. We have here done our work, and, in my estimation have done it well. We have re-organized a government for the State of Virginia, in lieu of the one which has been usurped. We have appointed officers in those positions to execute those duties where men have acted heretofore faithlessly, and permit me to say, you have been happy in the selection to fill the various offices filled by the ordinances and acts of this Convention. You have chosen men who are capable, who are honest, and who will be faithful to the Constitution and laws of their country. I have every confidence in them, that they will discharge their duties as men, honest men, men who will not go to the right nor to the left, but straight along in the line of their duty.

Then it is for us, gentlemen, after having inaugurated this government, to go home, not to idle away our time—not to fold our arms in inaction, but to go home with the determinatin to execute the government which we have re-organized; to put in motion in every county and in every neighborhood within our power. And if gentlemen who are opposed to us in politics on this great question of secession see fit to attempt again to oppose the free execution of the laws, it will be necessary for us, by the strong arm of the law, to put our purpose into execution. It is too late to be modest in this matter. It is too late for gentlemen now to doubt. The time for action has now arrived; and he who now falters, at a time when his country most needs his services, falters at a time when that faltering is not only a sin but a crime of the deepest dye.

Let us then go home and enter upon the execution of the government which we have re-organized. The people I am satisfied by an overwhelming majority are with us, and if we only manifest the disposition and the determination to execute our purpose all will be well.

Gentlemen, I return you my thanks for the compliment you have pleased to bestow on me in adopting this resolution. I have spent a few days with you here very pleasantly, and have enjoyed myself as well as I ever did in my life. With these remarks and my thanks I close and take leave of you.

The Convention then adjourned to meet again on the first Tuesday in August next at two o'clock P. M., unless otherwise ordered by the Governor with the advice of his Council.

APPENDIX A.

SPEECH OF HON. FRANCIS H. PIERPONT DELIVERED BEFORE THE SECOND CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA AT WHEELING ON THE 17TH DAY OF JUNE, 1861—SIXTH DAY OF SESSION—IN FAVOR OF THE ADOPTION OF THE DECLARATION OF RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE OF VIRGINIA.

MR. PIERPONT said:—"I propose to submit a few remarks upon this Declaration before the question is taken; and, Sir, if I should extend my remarks to several topics not particularly embraced in the Declaration, I hope I shall not be considered out of order. We have arrived, Sir, at an important and momentous crisis in the history of our country—one that is to be deplored by every lover of constitutional liberty, and who has any desire in his heart for the Government of the United States performing the great destiny for which it was intended.—And, Sir, it may not be inappropriate for me to refer briefly to a state of facts which has brought about the condition of our country at the present time. I think it must be obvious—perhaps patent to every observer of the history of this country—that the crisis now upon us is not the result of any momentary revulsion that has come upon the country, or of any sudden outburst of feeling in any one section of the country; but that it is the result, Sir, of mature deliberation, concocted in treason, for the express purpose of breaking up constitutional liberty in this country.—And, Sir, I think I am borne out by the facts in the statement that this treason dates as far back as 1833: a dissatisfaction on the part of one single State of this Union with the Government of the United States, and a determination to break it up. The history of the events of those times is fresh in the memory of most of us now. The declaration on the part of the committee that reported the bill calling the convention in the State of South Carolina to pass the ordinance of Secession immediately after the last Presidential election, shows not only the determination of the people of South Carolina at that time, but that it had been a determination in the minds of that people for twenty-eight years; that they had been educating the minds of the people of South Carolina for the express purpose of breaking off their allegiance to the Government of the United States, and that if they were not taught now, they never would be. That, Sir, South Carolinians admit. That is the boast of their chivalry; they are too high-minded to deny the truth. It was their determination to keep nothing concealed. Ever since the transactions of 1833 the statesmen of South Carolina have never suffered themselves to be called by any of the party names that distinguish the people of the United States in other sections of the country; but have called themselves the great Southern State Rights party. Thus showing all the time that their object was something beyond that of conducting this Government to the high destiny to which all the other States of this Union so proudly looked forward, and for which they had so diligently labored.

When we look, Sir, at the transactions, or theory rather, and the statements of the leading politicians of the South, during the canvass of the last Presidential election, we find that they went on the theory of separate State action, opposing entirely any border conference of Southern States, any action of a general character that would bind together and have for its object the healing up of the seeming dissensions between the North and the South. That separate State action was taken in defiance of the remonstrances of the State of Virginia, and regardless of the wishes of other States reluctantly drawn into it. There was a powerful Union party in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. But these men at the head of affairs in South Carolina, determining to carry out their favorite theory and purpose, precipitated the country into this fearful rebellion.—South Carolina seceded, and was followed by the other States. But we see as early as the ninth of December last, the programme laid down by statesmen in Washington for the formation of a Provisional Government at Montgomery, by the assembling of a Congress on the 4th of February.

Virginia's representatives in the Legislature had been chosen a year before. They were called together by the Governor of the State, who was opposed to Secession. That Legislature, however, was deeply imbued with the spirit of Secession. They immediately on assembling called a Convention of the State, contrary to the usages of the State. We know, Sir, that so far as Virginia was concerned at the time of the calling of that Convention, there was a large majority of her people opposed even to a Convention being called, while there was an overwhelming majority in the State, opposed to Secession, and in favor of the Union, under the Stars and Stripes and the Constitution of the United States, knowing as they did, and as we all do, that it was to this Union that we are indebted for all our greatness and prosperity.

Now, Sir, it has been said that the protection of negro slavery was the great object of this revolution. I deny, Sir, the whole proposition from beginning to end. And I assert that slavery was only the occasion, the pretext for the rebellion, and for the steps taken to bring it on.—South Carolina, the most honest and bold in her declarations, denied that such was the case. They were dissatisfied with the Union—"the accursed government." They wanted a different government—one more suited to their tastes and habits of life. They tried to make the issue in the Presidential campaign last fall. It was made throughout several of the Southern States, and was made upon the issue of protection to slavery. They tried to make that issue in Virginia. But, Sir, until the day of the Presidential election, there were not three prominent men in this State, politicians or otherwise, that took the ground of secession or breaking up the Union. And we find a pertinent fact connected with this case. In the Eastern part of the State, where the most slaves are owned, the Union ticket, based on the "Union, the Constitution and the Enforcement of the Laws," received a majority of the votes, even of slave holders themselves—showing very clearly that they did not regard secession necessary to protect their interests in slave property, because they felt that under the Constitution of the United States, and the laws passed by Congress, that institution was entirely safe.

Then, sir, it behooves us to look closely, and see how this state of affairs under which we find the country laboring, was brought about, and whether the people of Virginia should be in this distracted condition in which we now find them, by any previous action of their own. We find a peculiar state of things in the South. After the revolutionists had seized the arsenals, the forts, the treasury, or mints, the post offices, and all other government property they could get hold of, we find the Convention of Virginia still remaining firm for the Union. But there was a deep plot going on all the time. Those who were leading the secession movement, everywhere were acting in concert, and their plans were matured beforehand. All the leading men were initiated—were indoctrinated fully into the views and determination of the leaders. They all acted in concert, and sprung this thing on the people of the country without the people having any concert among themselves. Hence, Sir, we see that immediately upon the step taken by South Carolina, all over the South, and as far as secession influence could reach in the North, the declaration was made that there must be no "coercion." Not a paper in favor of secession but what came out with the doctrine of no coercion. Sensible men, legal men, in every part of the country looked at one another aghast and in wonderment; and the question was proposed from one to another, and it flew from one end of the Union to the other, "Have we any government at all?" Is this magnificent government built by our forefathers a mere rope of sand or is it a reality?" But still the dogma was promulgated. "There must be no coercion;" and in order to produce a revulsion of feeling in the public mind against those in favor of the enforcement of the laws, they were called "coercionists," or those whose object and desire were to exterminate their brothers in the South.

In this way things progressed. The last Administration went out, and the present one came in. The policy to be pursued was anxiously asked for and looked to.—Every step the present administration took was tortured into coercion, while odious epithets were showered upon it to make it distasteful to the people of the South.—When the Virginia Convention assembled at Richmond it was ascertained that three-fourths of it were opposed to disunion.—But the plot began to converge to a point. Major Anderson was in Fort Sumter, and it was well known that his provisions were nearly run out. It was known the very day they would run out, and that he must be reinforced, either in provisions, or in provisions and men both. The Virginia secessionists then called their mob Convention to meet in Richmond on the 16th of April. A messenger was sent from Richmond to Charleston the day before Fort Sumter was fired on. He made his speech there; saying there was one thing that must be done, and Virginia would secede. They knew in Charleston what that thing was; and Gov. Pickens ordered Fort Sumter to be attacked. The attack was made, and a despatch came to the Governor of Virginia from the Governor of South Carolina, saying: "Fort Sumter is fired upon; what will Virginia do now?" It is said that the Convention would not even then have dissolved their connection with the United States. But the Secessionists, without the authority of the Governor, dispatched troops to seize Harper's Ferry and the Gosport Navy Yard, with all their munitions of war. The declarations had already gone forth from Charleston, throughout the South, that they intended to seize the Capitol immediately; that Lincoln and his cabinet were trembling in their seats; and were consulting whether to remove to Philadelphia or New York. Thus they forced the President to issue his Proclamation, calling for 75,000 troops. They knew he would be bound to issue the Proclamation or retire in disgrace!—That Virginia must be called on for her quota of troops, or Secession be acknowledged. The proclamation came—Virginia was called on, and then the Proclamation was styled by the conspirators the crowning act of infamy of the Administration, on account of which they must secede. Thus the plot was laid and consummated. The plot was one that was conceived in perjury at Washington, and carried out by falsehood throughout the country, attended by coercion, intimidation, insult and a reign of terror, which was equally concerted throughout Virginia, as well as in the other Southern States.

For several days before the Convention passed the Ordinance of Secession, it was absolutely besieged; members were threatened with being hung to the lamp posts; their lives were jeopardized; the mob was marching up and down the streets, and surrounding the Capitol, and everything was terror and dismay. Immediately upon the passage of the Ordinance of Secession, in every county, as far as I can learn, a systematic reign of terror was inaugurated.

Leading politicians in each county, wherever they dared, propounded to all the Union men questions of the following import—"Are you in favor of the Union, or the State of Virginia?" notifying the party at the same time, that if they were in favor of the Union, that they had better prepare their necks for the halter, or leave the State—some adopting one badge of menace, and some another; such as pistols worn in some prominent place, others, Minnie rifle balls, with holes perforated in them and tied in the button holes of their coats. In other sections of the State where they had the power, irresponsible persons assembled, under the name of "committees of safety," who proceeded to notify all the obnoxious men in their section, that they must leave the State. This meant Union men. Prosecuting attorneys attended militia training and read the laws on treason. All Union men were admonished that they would be prosecuted for treason.

Before the day of election arrived we see the troops from South Carolina, Georgia and other Southern States, placed all over the eastern and southern parts of the State running up into the valley, and in some parts of Western Virginia. In those parts of the State freedom of election was completely suppressed, and men who dared to vote against secession did it at the hazard of their lives. Thus, Sir, you see the concert by which secession has been inaugurated and carried out in Virginia; and we see that same spirit that reigned in it from the beginning. What is that spirit? Is it the spirit that animates high-minded, noble, honorable men, when they desire to carry out the destiny of a great nation? Na, Sir, it is a spirit of TREASON, that has been propagated by falsehood from one end of the country to the other. And to carry this out; threatening, menace, plundering, oppression, everything which develops the lower, meaner qualities of man, and leads him to despise all governments, all law, all authority, and everything that stands in his way to power—all have been resorted to.

At the inception of secession, we thought we read its spirit in the South, but supposed that spirit would not be carried into Virginia. But in this we were mistaken. The leading politicians of Virginia, both in the East and the West, embarked in the scheme of secession. What had we to do here? We saw that the negro interest in the East did not demand secession. And we knew that the free laborers of the West, by it, would have all their interests cut off and destroyed. We saw that Kentucky was loyal to the laws, and we saw that Maryland was bound to stand fast.—Here then we would be with a white population of 300,000, with our revenues of trade cut off; it could not go to the East, nor to the South, without encountering a custom-house at our doors, with our men liable to be seized and placed in a foreign army to fight against a government they had always loved and honored and to which their prosperity was indebted, and on which the perpetuity of their happiness depended. What was Western Virginia to do? They saw their leading politicians engaged in this nefarious attempt to break up the Government; they saw free expresssion of opinion in the case suppressed; they saw treason rankling all over the State, with the Governor, Lieut.-GFovernor and all the State officials, and four out of five of the Judges of the Court of Appeals, all the Judges of the Circuit Court except one, and, as far as I am advised, nearly all the prosecuting attorneys and Sheriffs engaged in this treasonable work; with one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals acting as counsel to the Governor. But in Western Virginia, in spite of all this terrorism and powerful influence against them, we found a remarkable unanimity among the people, exhibited at the late election, in favor of the Union, and against the ordinance of secession.

What, again I ask, are we to do? I answer—precisely what we are doing. Form a government for the State of Virginia.—The exigencies of the times demand it. It is the only alternative left us. Two-thirds of the people of the State have been forced into rebellion against the government of the United States. They are also in rebellion against the State of Virginia; because the laws of Virginia recognize the Constitution of the United States, as the supreme law of the land. Are we then to lie still, and let our citizens, who are loyal to the government of the United States, be pressed into the Confederate army to fight against their own government, and their property seized and carried off, to support the Confederate troops, who are being used by the usurpers to break up the government? The oppression which exists in other parts of the State, would have reached the city of Wheeling, had it not been resisted by our action. It would have reached other points on the Ohio river, and our men, instead of now being at home, attending to their business, would have been marshalled to-day upon the plains of Manassas Junction, under the piratical flag of the Southern Confederacy, to fight against the loyal army of the United States.

Two plans have been prepared for the purpose of meeting the present emergency. One is, by a division of the State; the other is, by forming a government for the whole State. If the first were practicable, under the Constitution of the United States, I do not think it would meet the present exigency. Our great, or first object is to put down rebellion and restore peace to the country; and wherever the Southern boundary of the new State might be established, when peace was restored to that line, our authority would stop. But by pursuing the latter course, forming a government for the whole State, as fast as rebellion shall be put down in any section of the State, county elections can be held, men loyal to the Government can be placed in power, who will, by the exercise of their office, restore law and order to the community; and thus, when the rebels are driven out, the whole State will be restored to its former loyalty to the Union. The proper course, I maintain, for us to pursue is, to institute a government for the whole State of Virginia. We are the loyal people of Virginia, entitled by law to the control of its military and civic power, as soon as we can get it. We can get it in a large portion of the State at once. And, then, my firm opinion is, that the Federal Government must succeed in putting down the rebellion in the eastern part of the State, and just as fast as the rebels are driven from that part of the State, law there will be inaugurated under this Government, the offices will be declared vacant, new elections, as I have said, will take place: for as soon as the rebels are driven out the Union element in that section of the State will rise right up and fill the offices. We will have Judges, Sheriffs and Prosecuting Attorneys to enforce the laws. That is the way this thing must work, or not at all. As to dividing the State—which, I have no doubt, will ultimately be done, and which I will favor at the proper time—I would remark that the putting down of rebellion, the lending of a helping hand to aid the Government, the maintenance of constitutional liberty in this land of ours from the St. Larence to the Rio Grande, is of vastly more importance to us, and to the world, than the formation of a new State out of Western Virginia, at this time. Permit me to say, Sir, that I look upon this movement as the brightest scheme and most feasible for putting down the rebellion and restoring peace to the country that has yet been proposed. If we can inaugurate this movement successfully, I am confident the same step will be taken in East Tennessee, West Arkansas, North Alabama, and North Mississippi. It has already been commenced in South Florida. It will finally be carried out in all the seceded States. Then I can see no retreat for secession short of the Gulf of Mexico.

The objection has been urged that it is contrary to our institutions to hold any State in the Union against its own will. We have held New Mexico and California by conquest, and they soon became willing subjects; and my word for it, as soon as rebellion is put down in Eastern Virginia, and other seceding States, and the Union element permitted to rise up, they will freely give their allegiance to the United States.

It has been suggested by intelligent men that we should pass this declaration and adjourn, and wait till we see whether the Federal Government is able to sustain itself, and put down or drive out rebellion in Eastern Virginia: that if the government should fail there Kentucky and Maryland may secede, and we might then have to cast our lots with the Confederate States. This would be the worst policy we could possibly adopt. It would be simply throwing cold water on the Union men of Kentucky and Maryland, and on the efforts of the General Government to put down rebellion.

It simply means that we should stand and look on, preserve our inactivity, and encourage rebellion to succeed, if it can; and after it succeeds, take our fortunes with it! Were I President of the United States to-day, and the representatives of Western Virginia should pursue that course, I would say to them—"I know the Southern army will never come to the Ohio river to do us any harm, but will only wreak its vengeance on you, who have not the nerve to act, who are merely standing looking on with an indifferent eye, to see which party succeeds, and are then willing to fall in with the stronger party, at the conclusion of the fight." But, Sir, there can be no neutrality in this contest; and there need be no doubts on the subject, as to which party will triumph. I tell, you, Sir, the Government must succeed, and will succeed, in putting down rebellion. If we should take this course, the President would be justifiable in withdrawing every soldier from Western Virginia.

But, Sir, we lose by every moment we delay; even now, as is reported, Ex-Gov. Wise is about taking command of forces to invade Western Virginia. He will probably not have a very great force to command; but large or small, we will not wait for him to come here, but will meet him at the top of the Alleghenies, and at the tap of the drum, and at the point of the bayonet will welcome him to a grave that he has merited for his treason heretofore!—There is a spirit abroad in Western Virginia that will support the Government of the United States, that will support the rights and interests of Western Virginia, and that will support the action that this Convention is expected to take here and now. It is necessary, absolutely necessary, that we act as quickly as possible, to provide for our security of life and property, and inaugurate law and order. Let me give you an example of the conditon of Western Virginia as showing reason why we should act and at once. Take the counties of Marion, Taylor, Barbour and Randolph. The Judge, Prosecuting Attorneys and Sheriffs of all those counties have joined the secession army, and left the people without the protection due from them in the exercise of their offices. Such, I presume, is the case with many other counties.

Let us go forward then with our proposed work. Common sense suggests it, the emergency demands it, and the time and the circumstances with which we are surrounded warrant us in carrying it out, may demand that we should do so.

It has been said by some that this is rebellion; that it is setting up a separate government in the State of Virginia. But, Sir, I contend that this is neither revolution nor rebellion. It is merely doing what we are bound to do in this exigency, for the protection of our lives and property. Rebellion implies a guilty knowledge and intent against the law and authority of the land. Murder implies a guilty intent on the part of the party who commits it. The murderer deliberately lies in wait with malice aforethought to take the life of his fellow-man; but the man who is caught in an exigency and meets his fellow-man who attempts to take his life, if he defends himself and kills his assailant, is not a murderer. He merely acts in self-defense. There is none of the attendants of murder attached to the transaction. He is simply doing that which is necessary to protect his life.

So it is with our action here. The Constitution of the United States guarantees to every State (and, I take it, only to the loyal people of that State,) the right of a republican form of government. Our Declaration of Rights of the State of Virginia, declares that the people have the right to peaceably assemble and to alter or amend their form of government, when it may become necessary. Now, Sir, this exigency is upon us. The Government of the State is in rebellion against the United States—against the laws and the loyal people of Virginia. We, representing the loyal people of Virginia, are bound to take immediate action to protect their lives and their property. We. then, assemble peaceably, in this exigency. We assemble lawfully, being sent here by the loyal people of Virginia, according to the mode prescribed by the Convention which met in this city in May last, to do whatever is necessary to be done for the safety and protection of the loyal people of Virginia. And, Sir, I would not be afraid to-day to place my position and that of this Convention, for legality, and to stake my life upon it, before the best jurists and statesmen in the civilized world, who understand anything about constitutional liberty, and the facts with which we are surrounded, and risk their decision. It would and must be in our favor. Reason, common sense, precedent, everything, justifies us in carrying out this proposition. I find, Sir, a high precedent in looking into the acts of our fathers in the time of the Revolution—When Lord Dunmore left the seat of Government of Virginia and went on board the man-of-war, with his Council.

Speaking of the power of the President of the United States to decide which is the true government, where there are two governments in a State, and one or both of which claim the protection of the President under the Constitution of the United States, Chief Justice Taney says:

"It is said that this power in the President is dangerous to liberty and may be abused. All power may be abused if placed in unworthy hands.—But it would be difficult, we think, to point out any other hands in which this power would be more safe, and at the same time more effectual. When citizens of the same State are in arms against each other and the constituted authorities unable to execute the laws, the interposition of the United States must be prompt or it is of little value. The ordinary course of proceedings in Courts of Justice would be utterly unfit for the crisis. And the elevated office of the President, chosen as he is by the people of the United States and the high responsibility he could not fail to feel when acting in a case of so much moment appear to furnish as strong safeguards against wilful abuse of power as human foresight could well provide. At all events it is conferred upon him by the Constitution and Laws of the United States, and must therefore be respected in its judicial tribunals." See Howard's Reports, vol. 7, page 44.

But our action will be submitted to the President and Congress, for their recognition. In loking into this subject, I find it has been distinctly decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, that where a state of facts like this exists—that is, two governments in one State, they may both, or one of them, submit their claims to the government of the United States, in which case the President decides which is the true government of the State, from which there can be no appeal.

Congress has only to see that the government so recognized is republican in form. I am sure and satisfied that the President and Congress must and will recognize us as the rightful government of the State; and will not only recognize us, but will applaud us for the course we have taken, and see that we are sustained in carrying it out. How could the President or Congress doubt on this subject? To do so would be to say by the forms of laws that we were bound to lie till our hands and feet were tied; until our property was taken from us, and ourselves swung upon the gallows! God's law, Nature's law, man's law never did impose any such obligations as these upon any man or any people, where they were acting with a true and loyal heart and upright intention, and a determination to assert legally their rights. Sir, there can be nothing in law, nothing in reason, nothing in principle or in practice, that can be brought against us. Everything is in our favor, and everything must aid and sustain us in our efforts.

APPENDIX B.

A DECLARATION OF RIGHTS

OF THE

PEOPLE OF VIRGINIA,

REPRESENTED IN CONVENTION, AT THE CITY OF WHEELING, THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1861.*

(As Changed, Amended and Adopted.)

The true purpose of all government is to promote the welfare and provide for the protection and security of the governed, and when any form or organization of government proves inadequate for, or subversive of this purpose, it is the right, it is the duty of the latter to abolish it. The Bill of Rights of Virginia, framed in 1776, re-affirmed in 1830, and again in 1851, expressly reserves this right to a maojrity of her people. The act of the General Assembly, calling the Convention which assembled at Richmond in February last, without the previously expressed consent of such majority, was therefore a usurpation; and the Convention thus called has not only abused the powers nominally entrusted to it, but, with the connivance and active aid of the executive, has usurped and exercised other powers, to the manifest injury of the people, which, if permitted, will inevitabley subject them to a military despotism.

*This "DECLARATION OF RIGHTS" is one of the most important State papers of West Virginia. As has been seen, it was reported to the Convention at the forenoon session, Thursday, June 13, 1861, by John S. Carlile, chairman of the Committee on Business, otherwise known as the Committee of Seventeen. For three days it was discussed at much length, and changes and amendments were made. Thereafter it was engrossed on parchment, and late in the evening of June 17th, it was adopted by a vote of fifty-six yeas, nays none. Other members recorded their votes as they came in, and three days later—June 20th—it was formally signed by eighty-three members. The copy here printed is an exact reproduction of that used prefatory to the "Ordinances and Acts of the Restored Government of Virginia, Prior to the Formation of West Virginia, with the Constitution and Laws of the State of West Virginia to March 2, 1866." Reprinted by order of the Legislature that year.—V. A. L.

The Convention, by its pretended ordinances, has required the people of Virginia to separate from and wage war against the government of the United States, and against citizens of neighboring States, with whom they have heretofore maintained friendly, social and business relations:

It has attempted to subvert the Union founded by Washington and his co-patriots, in the purer days of the republic, which has conferred unexampled prosperity upon every class of citizens, and upon every section of the country:

It has attempted to transfer the allegiance of the people to an illegal confederacy of rebellious States, and required their submission to its pretended edicts and decrees:

It has attempted to place the whole military force and military operations of the Commonwealth under the control and direction of such confederacy, for offensive as well as defensive purposes:

It has, in conjunction with the State executive, instituted wherever their usurped power extends, a reign of terror intended to suppress the free expression of the will of the people, making elections a mockery and a fraud:

The same combination, even before the passage of the pretended ordinance of secession, instituted war by the seizure and appropriation of the property of the Federal Government, and by organizing and mobilizing armies, with the avowed purpose of capturing or destroying the Capital of the Union:

They have attempted to bring the allegiance of the people of the United States into direct conflict with their subordinate allegiance to the State, thereby making obedience to their pretended ordinances, treason against the former.

We, therefore, the delegates here assembled in Convention to devise such measures and take such action as the safety and welfare of the loyal citizens of Virginia may demand, having maturely considered the premises, and viewing with great concern the deplorable condition to which this once happy Commonwealth must be reduced unless some regular adequate remedy is speedily adopted, and appealing to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe for the restitude of our intentions, do hereby, in the name and on the behalf of the good people of Virginia, solemnly declare that the preservation of their dearest rights and liberties and their security in person and property, imperatively demand the reorganization of the government of the Commonwealth, and that all acts of said Convention and Executive, tending to separate this Commonwealth from the United States, or to levy and carry on war against them, are without authority and void; and that the offices of all who adhere to the said Convention and Executive, whether legislative, executive or judicial, are vacated.

APPENDIX C.

AN ADDRESS OF THE SECOND CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA—IN SESSION AT WHEELING.

ISSUED ON THE 25TH DAY OF JUNE, 1861.

The Delegates now assembled in Convention at Wheeling, deem it proper to address their fellow-citizens throughout the Commonwealth, in explanation and vindication of the course they have unanimously felt it incumbent on them to pursue.

It is only necessary to allude briefly to the circumstances which called this Convention into existence, to justify, in the fullest manner, any resumption of authority by the people in whose name they act. The General Assembly, which met in extra session at Richmond, in January last, without the excuse of impending danger or other grave necessity, and without constitutional authority, convened a Convention, "to adopt such measures as they may deem expedient for the welfare of the Commonwealth;" thus tamely relinquishing the very power reposed in themselves by the Constitution, and, as the sequel proved, with a corrupt purpose. Elections were held for delegates to the proposed Convention, and it being then clearly understood that an active and influential party favored the secession of the Commonwealth from the United States, the issue presented everywhere was clearly "Secession" or "No Secession". We need not remind you that by a very large majority of the voters of the Commonwealth, secession was rejected and repudiated, by the election of delegates professedly opposed to that iniquity, nor that a still larger majority required that any act of that Convention, altering the fundamental law or affecting the relations of the State, should be submitted to the people, and without the approbation of a majority, expressed at the polls, should have no force or effect.

The proceedings of that Convention up to the seventeenth of April last, were evidently intended by those in the secret to persuade the members favorable to the perpetuity of the Union and the people at large, that it was intended to propose terms on which it could be maintained.—On the day named the mask was thrown aside and the Secession Ordinance was passed. This was done in secret session, and no immediate promulgation of the facts was made to the people; nor until since this Convention assembled, was the injunction of secrecy so far removed that the vote on the passage of the ordinance was made public. It now appears that more than one-third of the whole Convention voted against it, and that nine members were absent. Up to this day the debates which preceded the vote are concealed from the people, who are thus denied a knowledge of the causes which, in the opinion of the majority, rendered secession necessary and justified so gross a disregard of their lately expressed will.

Under the legislative act calling the Convention, from which alone that body derived its authority, and under the vote of the people provided for by that act, the secession ordinance had no legal effect until ratified at the polls by a majority of the voters of the Commonwealth. The leaders of the secession movement, whose conduct proved them to be conspirators against the State of Virginia and the peace and welfare of her people, did not wait until the time fixed for this ratification to begin their overt acts of treason against the Government and people of the United States, as well as the State and people for whom they professed to act. Indeed, two days before the adoption of the ordinance, with the connivance, or, as is alleged, in defiance of a feeble Executive, they levied war against both by sending their emissaries to capture the Harper's Ferry Armory, and to obstruct the entrance of the harbor on which is situated the Gosport Navy Yard. This bold assumption of authority was followed by numerous acts of hostility against the United States; by the levy of troops to aid in the capture of the National Capital and the subversion of the National authority, and, to crown the infamy of the conspirators, with whom the Executive had now coalesced, by an attempt, without even the pretence of authority or acquiescence of the people, to transfer their allegiance from the United States to a league of rebellious States, in arms against the former.

In this state of things, the day arrived when the people were to vote for or against the Secession Ordinance. Threats of personal injury and other intimidations, such as had been uttered upon the floor of the usurping Convention against the remaining friends of the Union there, were used by the adherents of the conspirators in every county of the State. Judges charged the Grand Juries that opposition to disunion would be punished as treasson against the Commonwealth; and the armed partizans of the conspirators in various places, arrested, plundered and exiled peaceable citizens, for no other crime than their adherence to the Union their fathers had constructed and under which they had been born and lived in prosperity and peace. We are not apprised by any official announcement of the result of the vote taken under such circumstances; but, whatever the result may be, we denounce it as unfair and unjust, and as affording no evidence of the will of the people on the subject actually presented for their suffrages, and much less of their consent to the self-constituted oligarchy of the South.

In the point of view in which this result, and the transactions which inevitably led to it, should be examined by the people of Virginia, it is unimportant whether secession was of itself desirable or not desirable; because the end cannot justify the means, if the latter are illegal and unholy. In the present case the great principle which underlies all free government: the principle that the will of the people is the supreme law, or as expressed in the Declaration of Independence, that "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," and in our own Bill of Rights, that "all power is vested in and consequently derived from the people." has not only been violated and set at naught, but has been trampled under foot. In the call of the Convention, in the acts of that body, in the circumstances preceding and accompanying the late election, a continued effort has been made, with what success you know, not merely to desregard the will of the people, but to set at defiance, and to establish the counter principle that the few should govern the many. The men justly termed conspirators and usurpers, because they cannot show your warrant for their acts, were, when this Convention met, practically in full possession of every branch of the State government, and still claim the right to exercise their usurped power; and if you submit to their acts of secession and affiliation with usurpers like themselves, you yield to them the right to govern you in perpetuity. Will your Bill of Rights and Constitution afford you any protection against those who have already violated both? Will your connection with a pretended Confederacy, in every State of which the leaders have openly and directly refused to submit their similar acts to the approval or rejection of their people, aid you in the recovery of the fundamental right of which you have been so wantonly robbed?

But is secession right, or is it desirable if it is right? We will not amplify the argument on the first branch of this enquiry. The ratification of the Constitution of the United States by our own Commonwealth, in express terms, reserves the right to abrogate it to those by whom it was made, the People of the United States; thus repudiating in advance the modern doctrine of separate State secession This is in strict accordance with the views of our elder statesmen, whose patriotism and ability are held in reverence, not only by us and by our fellow citizens of the Union, but by good men throughout the world. It is the logic of every honest heart, that a contract, a compact, or call it what you will, can only be set aside by the joint act of those by whom it was made.

But why should secession be desirable? Why should Virginia desire to withdraw from that Union of which she has been for so long an honored member—that Union, the accomplishment of which illumines with the brightest rays her own history and the lives of her most distinguished sons? Shall it be said that what she toiled to achieve in 1787, was destroyed by her own act in 1861? Is there on the page of history the story of a nation that has risen more rapidly to prosperity and power, or more steadily advanced in intellectual and moral culture? There is no such nation, nor is there among the thirty-four States, one which has profited more by the association, or one which would suffer more from its dissolution, as is sufficiently indicated by our geographical position.

Impressed with these views, the Northwestern counties of the State, knowing that a large majority of their people remained and would remain faithful to the Union under all circumstances, met in Convention at Wheeling on the 13th day of May last, to consult upon their condition and to take such steps as it might indicate. It was literally a mass Convention, and from the irregular manner of the appointment of its delegates, was not calculated for the despatch of business. As the result of its deliberations, the Convention which now addresses you was called, the representation in which is proportioned to that of the General Assembly. The number of counties actually represented is thirty-four, and we have reliable assurance that several which are now with us in spirit, will ere long be present by their regularly appointed delegates. Considering that in so many counties every expression of opinion unfavorable to the conspirators is suppressed, the number already represented is larger than could have been anticipated. Several of the delegates present escaped from their counties at the risk of their lives, while others are still detained at home by force or menace against them or their families and property. Such is doubtless the case in other counties from which we have no information.

Two courses of action were presented to those who now address you upon their organization; both of which had been debated in the previous Convention at this place. The first was the immediate separation of the Western or Northwestern counties from the residue of the State. This was the result rather of a previous and growing belief, now amounting to conviction in the minds of all throughout this section of the State, that diversity, almost opposition of interests; different directions of the channels of trade, and the want of legislation adapted to their conditions, and indispensable to their moral and material prosperity, rendered the separation desirable under any and all circumstances. But aside from the constitutional requirements which made its accomplishment almost impossible while hostilities continued, the consideration that to separate now, would be to separate from many who, under circumstances even more adverse than those by which they had been themselves surrounded, had maintained their loyalty to the Federal Government, caused the abandonment of this course at this time. On the other hand, a sense of duty to those who like themselves, were constrained to repudiate the action of the Richmond Convention and the State authorities, demanded that such a course should be taken as would enable all the loyal citizens of the Commonwealth to participate in its advantages, and to enjoy the security it might offer.

Besides submission to palpable usurpation, there was then but one alternative, namely, under the authority of numerous precedents in the history of nations, to assume the conduct of the government, on the ground that those previously intrusted with its administration, by their numerous illegal and unconstitutional acts in plain derogation of the rights of the people, had, in the language of the Declaration of Independence, "abdicated government by declaring us out of their protection, and waging war against us;" whereby, in the words of the same instrument, "the legislative powers, incapable of annihilation, have returned to the people for their exercise." This Convention, therefore, in humble, but, as they firmly believe, proper imitation of the sages of '76, have, "in the name and on behalf of the good people of Virginia," issued their Declaration, "that the preservation of their dearest rights and liberties, and their security in person and property, imperatively demand the reorganization of the government of the Commonwealth."

In pursuance of the Declaration, we have passed such ordinances as are immediately necessary to re-organize the government, and put it in operation. We have appointed a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Attorney General and Executive Council, leaving to the General Assembly, which we have directed to be convened at a very early day, to fill, or to provide for filling, all other offices as soon as in their judgment, it can be properly done. The terms of the officers we have appointed, are limited to six months or until the election and qualification of their successors, for which the General Assembly is authority to provide at the earliest possible period. In all this, our fellow citizens will clearly perceive that there has been no disposition to assume any power or authority not demanded by the exigencies of their present unhappy condition, or to retain it longer than a regard for their highest interests may require.

In reply to remarks which have been made abroad, we deem it proper to say that we have seen no occasion to take any steps in reference to the debt of the State. The idea of the repudiation of any part of it which was legally contracted has not been expressed or entertained by any member of the Convention. The only notice the subject has received, has been in connection with the proposed separation of the Western counties, and whenever it has been thus named, those desirous of separation, have invariably expressed their willingness to assume their equitable portion of the burden. Any promises of payment or projects of arrangement at this time, when the very existence of the Commonwealth is threatened, would be worse than idle.

Under all these circumstances, with the firm conviction that the course adopted is the only one by which the State can be retained in the Union, and the liberties and rights of the people secured and perpetuated, we most earnestly call upon our loyal fellow-citizens in every county of the Commonwealth, who are not already represented in the General Assembly and in this Convention, to elect members of the Legislature, and appoint Delegates to this body, at the earliest possible moment,—Writs of election will be issued by the Executive whenever it appears that they can be executed, and Representatives from every county will be most cordially received. No suspension or essential change of any part of the Constitution of Laws of the Commonwealth, unless positively demanded by the exigencies of the times, will be made, until the will of the whole people or of their authorized representatives, can be freely expressed and such changes as have been or may hereafter be so demanded, will be submitted for ratification at an early day.

We call upon the loyal citizens of the Commonwealth, to organize and arm for its defense against the conspirators and usurpers at Richmond, and their aiders and abettors. Plans will immediately be devised to give to such organizations, the greatest efficiency. The General Government will aid and protect us to the utmost of their power, and will most unquestionably recognize the re-organized government, as the true and legitimate government of the State. They cannot and will not do otherwise.

The re-organized Government appeals to the great body of the people, for countenance and support in this hour of great anxiety and trial. They do so confidently, because, while there have been many defections from the great and holy cause of "Liberty and Union," among those to whom you have been accustomed to look for political information and direction, there have been comparatively few among yourselves. In this matter, which appeals to your dearest rights and interests, you have responded spontaneously to the promptings of your honest hearts. Your own experience has taught you the great benefits of the Union, and you recognize the great principle, that a government so beneficial in its operations, so mild in its requirements, so powerful to protect, and constituted as to diffuse throughout an immense territory the blessings of prosperity and happiness, "should not be changed for light and transient causes." In every country where the free expression of your views has been permitted, your majorities in favor of the maintenance and perpetuity of the Union, have far exceeded the calculations of the most sanguine among your friends. Persevere then, in your most holy war against the corrupt and perjured oligarchy, who have usurped your government, and would have sold you to the ambitious despots of an unholy affiliation. In such a cause, we may look for the blessings of that Holy One, who has made it a part of His Divine Providence, that those, who in purity of heart and purpose, strive for the preservation of their dearest rights, their homes and their country, although the struggle may be protracted for long and weary years, shall never strive in vain.

By order of the Convention.

ARTHUR I. BOREMAN, President.

GIBSON L. CRANMER, Secretary.

JOURNAL

OF THE SECOND OR ADJOURNED SESSION, OF THE SECOND CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA, RE-ASSEMBLED AT WHEELING, AUGUST 6, 1861, AND ADJOURNED SINE DIE AUGUST 20TH, ENSUING.

ADJOURNED SESSION—FIRST DAY.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 6, 1861.

The State Convention which adjourned on the 25th of June last re-assembled yesterday, pursuant to adjournment, at two P. M., in the United States Court Room in the Custom House of this city.

THE PRESIDENT, Arthur I. Boreman, of Wood county, resumed the Chair and called the Convention to order.

The sitting was opened with prayer by Rev. Gorden Battelle, of the M. E. Church.

MR. WEST, of Wetzel, offered the following preamble and resolution, which were adopted:

WHEREAS, The members of this Convention are satisfied that a large majority of the good and loyal citizens of Western Virginia are in favor of a division of the State, yet there seems to exist a difference of opinion as to the proper time, as well as the proper means to be used to effect the object; therefore Resolved, by the Convention, That in order to produce harmony and facilitate action, the President of the Convention appoint a committee consisting of one member from each county represented in this Convention, whose duty it shall be to take the whole subject of a division of this State into consideration, as a basis upon which the Convention may act, and report to this body at the earliest day possible.

MR. FROST, of Jackson, moved, as several members of the Committee on Credentials were absent, that three additional members be appointed.

The motion was agreed to, and Messrs. Nicholls of Brooke, Caldwell, of Marshall, and Jackson of Lewis, were appointed.

On motion of MR. VAN WINKLE of Wood, it was ordered that the Committee on Credentials have leave to sit during sessions of the Convention.

MR. FROST presented the Credentials of James Smith of Jackson, as claimant to a seat in the Convention.

The papers were referred to the appropriate Committee.

MR. FOLEY, of Doddridge, offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire into the expediency of repealing the Stay Law enacted at the late session of the Legislature.

On the question of adopting the resolution, Mr. Foley demanded the yeas and nays.

The demand was not sustained, and the question being taken by yeas and nays, the resolution was lost.

MR. VAN WINKLE offered the following series of resolutions of inquiry:

1. Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire into the expediency of abolishing the Board of Public Works and conferring the powers and duties thereof on the Governor and Council.

(MR. VAN WINKLE said it would be remembered that a bill abolishing this board, passed the Legislature, but as the Constitution requires a three-fifths vote to abolish the Board of Public Works, and the vote by which it was passed, it was thought by some did not meet the requirements, that act might be null. This resolution merely proposed to make good that enactment.)

2. That the Committee on Business inquire into the propriety of devolving on the Auditor elected under ordinance of this Convention, the duties of both the first and second auditor, as prescribed by the Constitution and laws.

3. That the Committee on Business inquire into the propriety of defining by ordinance what acts of persons lately holding office under the Commonwealth, shall be deemed (and taken to be such) as adhering to the Richmond Convention, and late Executive so as to vacate their offices under the last clause of the Declaration adopted by this Convention on the 17th day of June last.

4. That the Committee on Business, be directed to inquire into the exepdiency of providing for the arrest and punishment of such persons as shall exercise or attempt to exercise the powers and authorities, or perform the duties of an office, which shall have been declared vacant under the ordinance of this Convention.

5. That the Committee on Business, report an ordinance, declaring that the ordinances and other acts of the Convention which assembled at Richmond on the 13th of February last, are null and void and of no force.

6. That the Committee on Business report an ordinance providing for the publication of the ordinances of this Convention, and the public laws passed or hereafter to be passed by the General Assembly, in one newspaper printed in each county of the Commonwealth if any there be, to be paid for at the same rates as are allowed for the newspaper publication of the laws of the United States.

The resolutions were adopted and sent to the Committee on Business.

MR. VAN WINKLE remarked that as the Chairman of that Committee (Mr. Carlile) was at Washington, as the second had not arrived, and the third had been Mr. Pierpont, now Governor, the fourth on the Committee, Mr. Hagans, of Preston, became the Chairman.

MR. HAGANS said he would waive the order in favor of the gentleman from Wood, (Mr. Van Winkle).

MR. VAN WINKLE hoped the gentlemen would not do so, at least not till after calling the committee together. The committee could then make any arrangements they pleased.

MR. HAGANS consented, and named eight [o'clock] next morning for a meeting of the Committee of Seventeen.

MR. FROST moved that when the Convention adjourn, it adjourn till 3 P. M. to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the Convention then adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—SECOND DAY.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1861.

The Convention met at three P. M.

Minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

MR. BROWN, of Preston, from the Committee on Credentials, presented the report of that Committee, stating that George Koontz, of Jefferson, Blackwell Jackson, of Lewis, Thomas Cather of Taylor, Andrew Flesher[1] and James Scott of Jackson, are entitled to seats in the Convention as members of the same.

THE CHAIR stated that such of the gentlemen as were members of the Convention by virtue of their membership in the Legislature, would not need to take the oath, as they had already taken it in qualifying as members of the Legislature.

Messrs, Koontz and Smith then came forward and the oath of office was administered to them by the President.

MR. FLEMING, of Harrison, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire into the expediency of reporting an Ordinance confiscating the real estate of all persons in this Commonwealth who have left their homes and taken up arms in rebellion against the government of the United States.

MR. CRANE, of Randolph, said he did not see why they should subject the real estate to confiscation, and not the personal, of the

1. In the report of the proceedings of this day, printed in the Intelligencer of Wheeling, it is stated that Andrew Flesher was from Mason county. This is an error. He was certainly from Jackson county.—V. A. L.

parties named. He moved to amend the resolution so as to make it read "real and personal."

MR. FLEMING accepted the amendment.

The resolution was then adopted.

MR. CRANE, of Randolph, offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire into the expediency of allowing the Sheriffs and other collectors of the public revenue, an additional compensation to that now allowed by law for a limited time.

Adopted.

MR. FARNSWORTH, of Upshur, offered the following:

WHEREAS, The late Legislature refused to give its consent for a division of the State or the formation of a new State; and, whereas, we deem it necessary in compliance with the Constitution of the United States to have such consent before the creation of a new State, therefore

Resolved, That we deem it unwise at this time for this Convention to take action for a division of the State, and that when it adjourns on Friday next, it will adjourn sine die.

MR. WEST moved to lay the resolution on the table. It was calculated to embarrass the prosecution of business, and he did not want to get into another snarl.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved to amend by referring the resolution to the committee on the subject raised yesterday. He subsequently withdrew the motion.

MR. HAGANS said he was instructed by Dr. Parsons, who was unwell, to have him sent for by the Sergeant-at-Arms, if any test vote should be taken.

MR. WEST thought the Convention should at once put down everything calculated to impede its business, and of course such a resolution as this would do it.

MR. FARNSWORTH demanded the yeas and nays.

MR. CRANE, of Randolph, said it was his impression that according to the rules adopted for the government of the Convention, the resolution having been objected to, must lie over.

THE PRESIDENT said there was no such rule as far as he was aware.

MR. VAN WINKLE thought the resolution should take the same direction as the resolutions yesterday. He had made his motion to amend with that view. If the yeas and nays were to be called he would have to call for a division of the question, for the resolution provides for two distinct objects, an expression of sentiment, as well as an adjournment.

MR. CRANE, of Randolph, thought the preamble might go to a committee, but the latter part could not.

MR. MARTIN, of Wetzel, wished to say a word or two about the disposition of the resolution.

THE PRESIDENT said the question before the Convention was not debatable, and that the first question was on the motion to divide the question.

MR. WEST had not understood the gentleman from Wood to call for a division of the question. His motion was to refer. If he did so, it was after the yeas and nays were demanded. After a motion to lay upon the table, there was no parliamentary rule that justified the division of the question. The motion to lay on the table carries the whole subject with it.

MR. FROST had understood the gentleman from Wood to call for a division of the question.

THE PRESIDENT—He did.

MR. FROST—He certainly did so before the call was made for the yeas and nays.

THE PRESIDENT said it was for the Convention to decide whether they would divide, and whether they would lay the resolution on the table, or part of it.

The question, shall the question be divided? was put and decided in the negative.

The question recurred on laying the resolution on the table.

On this question the yeas and nays, having been demanded and the demand sustained, were taken and resulted as follows:

YEAS:—Messrs. Berkshire, Burley, Brown, Burdett, Broski, Barrick, Crawford, Crane of Preston, Crane of Randolph, Cather, Caldwell, Carskadon, Davidson, Douglas, Foley, Fleming, Hale, Hagans, Hooton, Howard, Jackson, Kramar, Koontz, Lightburn, Love, Martin of Wetzel, Mason, Michael, Myers, Nicholls, Smith, (C. W.) Slack, Snider, Swan, Taft, West, Withers, Williamson of Pleasants and Zinn.—39.

NAYS:—Messrs. Atkinson, Boreman of Tyler, Barns, Brumfield, Downey, Farnsworth, Flesher, Fast, Frost, Graham, Harrison, Hubbard, Johnson, Logan, Porter, Ritchie, Smith (Fontain), Scott, Stuart, Trout, Todd, Van Winkle, Wilson, Watson, and Boreman of Wood (President.)—25.

Remainder of members absent.

So the motion prevailed, and the resolution went to the table.

THE PRESIDENT said: "The gentleman from Doddridge (Mr. Foley) yesterday offered a resolution of inquiry in regard to a repeal of the Stay Law, and asked for the yeas and nays upon it. The Chair decided at the time that there was not a sufficient number up to sustain the demand: In [this] that he had been mistaken, not having read the rule since he left the Chair at the close of the other session. The rule requires seven besides the mover. He had confounded it with the rule requiring twenty to second a call for the previous question. The gentleman was entitled to the yeas and nays on his resolution."

The resolution was read by the Clerk as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire into the expediency of repealing the Stay Law passed during the late session of the Legislature.

MR. STUART said it was a mere resolution of inquiry, and he hoped the house would grant the gentleman the favor.

THE PRESIDENT said the gentleman from Doddridge had a right to demand the yeas and nays, and he would now again put the question, is the demand for the yeas and nays sustained?

A sufficient number rose, and the question on the adoption of the resolution was put. The roll was called and resulted yeas, 24; nays, 41.

So the resolution was rejected.

THE PRESIDENT then announced the following gentlemen as the Committee appointed under the resolution of the gentleman from Wetzel, (Mr. West.)

COMMITTEE ON A DIVISION OF THE STATE.

Messrs. West of Wetzel, Crawford of Hancock, Nicholls of Brooke, Wilson of Ohio, Burley of Marshall, Johnson of Tyler, Stuart of Doddridge, Williamson of Pleasants, Douglas of Ritchie, Van Winkle of Wood, Flesher of Jackson, Wetzel of Mason, Brumfield of Wayne, Kramer of Monongalia, Barns of Marion, Cather of Taylor, Zinn of Preston, Parsons of Tucker, Crane of Randolph, Myers of Barbour, Smith of Upshur, Lightburn of Lewis, Withers of Gilmer, Davis of Harrison, Graham of Wirt, Slack of Kanawha, Trout of Hampshire, Hawxhurst of Fairfax, and Miner of Alexandria.

MR. FLESHER offered the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Committee on a Division of the State be requested to inquire into the expediency of taking the sense of the people in all the counties lying west of a line from the northeast corner of Tennessee and running to the top of the Allegheny mountains to the State of Maryland, on the question of a division of the State.

2. That the sense so required shall be taken by a vote in the usual forms at the several places of holding elections in the said counties, on a day fixed by this Convention in the month of October next.

3. That if a majority of the voters shall cast their votes on that day in favor of a division of the State, the Legislature shall be requested and empowered to pass a law calling a Convention to assemble at the Capital at Wheeling, at as early a day as may be, for the purpose of forming a constitution, and doing all other things necessary to be done for the proper organizing of Western Virginia into a State to be called the State of New Virginia.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on a Division of the State.

MR. TODD, of Taylor, offered the following:

WHEREAS, The Legislature of this Commonwealth, which met in Wheeling during the month of July, 1861, did refuse to give her consent for a division of the State, therefore

Resolved, That this Convention deem it inexpedient at this time to further legislate on the subject.

Referred to Committee on a Division of the State.

MR. VAN WINKLE reported from that Committee, ordinances with the following titles:

An Ordinance declaring null and void the proceedings of the Richmond Convention of 1861.

An Ordinance providing for the discharge of the duties of the office of Second Auditor.

An Ordinance providing for the publication in newspapers of the Ordinances of this Convention and the laws passed by the General Assembly.

An Ordinance providing for the discharge of the duties of the Board of Public Works.

The ordinances thus reported were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MR. STUART moved to suspend the rule for the purpose of reconsidering the vote referring the resolution offered by the gentleman from Taylor (Mr. Todd.)

Lost.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved that the convention, when it adjourn, adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock next morning. The Committees need more time than the Convention, and this would give them some time to prepare business.

The motion was agreed to.

The Convention then adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—THIRD DAY.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1861.

The convention met at 11 A. M.

Prayer by Rev. J. T. McClure, of the United Presbyterian Church.

Minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

MR. CARLILE said he had drawn up some resolutions which he desired to submit to the Convention as a sort of test of their sentiment on a question which he believed had occupied their time since their meeting—a division of the State. He wished to offer some remarks in support of them though he was advised that his health would not permit him to enforce his views as he would like to. He would submit the resolutions merely as suggestive, and the Convention could dispose of them as they saw fit. He then desired to give the reasons that forced themselves upon his mind, and brought him to the conclusion that action in the direction pointed out in the resolution should be at once taken. He read the resolutions as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business be instructed to report an ordinance providing for the formation of a separate State out of, and to be composed of the following counties, to-wit: Jefferson, Berkeley, Morgan, Hampshire, Hardy, Barbour, Braxton, Brooke, Cabell, Calhoun, Clay, Doddridge, Gilmer, Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Kanawha, Lewis, Marion, Marshall, Mason, Monongalia, Ohio, Pleasants, Ritchie, Putnam, Randolph, Preston, Roane, Taylor, Tucker, Tyler, Upshur, Wood, Wayne, Webster, Wirt, Wetzel.—38.

2. That the Committee on Business be instructed to report an ordinance providing that any county lying contiguous to the boundary proposed for the new State, a majority of whose people shall express a desire to be admitted into the proposed new State, shall form a part thereof.

3. That the same Committee be instructed to report a constitution and form of government for the said proposed State, to be submitted to the people thereof for ratification or rejection, at the polls, on the 4th day of October next, and at the same time the sense of said voters to be taken on the question of the formation of said new State.

MR. CARLILE followed at length in support of his resolutions, and was replied to briefly by Mr. Stuart, who moved to lay the resolutions on the table.

[The remarks of these gentlemen will appear as early as practicable.—Editor].

MR. SNIDER demanded the yeas and nays, and the demand was sustained.

MR. CRANE, of Randolph, did not think the resolutions ought to be laid on the table. They had already wasted an hour in the discussion—

MR. STUART inquired if the motion to table was debatable at this time.

THE PRESIDENT said the merits of the question could not be argued.

1. The speeches of John S. Carlile and Chapman J. Stuart, here referred to by the editor, were printed in the Daily Intelligencer of Wheeling, August 10, 1861, and are reproduced therefrom in full in Appendix B at the end of the Journal of this session of the convention.—V. A. L.

MR. CRANE had desired to say something on the merits of the question, but supposed under the rule he would be precluded. He had always, in his short experience, opposed laying resolutions on the table as a waste of time. An indefinite postponement effected something, as it was generally equivalent to a defeat, but laying on the table only gave time for a renewal of the fight, exhausting our energies, and consuming time without accomplishing anything.—

THE PRESIDENT read the rule, that "when a motion to lay on the table is made, there shall be no debate on that or on any incidental question arising out of it."

MR. CRANE gave way.

MR. CALDWELL, of Marshall, moved that the gentleman from Randolph be permitted to discuss not only the motion to lay upon the table but the merits of the question.

MR. LIGHTBURN said he intended to vote for the resolutions, but as the hour of 12 had passed, he moved a recess till 2 o'clock.

MR. HOOTON called the previous question of laying on the table.

MR. DORSEY rose to a point of order, and inquired if a motion to adjourn could be entertained when a question was about to be put?

THE PRESIDENT thought not after having proceeded to take the vote; but sometimes a question was discussed for days, and if they could not take a recess they would have to sit a good while without anything to eat.

MR. STUART inquired if the question would not have to be put before the motion to adjourn could be entertained?

THE PRESIDENT thought not.

MR. DORSEY desired to know whether any business could intervene between the calling for the yeas and nays, and the putting of the question itself.

MR. CARLILE said his little experience taught him that a motion to adjourn can be put at any time after the yeas and nays have been ordered, before a response to the call. A motion to adjourn was always in order under their rules, and under general parliamentary law.

MR. LIGHTBURN had made his motion because, under the motion of the gentleman from Marshall, time would be consumed in a discussion that could not now be so disposed of. If he would withdraw the motion to allow the discussion to proceed, he (Lightburn) would withdraw his, otherwise, he must insist on it.

MR. CALDWELL declined to do so.

The question was then put, and the Convention took a recess till 2 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convention met at two o'clock.

THE PRESIDENT said the pending question was, "Shall the member from Randolph be permitted to address the House on the merits of the question of laying the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Harrison upon the table."

A running discussion of some length ensued.

MR. CRANE did not wish the matter to be pressed.

MR. NICHOLLS asked his friend from Doddridge to withdraw his motion to lay on the table, in order that he might make a motion to refer to the Committee on a Division of the State.

THE PRESIDENT said it could not be done.

After some further parley, the yeas and nays, having been ordered on the question to lay the resolutions on the table, were taken and resulted as follows:

YEAS:—Messrs. Atkinson, Boreman of Tyler, Barns, Burley, Broskl, Barrick, Crawford, Caldwell, Carskadon, Downey, Flesher, Fast, Gist, Graham, Harrison, Hubbard, Hawxhurst, Johnson, Koontz, Lamb, Mason, Nicholls, Porter, Polsley, Ritchie, Smith (Jas. H.), Smith (Fontain), Stuart, Tarr, Trout, Todd, Van Winkle, West, Watson, Farnsworth, Slack, and Boreman of Wood (President.)—37.

NAYS:—Messrs. Brown, Burdett, Cather, Carlile, Crane of Preston, Crane of Randolph, Dorsey, Douglass, Ferrell, Fleming, Hale, Hagans, Hooton, Howard, Jackson, Kramer, Lightburn, Love, Martin, of Wetzel, Myers, Michael, Price, Smith of Pleasants, Scott, Snider, Swan, Withers, Williamson of Pleasants, Wilson, Zinn, Frost and Davidson—35.

So the motion to table the resolution prevailed.

MR. BROWN from the Committee on Credentials, reported adversely on the claims to a seat in the Convention of Jonathan Roberts, of Alexandria. He said it was desired that the case should come before the Convention for its action.

MR. HAWXHURST moved that the credentials be read. They were so read, and after some discussion, MR. LIGHTBURN moved their recommitment, which was agreed to.

MR. ZINN presented a petition of citizens of Preston county, praying for a division of the State, which on his motion, was referred to the Committee on Division of State.

MR. WEST offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the appropriate Committee be instructed to report an ordinance to so amend the Constitution of the State as to provide for the creation of new counties of a less area than is required at present by the Constitution.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved a reference to the Committee on Business; which was agreed to.

MR. HOOTON presented three other petitions from citizens of Preston, similar to that offered by his colleague.

They were referred to the same committee as the others.

MR. FARNSWORTH offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all persons claiming the right to vote at any election, shall be required before doing so, to take the oath of allegiance as adopted and prescribed by the Convention which met in Wheeling on the 11th day of June last: Provided, however, that all persons having once taken the oath, shall not be required to take it a second time; nor shall any person refusing to take such oath be eligible or serve on grand or petit juries.

An extended discussion upon this resolution took place.

MESSRS. CARLILE, CRANE of Randolph, and VAN WINKLE opposed its adoption.

FONTAIN SMITH advocated it.

MR. CARLILE moved to indefinitely postpone.

MR. WEST opposed the indefinite postponement.

MR. DORSEY said if the gentleman from Harrison would withdraw his motion, he would move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Business.

MR. CARLILE withdrew it.

MR. DORSEY moved the reference indicated.

MR. FARNSWORTH rose for the purpose of withdrawing the resolution. He had been really somewhat opposed to the sentiment of the resolution and had offered it more in compliance with the wishes of his constituents than his own. But since there had been so much said about the merits of it he did not think it after all so very objectionable. He withdrew it.

THE PRESIDENT decided that it could not be withdrawn. A motion had been made by the gentleman from Monongalia to refer.

The question on referring to the Committee on Business was taken and decided in the affirmative.

MR. LIGHTBURN offered the following which was referred to the same committee:

Resolved, That the Constitution be so amended as to render all persons ineligible to hold any office of profit or trust in the Commonweaith who voted for the ordinance, and yet adhere to the doctrine of secession.

MR. MARTIN of Wetzel offered the following, which was similarly referred:

Resolved, That all persons having taken the oath required of the officers of the government who since have voted for the Ordinance of Secession, and all other persons having before and after voted for said Ordinance advanced secession principles, shall be disqualified for exercising the functions of any office in the Commonwealth during hostilities between the United States and the seceded States.

MR. VAN WINKLE offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That all resolutions or motions requiring the enactment of ordinances or laws, shall not be acted upon by the Convention until the same shall have been reported upon by a committee.

He also moved that the consideration of the ordinances reported by the Committee on Business be made the order of the day for to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. DAVIDSON observed that Mr. Smith of Upshur, who had been appointed on the Committee on a Division of State, was not present in the Convention, and moved that Mr. Farnsworth be appointed in lieu of him.

The motion was agreed to and Mr. Farnsworth appointed.

The Convention then adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

ADJOURNED SESSION—FOURTH DAY,

FRIDAY, AUGUST 9, 1861.

The Convention met at 11 A. M.

Prayer by Rev. S. R. Brockunier, of the M. E. Church.

Minutes read and approved, with a slight amendment.

The ordinances reported by the Committee on Business, which came up as the order of the day, were taken up, and the following passed:

An Ordinance, providing for the discharge of the duties of the Board of Public Works.

The people of Virginia by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling do ordain as follows:

1. Until the General Assembly shall direct an election of members of the Board of Public Works, and the same shall be duly elected and qualified, the Governor and Auditor and Treasurer shall constitute the said Board, and shall exercise the authority and discharge the duties thereof. The Secretary of the Commonwealth shall discharge the duties of the Clerk of said Board.

2. This Ordinance shall take effect from its passage.

An Ordinance, providing for the discharge of the duties of the office of Second Auditor.

The people of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. The duties of the office of Second Auditor, as prescribed by the laws now in force, shall, until the vacancy now existing in said office is filled by the General Assembly, be discharged by the Auditor of Public Accounts, without additional compensation.

2. This Ordinance shall take effect from its passage; and may be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

An Ordinance declaring null and void the proceedings of Richmond Convention of 1861.

The people of Virginia, by their delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

All Ordinances, Acts, Orders, Resolutions and other proceedings of the Convention which assembled at Richmond on the thirteenth day of February last, being without the authority of the people of Virginia constitutionally given, and in derogation of their rights, are hereby declared illegal, inoperative, null, void and without force or effect.

The following was also considered and rejected by 32 yeas to 38 nays, Mr. Carlile having called for the yeas and nays.

An Ordinance providing for the publication in newspapers of the Ordinances of the Convention, and the Public Laws passed by the General Assembly.

The People of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. The Ordinances of this Convention, heretofore and hereafter passed, and the Acts of the General Assembly passed at its recent session, and all public Acts hereafter passed by that body, shall be published, once only, in two newspapers printed at the seat of Government, one of which shall be in the German language, and in one newspaper printed in each County of the State, if any there be. The said newspapers shall be designated by the Governor, and shall be paid for such publication at the rates allowed for the newspaper publication of the Laws of the United States.

2. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of this Convention and the Clerk of the House of Delegates, to furnish to the publishers of the newspapers designated by the Governor, as soon as practicable, accurate written or printed copies of the Ordinances of the Convention and Acts of the General Assembly heretofore passed, and immediately upon their passage, similar copies of such Ordinances and Acts as may be hereafter passed by those bodies respectively.

3. Proclamation and other instruments of a general nature, or relating to the Commonwealth at large, emanating from the Executive Department and Offices, and required to be published, shall be inserted in the same newspapers as many times as may be directed by the Governor, and be paid for at the usual advertising rates. The Secretary of the Commonwealth shall furnish to said newspapers accurate written or printed copies of such Proclamations and other instruments.

4. This Ordinance shall take effect from its passage and be in force until amended or repealed by the Legislature.

The consideration of these ordinances occupied nearly the whole of the session. MR. VAN WINKLE, who reported them from the Committee on Business, explained and advocated all of them.

The principal discussion occurred upon the rejected ordinance, providing for the publication of the public laws and ordinances.

It was advocated by Messrs. Van Winkle, Frost and Boreman of Tyler, and opposed by Messsrs. Nicholls; Crane of Randolph, and Carlile, each of whom spoke upon it.

MR. KRAMER offered the following as a substitute:

The people of Virginia, by their delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling do ordain as follows:

That 20,000 copies of the Ordinances of this Convention, and Public Laws passed by the General Assembly, be published and distributed among the members of the Convention for publication.

MR. CRANE moved to substitute 10,000 copies.

Lost.

The substitute was rejected.

So the Convention refused to take action looking to the publication of the public laws.

MR. BROWN, from the Committee on Credentials again reported adversely on the claims of Jonathan Roberts, of Alexandria, to a seat in the Convention.

The credentials were laid upon the table.

MR. DORSEY moved an adjournment, but withdrew the motion to allow

MR. BURLEY to offer the following resolution:

Resolved. That when the Convention adjourn tomorrow it will adjourn sine die.

MR. BURLEY remarked that he offered the resolution in good faith. He did not think it necessary for the Convention to remain here any longer. He had discovered that they were not getting along as well as they might, and he thought this would afford plenty of time, if they would be more industrious to do all the work there was to do. "I have been in the committee this morning. I find there is nothing before it except this Division question. There is a sub-committee to draft a bill and I think they should be able to prepare that at a very early hour in the morning, and the Convention has nothing before them but to act upon it."

MR. WEST—"I rise for a two-fold purpose, and whether I can accomplish both or either one, I do not know. My object is to give the resolution of my respected friend from Marshall—Old Jimmy —I am old Jimmy, too,"—(laughter).

THE PRESIDENT—Gentlemen will forbear calling one another by name.

MR. WEST—"We know each other; we do that by way of compliment to each other. (Laughter.) However, I have had a good deal of this sort of experience, and I find that a motion of this kind has never failed to clog the wheels of the progress of legislation. As certain as the sun rose this morning and will rise tomorrow morning if that resolution is not disposed of today, it has to be disposed of at some other time; and whenever it is, it must embarrass our action; and I know the gentleman from Marshall does not intend to clog and impede the progress of this House. But I do know one more thing, that there will be an effort to adjourn this Convention before this question of Division is decided upon; and I do know, Sir, as well as I know that, that if such is the fact, and we so adjourn, we go home to an insulted constituency. We go home to a constituency that has just cause to be insulted. Did they send us here to play and trifle with them? Did they send us here, Sir, to act as a mockery upon their expressed desires?"

MR. VAN WINKLE—"Will the gentleman give way for a moment?"

MR. WEST—"Yes, Sir."

MR. VAN WINKLE—"Mr. President, I move to adjourn."

MR. WEST—"Not for an adjournment,—(Laughter). I cannot give way for an adjournment."

THE PRESIDENT said the motion was not in order, the gentleman was making a speech.

MR. VAN WINKLE—"He gave way, Sir."

THE PRESIDENT—"He was interrupted."

MR. WEST—"I know my good friend from Wood does not intend to deprive me of the privilege of speaking, because I believe, if I am not mistaken, he is a new State man himself. The gentleman from Wood knows that there is something more in that than just black and white. I think that every thinking man who is a new State man, knows that there is something more in that than merely a piece of paper writing—"

MR. BURLEY—"I do not wish the gentleman to labor under a mistake too long at a time without correcting it. I assure you, Sir, if there is any honor in man, I had no such object in view in offering the resolution as he attributed to me. I do so, believing that we have plenty of time to consider and act on the question the gentleman desires, and do it right if gentlemen will only go to work and improve the time. I insisted on a meeting of the committee yesterday, but it was very warm, and gentlemen thought it would be too much labor, and there we were all the afternoon lounging about doing nothing. I do not know for my part when this Convention is going to adjourn if we are allowed to go on in this kind of style. I do not wish to choke off any gentleman, or choke off any measure here. I want everything done fairly and honestly. If this question is entitled to more consideration let it be granted; but I am one of the last that wants to remain here doing nothing and taxing the community with it."

MR. WEST—"I move a recess until three o'clock."

MR. VAN WINKLE—"I move as an amendment, to adjourn."

The motion was put and the Convention adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—FIFTH DAY,

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1861.

The Convention assembled at the regular hour.

Prayer by Rev. John M. Phelps, of the M. E. Church.

MR. VAN WINKLE inquired if the resolution of the gentleman from Marshall, pending when the Convention adjourned yesterday, was the business in order.

THE PRESIDENT stated that the resolution had been withdrawn.

MR. VAN WINKLE then desired to report some ordinances from the Committee on Business.

MR. WEST said the Committee on a Division of the State was prepared to report. He wished the report to be received and read, so that if there should be any substitutes offered they could be offered at once, and all be printed and come up for consideration at the same time.

THE PRESIDENT said there was a question of privilege for the Convention to decide upon. A gentleman was here claiming a seat, and it was proper that the case should be decided upon before any important vote came up. The Committee on Credentials had reported adversely on his claims and the report laid on the table. This matter took precedence.

THE SECRETARY read the report of the Committee on Credentials reporting adversely upon the claims of Jonathan Roberts, of Fairfax county, to a seat in the Convention.

MR. HAWXHURST moved that the report of the Committee be disagreed to.

MR. HOOTON, on that question, demanded the yeas and nays and the demand was sustained.

Quite a lengthy discussion ensued upon the claims of Mr. Roberts to a seat, and the whole subject was thoroughly ventilated.

At length MR. STUART demanded the previous question, which was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 33, nays 39.

So the motion to disagree with the adverse report of the Committee was not agreed to.

MR. FROST moved to lay the report upon the table.

The motion was lost.

The question on concurring in the report recurring, it was put and decided in the affirmative.

So the Convention refused to admit Mr. Roberts to a seat.

MR. LAMB offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary procure, if practicable, a file of the papers and proceedings of this Convention, the papers and proceedings of the Convention which assembled in the city of Wheeling on the 13th of May last, together with the papers and proceedings of the Central and other Committees thereby appointed.

MR. CATHER offered the following:

WHEREAS, a portion of the people of the Southern States, in violation of their constitutional obligations, have attempted a dissolution of this Union and have thus precipitated the country into civil war; therefore,

Resolved, That the action of Congress, in voting men and money to suppress the rebellion and preserve the Union, receives the hearty approval of this Convention.

MR. JOHNSON offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire into the expediency of reporting an ordinance providing for the repair of State arms.

MR. FROST offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire whether any additional legislation is required to give efficiency to an act passed at the late session of the General Assembly, entitled "An Act to prevent offences against the Commonwealth, and provide for the organization of patrols during the war," and that they report by ordinance or otherwise.

MR. POLSLEY offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business be instructed to prepare and report an ordinance for the immediate and thorough re-organization of the militia, and for the more frequent and regular training of the same.

MR. FARNSWORTH offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appointing collectors on the Clarksburg, Buckhannon and French Creek Turnpike, and the Staunton and Parkersburg Turnpike, and the receiving of the tolls already collected; and making some provision for the repairing of the said roads, which are becoming in bad repair by the increased use of the roads by the U. S. troops.

All of which were adopted.

MR. FAST offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire into the expediency of changing the name of the county of Wise to that of Douglas, or some other name more honorable than that of Wise. (Laughter.)

FONTAIN SMITH moved to lay it upon the table.

The motion was rejected, and the resolution adopted.

MR. RITCHIE offered the following:

1. Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to any compromise with the rebels, short of laying down their arms and returning to their allegiance to the United States Government; and that we will hold all who aid and abet any such compromise, as enemies not only to the government of our fathers, but as enemies to human liberty throughout the world.

2. Resolved, That we will aid the Administration at Washington in suppressing the rebellion with all our powers, both morally and physically, and studiously guard against all acts and doing that would militate in the least degree against the Union cause or embarrass the Administration in putting down the rebellion.

Laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

MR. CRANE moved the reading of the report of the Committee on a Division of the State.

The report, being an ordinance providing for a division of the State and the erection of a new State, was read.

After a good deal of parley, the rule was suspended to allow a number of substitutes for the ordinance to be offered.

The following gentlemen offered substitutes: Messrs. Dorsey, Kramer, Burley, Farnsworth, Zinn, Brown, Martin of Wetzel, and Flesher.

The ordinance and all the substitutes, together with a minority report offered by Mr. Johnson, were ordered to be printed, and upon motion of Mr. Paxton, were made the special order for Tuesday at 10 o'clock, and to continue the order each day until disposed of.

MR. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Business, reported ordinances with the following titles, which were laid on the table and ordered to be printed:

An Ordinance in regard to the collection of the public revenue.

An Ordinance ascertaining and declaring in what cases offices are vacated under the Declaration of June, 1861.

An Ordinance providing for the punishment of certain offences.

The Convention then adjourned to Monday.

ADJOURNED SESSION—SIXTH DAY.

MONDAY, AUGUST 12, 1861.

The Convention met at the regular hour, and was opened with prayer by Rev. Gideon Martin, of the M. E. Church.

Minutes read and approved.

MR. LAMB, from the Committee on Credentials, reported that George C. Bowyer, a member of the House of Delegates from Putnam county, was entitled as such to a seat in the Convention.

MR. POLSLEY called attention to the fact that the delegates from that county were also present, and moved that they be qualified and take their seats.

The three gentlemen then came forward and the oath was administered to them by the President.

MR. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Business, reported on the following resolutions of inquiry, referred to that Committee, that they deemed it inexpedient to legislate upon them at this time:

The resolution offered by Mr. Farnsworth, relative to appointing collectors of toll on the Clarksburg, Buckhannon and French Creek Turnpike and the Staunton and Parkersburg Turnpike and the repairing of the same.

The resolution offered by Mr. Johnson, relative to repairing State arms.

That offered by Mr. West relative to so changing the constitution as to allow counties to be organized with a less area than now allowed.

That offered by Mr. Fleming relative to the confiscation of the real and personal estate of parties engaged in the rebellion.

THE CHAIRMAN said it was not deemed expedient at this time to act upon this resolution because the act of the United States was not before the Committee, not but that something might hereafter be necessary to be done on this subject.

That offered as to allow counties to be organized with a less area than now allowed.

That offered by Mr. Fast relative to changing the name of Wise County.

The reports on Mr. Farnsworth's, Mr. Johnson's, Mr. Fleming's, and Mr. Fast's resolutions were concurred in.

That on Mr. West's was laid upon the table.

The ordinances reported from the Committee on Business coming up for consideration, the ordinance in relation to the collection of public revenue was, after considerable discussion, passed as follows:

An Ordinance in relation to the Collection of the Public Revenue.

The People of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention, at Wheeling, do ordain as foflows:

1. There shall be allowed to every Sheriff and Collector, for collecting the revenue levied in the year 1861, in addition to that now allowed by law, a commission of two and one-half per centum on the amount of taxes with which he is chargeable, and if the Sheriff or Collector of any county or Corporation, where the amount of taxes with which he is chargeable does not exceed the sum of ten thousand dollars, shall pay the same, or any part thereof, into the Treasury within the time now required by law, he shall be allowed a further additional commission of two and one-half per centum on the amount so paid.

2. This Ordinance shall be in force from its passage and may be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

The second ordinance under consideration being "An ordinance ascertaining and declaring in what cases offices are vacated under the act of June 17, 1861," was taken up and subjected to a very lengthy and critical discussion.

It was finally recommitted to the Committee on Business, and the Convention took a recess till three o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at three P. M.

The following ordinance was taken up and after considerable discussion, was passed:

An Ordinance to Provide for the Punishment of Certain Offences, and for Other Purposes.

The people of Virginia, by their delegates assembled in Convention, at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. Every former-incumbent of an office which has been, or shall be declared vacant by any Declaration or Ordinance of this Convention, or any Act of the General Assembly, who shall exercise, or attempt to exercise, the functions of such office, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisonment in the County Jail not exceeding one year.

2. The office of any person who has heretofore taken and subscribed, or shall hereafter take and subscribe, the oath or affirmation, prescribed by the Ordinance of this Convention; entitled "An Ordinance for the Re-organization of the State Government," and who after taking and subscribing such oath or affirmation, shall by any overt act, or by publicly writing or speaking, support and uphold, or attempt to support and uphold the usurped government at Richmond, or the pretended government of the so-called Confederate States, is hereby declared vacant, and the Governor, if satisfactory evidence be produced thereof, upon due notice of the charge to the party to be effected thereby, shall proceed to fill such vacancy, or cause the same to be filled in the mode prescribed by the fifth section of the above cited Ordinance. But nothing herein contained shall prevent the indictment and punishment of such persons for the crime of perjury.

3. This Ordinance shall be in force from its passage, and may be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

MR. CRANE offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Business inquire into the expediency of providing, by ordinance, for the punishment of all citizens of this Commonwealth who are known to be in, or who shall hereafter enter the Confederate army either as citizens or soldiers and all persons who shall hereafter give money, property or counsel to the Confederate army.

MR. VAN WINKLE offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That all the Ordinances reported by the Committee on Business at the present session, or which have been or may hereafter be passed by the Convention, shall be recommitted to the said committee for revision before being reported.

The Convention then adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—SEVENTH DAY.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 13, 1861.

The Convention met at 10 A. M.

Prayer by Rev Wesley Smith.

Minutes read and approved.

THE PRESIDENT presented a communication from Lot Bowen of Harrison, resigning his seat in the Convention, in consequence of his relations with the United States Army preventing his attendance.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved to lay the communication on the table.

Agreed to.

The order of the day, it being the ordinance reported by the Committee on the Division of State, and the substitute for the same, was taken up.

MR. FROST moved to pass by the order of the day for the present, to enable some unfinished business to be considered.

MR. WEST hoped the gentleman would not insist on the motion. He thought all other considerations subordinate to the question now before them.

MR. FARNSWORTH asked the member from Jackson to withdraw his motion for the present, to allow him to withdraw his proposition now before the Convention, and offer another as a compromisory substitute for the whole matter before the Convention.

MR. FROST withdrew the motion.

MR. FARNSWORTH asked leave to withdraw his proposition, which was granted.

He then offered the substitute, which was read by the Clerk, and ordered to be printed, not as a substitute for the whole, but simply in place of the one withdrawn, as a substitute for the report of the Committee.

The order of the day again recurring,

MR. FROST renewed his motion to pass by for the present. He said there were some gentlemen who had not expected the discussion to come up till to-morrow, now absent, and he desired to afford them an opportunity to be present when it came up.

MR. CRANE opposed passing by. The Convention were here on expense, and the gentlemen could get here before a vote would be taken.

The subject was one of great importance, and one upon which patriots and statesmen ought not to be divided. If now was not the time to consider it, would some gentleman tell him when would be the time? He believed the only questions that would divide them were the questions of boundary and of time, and he thought they might as well consider them to-day as any other time.

MR. STUART opposed passing by this morning. He wanted to act on the propositions at once, as they had already elicited one argument and soon would elicit others, to relieve gentlemen of their arguments as fast as possible, as he understood there were a great many who desired to be relieved. If the discussion was to take place the sooner the better.

MR. WEST would prefer to proceed at once. He did not intend now to enter into the subject. He was sure if he did, the gentleman from Doddridge would take advantage of the opportunity offered him to make another speech. He would only say that it was a very important and interesting matter—the only subject, indeed, before the Convention that particularly interested the people. He was not particular whether it was passed by for one day or not, as there was other business that could very well occupy one day, and that would come up tomorrow. His own preference was, however, to proceed.

MR. SNIDER demanded the yeas and nays on the question of passing by the consideration of the order of the day, and being taken they resulted, yeas 8, nays 62.

So the Convention refused to pass by.

The question then recurred on adopting the report of the Committee on a Division of the State.

MR. WEST presented as that report the following ordinance, which was read by the Clerk:

An Ordinance for the Division of the State.

WHEREAS, It is represented to the delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, on the 6th day of August, 1861, that the people of a portion of Virginia are desirous of claiming a new State out of that portion of Virginia lying North and West of the Allegheny Mountains, and whereas, in the opinion of this Convention, the social, commercial and political condition of said people would be greatly benefited and their happiness promoted by such a division.

Be it therefore ordained by this Convention, That the people of Virginia living North and West of a line beginning on the top of Clinch Mountain, on the line dividing Tennessee and Virginia; and running thence with the top of said mountain, so as to include all that part of the county of Scott lying North and West of said mountain; thence with the top of said mountain, including Russell county; thence with the top of said mountain to the county line of Giles county; thence with the county line of Giles and Tazewell to the county line of Mercer county; thence with the top of Wolf Creek Mountain to the top of Salt Pond Mountain; thence to the top of Potter's Middle Mountain; thence with the top of Rich Mountain to Alum Rock; thence to the top of Mill Mountain; thence with the top of said mountain to Augusta county line; thence with the dividing line between Augusta and Bath counties to the top of Shenandoah Mountain, and with the top of said mountain to the Hardy county line; thence with the county line between Hardy and Rockingham counties to the Shenadoah county line; thence with the county line between Hardy and Shenandoah to Hampshire county; thence with the county line dividing Frederick and Shenandoah to Warren county; thence with the county line dividing Warren and Clark counties to Fauquier county; thence with the county line dividing Fauquier and Clark counties to Loudon county; thence with the county line dividing Loudon and Fauquier counties to Fairfax county; thence with the county line dividing Fairfax and Prince William counties to the Potomac River; be authorized and directed, on the fourth Monday in November next, to open a poll at each election precinct embraced in such boundary, to ascertain the will and wish of the people upon the question of such division. The County Courts of each county, embraced in said boundary, shall appoint Commisssioners and Conductors of Elections, and the duties of such Commissioners and Conductors, shall be the same as now prescribed by law in other Elections. On the said fourth Monday in November, there shall be a poll opened by the Commissioners and Conductors so appointed, at every precinct in each County embraced within the said boundaries. On each poll book there shall be two columns; one headed "Division," and the other "No Division." Those voting in favor of a division, shall be recorded in the column under the head of "Division," those voting against a division, shall be recorded in the column under the head of "No Division." It shall be the duty of said Commissioners, to have all who are legally authorized under the constitution and laws of Virginia, within said boundary, and who may offer to vote, properly recorded on said poll book, and it shall be the duty of said Commissioners of each county within five days after said election, to certify to the correctness of said poll books, and file one copy of said books, in the Clerk's Office of the County Court of each county, and one copy certified as aforesaid, shall, by said Commissioners, be forwarded to the Governor of Virginia, at Wheeling, whose duty it shall be to count the vote upon said question, and make an immediate proclamation of the result of said vote.

2. Be it further ordained, That, in case it is found that a majority of the votes cast in said boundary, be in favor of the division as proposed, that then, the present Constitution of Virginia, as modified and changed by the ordinances of this Convention, shall be adopted as the Constitution of the proposed State, which shall be called the State of New Virginia.

3. Be it further ordained, That the State Legislature of Virginia, be requested to give their consent to the formation of such new State as prescribed and laid down in said boundaries, and submit the same to the Congress of the United States for their ratification.

Messrs. Brown, Kramer, Flesher and Zinn asked and obtained leave to withdraw their substitute for the report of the Committee.

MR. EVANS, on behalf of Mr. Dorsey, also withdrew the substitute offered by that gentleman.

MR. WEST, as chairman of the Committee on a Division of the State, proceeded to address the Convention in advocacy of the report of that Committee.

He did not propose to make a lengthy speech at this time; perhaps he should have occasion to participate somewhat in the discussion that might ensue upon this question hereafter. It had been said, and very properly, that there were but two questions of real difficulty in the consideration of this subject, and they were the questions of time and boundary, for which he believed there were none or at least very few on the floor opposed to a division at all. If such were, he accorded to them honesty of motive, but he did not know what could be the ground of their objection to the formation of a new State.

First, then, in relation to time: He believed that now was the time. He would set out on that ground. He had occupied that ground and he expected to continue to do so. He had never yet had a good reason from any one why they should not proceed at once. This was the accepted time if they ever expected to complete what they had begun. He observed that all the opponents of action had different reasons for their opposition, and although they might be honest, yet they had no common justifiable reason for not proceeding at once. For himself, from the very beginning of this controversy in the Legislature and the former Convention, he had not swerved from his purpose of obtaining preliminary action for a division of the State. Every step he had proposed was a progressive step, as gentlemen here could testify. He had offered a proposition in the Legislature which he still believed was the best that could have been adopted, but when it was defeated, he voted willingly for the next best. He had believed, and did yet, that it was important, though not essential, to have had some expression at least from the Legislature. They had no such expression, however, and a majority of the Convention had decided, he believed, that they could proceed without it, and such being the case, he was with them, and would be the last man to back from the position he had taken.

And what objection could be offered to doing so? He asked gentlemen to say, why they should not take action just now on this most important matter. It was true there might be some of the counties in the proposed boundary that might vote against immediate action or against any action at all, but if they would postpone till doomsday, and then propose to act, some one would object. There was one plan of action that was always safe, and that was, never to put off what can be done now.

But it was argued that it would leave Eastern Virginia without a government; even if it did they would only be in the same situation they left us in, and they could do as we did—go to work and make one. But they say they have a government and we have no government; they boast of their government, and if you would go to Richmond and say they have no government your neck would pay the penalty. Let them take care of themselves as we have done. We could not sympathize with those who wanted to cut his throat if they had an opportunity, and they did not ask any of this sympathy which some gentlemen were disposed to bestow upon them. They despised us and our government.

He used to be opposed to a division of the State, and always had, up to the time this great emergency had been forced upon our people. But now the time had come to look out for our own interests, and disregard the interests of those who wage a war against us.

But it was objected that we were thrusting ourselves upon the General Government. He would be the last to do this after all the government had done for us in Western Virginia, but they were not forcing themselves upon the government, and it was not so regarded anywhere except by the gentlemen who raised the objection. If it could be proved he would abandon the project, but not until it was done. But he had the best authority for saying that this was not the case—but that Congress would admit the new State, was ready, willing and waitng to do so whenever application was made. He had talked with the Hon. William G. Brown, on his return from Washington a few days ago, and Mr. Brown had told him the quicker the better; that the proposition for admission would not have lasted two days while he was there; that a recognition would have been given at once. They all knew what Mr. Carlile says, that he corroborates the testimony of Mr. Brown. They were the best authority, and so much for this objection. There was nothing in the way in that direction. He had never been willing to admit for a moment that there was any danger of a reverse as had been intimated upon this floor; but he would have them act, now that they had the power, lest by some possibility they shauld lose it. It might be a little selfish, but he was willing to be that selfish —their welfare and the welfare of the people demanded it.

As for boundary, he was not a stickler for any particular scheme. He preferred that reported by the Committee, because it includes a neck of country lying down next to the Tennessee line, which was left out by other propositions, and which naturally belonged to us and should be included, notwithstanding the people might not now be quite so loyal as they should be. The ordinance also proposed after running the main line on the top of the mountain, which the Almighty had reared as a natural boundary, to take in the counties contiguous to the Capital of the Country—and especially he liked it because it would take in the grave of Washington. He spoke of the advantages that would be apparent in running the line so as to make the loyal State take in the territory opposite and adjoining Washington, and said that proposition would cause our admission to be looked upon there with more favor than it would otherwise be.

He would like to know now why it was that gentlemen here disregard the plain wishes of their constituents. If they had instructions from them to oppose action he would like to see them. He had seen nothing of the kind, but he had seen letter after letter to members urging them to take some action.

But suppose they should make their application now to Congress, and Congress should lay it aside for a time, how much worse off would they be than before. There would be the same proposition upon which they would act whenever, in their opinion, the proper time should arrive, and they would have the matter always before them until disposed of.

The people were now anxiously awaiting the action of this body, and if the word were to go out that they had refused to take any preliminary steps towards a separation, they would hang their harps upon the willows, and their lips would be mute and voiceless on the question in which they had taken so much interest.

After Mr. West concluded,

On motion, the Convention took a recess till two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convention re-assembled at two P. M.

MR. BARNS, of Marion, obtained the floor, and proceeded to speak of the impropriety at this time to the division of the State.

There had been no uprising of the people in favor of it in many portions of the State proposed to be included in the bounds of the new State. They had not met in mass meetings and demanded that this Convention should take precipitate action. It was true it was the desire of the people of his own county to have a separation; for himself personally he was anxious for it. But there were difficulties in the way. In the first Convention which met here in May, many were in favor of immediate action. Prudent counsels prevailed, however, and the obstacles in the way rendered it necessary to call another Convention. This met in June, and some of the members were in favor of at once proceeding to a division. But it was thought best to pursue the course they deemed in accordance with the Constitution. Besides the Convention thought it best not to endanger the existence of our very nationality itself by action that would be calculated to produce discord as this would have done.

He said there were difficulties now. According to the spirit of the Constitution not only the people in that portion of the State out of which the new State is to be formed, should give their assent, but also the other portion, which it might be supposed would oppose it—that the consent of the whole State should be given so far as a representation of the people of the whole State can be obtained. This they knew could not be obtained now. Action here could only be preparatory at best. After the Convention had adopted measures, the assent of the Legislature must first be had, and afterwards that of Congress. Would Congress admit a state formed on a mere technicality? Would not they require that the people of the whole State should be consulted? He thought unless they could have the consent of all the loyal people of the State it would prejudice our admission by Congress. It would be regarded on a principle similar to that on which the secessionists have acted, and that we had not exhausted all the peaceful and legal means of obtaining a separation. It was better not to make the trial now and fail and be distracted by the failure, but to wait until the fruit should be ripe and ready to fall into our hands. There were loyal people in Southern and Eastern Virginia looking to them and praying to be released from their present thralldom. In the midst of the great struggle that was now going on for the maintenance of the Constitution amongst us we are asked to raise an exciting and grave question, such as that of dividing the State. The time had not come for the agitation of that question. He had no objection to an expression on the subject by the Convention, but he was not willing that the matter should be thrown upon the people to agitate and distract them at this time.

MR. MARTIN, of Wetzel, said the gentleman had said that now was not the time for a separation. Before the ordinance of secession was voted upon there was a call for the people of Northwestern Virginia. The first call was from Harrison county. Other counties responded, and a convention met in Wheeling in May last. In that Convention it was fairly understood that the object was a division of the State. They concluded it could not then be done constitutionally, but when we could have a legislature recognized as such we would then be prepared to go into a division. Such was the understanding all over Western Virginia. The Government of the United States has acknowledged this Convention as a law-making power because this Convention called the Legislature, which has been recognized in the person of the Senators it elected. While the Government recognizes this as the whole Government of the State, it will also acknowledge us when it comes to a division of the State. But there were representatives here from Eastern Virginia. If a division could not now be had constitutionally, when could it be had?

MR. BARNS said, when the secessionists are driven out of the State.

MR. MARTIN said the secessionists were in rebellion against the United States, hence they had declared themselves aliens, and not citizens of Virginia or the United States. Secession was unconstitutional, and every citizen that upheld secession had thrown off his allegiance, and we had nothing to do with them, as it regards our rights and interests in Western Virginia.

We were at one time without a government. We met here to establish one through this Convention sent here by the people of Northwestern Virginia, and we are here at their will and bidding, and we have a right to carry out the views we advocated before them. He declared before ever that Convention was held at Richmond for a division of the State, and he was elected here with the knowledge of his people that he was so in favor of a division. Therefore, he would go for a division, not only because of more recent wrongs, but because he had long been convinced that our interests required it. Our money had been used to make improvements east of the Alleghenies. We have no connection with Eastern Virginia; the God of nature had made a line between us, and their interest and our's were antagonistic, and this was one reason for wanting a separation; and while they were setting up a government in opposition to the United States, he claimed the right to set up an independent government separate from them. The people expected nothing less of this Convention than a division of the State, and if a foundation was not here laid for an immediate separation the people would be disappointed, and never would call another Convention for a division. The people of Wetzel had instructed her members to go for an immediate separation. But what he meant was that this Convention should go on with its work, and when the Legislature meets next December, to ask for its assent, and when this shall be granted, then to apply to Congress for its assent. This would be the constitutional way.

It was said this movement would embarrass the government and our friends in Eastern Virginia. Nothing short of the power of the United States could ever crush out secession in Eastern Virginia. How, then, could it embarrass the government? or how disenable us to aid the government in this work? The argument had no weight in it.

After we get the assent of the Legislature, if we deem it impolitic to apply to Congress at once for an admission, we can do it at any time it might be deemed best.

MR. POLSLEY proposed to amend the ordinance by inserting in the first line of the second section, after the second "that," the words "a free and fair election has been held in three-fourths of the election precincts of the boundary."

A parley arose as to the regularity of the proceeding and the amendment was lost sight of.

MR. CRANE moved to go into Committee of the Whole on a Division of the State, but subsequently withdrew the motion and moved an adjournment, which motion was lost.

MR. BOREMAN, of Tyler, offered a proposition which was ordered to be printed for the information of the Convention.

MR. MARTIN, of Wetzel, withdrew his amendment to the report of the committee.

The withdrawal of this left only the substitute of Mr. Burley and the minority report of Mr. Johnson.

The question was announced on the adoption of Mr. Burley's substitute for the original ordinance.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved to strike out in the substitute the name,

"New Virginia," proposed for the new State, and substitute "Allegheny."

The motion was agreed to.

MR. FARNSWORTH then presented the proposition offered by himself in the morning session and ordered to be printed, as a substitute for the substitute of Mr. Burley, and with the consideration of this pending, the Convention adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—EIGHTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 14, 1861.

The Convention met at the regular hour, and was opened with prayer by Rev. J. L. Clark, of the M. E. Chruch.

The minutes were read and adopted.

MR. VAN WINKLE moved that the resignation of Lot Bowen, of Harrison, which was yesterday laid upon the table, be now taken up and accepted.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. BROWN, from the Committee on Credentials, then reported upon the credentials of Charles S. Lewis, of Harrison, elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by Mr. Bowen's resignation, that Mr. Lewis was entitled to a seat in the Convention.

The report was adopted.

MR. LEWIS went forward and the oath of office was administered to him.

MR. VAN WINKLE reported, from the Committee on Business, an ordinance in relation to Juries, which was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back the ordinance recommitted to them, declaring in what cases offices are vacated, with an adverse recommendation on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

He also reported adversely on the resolution offered by a member from Marion, inquiring into the expediency of amending or repealing the ordinance of the Convention creating the Governor's Council.

The report was adopted.

The order of the day coming up,

MR. BURLEY asked and obtained leave to withdraw his substitute for the report of the Committee.

The question was announced to be on the following substitute offered by Mr. Farnsworth:

SUBSTITUTE OF MR. FARNSWORTH FOR THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON A DIVISION OF THE STATE.

WHEREAS, In the opinion of the good people of Western Virginia, the long-continued inequality of taxation and representation, as well as the diversity of interests between Eastern and Western Virginia render a separation or division of the State necessary; and

WHEREAS, The people of the Eastern part of the State have endeavored to throw off their allegiance to the Federal Government and place the State in an attitude of rebellion against it, contrary to the wishes and without the consent of the people of Northwestern Virginia, and

WHEREAS, All the material interests of this section of the State are closely identified with the Union and its preservation, and can only be secured and protected by severing the unnatural ties that bind us to our Eastern brethren, now in rebellion; therefore,

Be it ordained by the people of Virginia, Through their delegates in Convention assembled, that a new State, to be called the State of ————, be organized and erected out of the counties comprised in the boundaries following, viz: Beginning on the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, on the Kentucky line, where the counties of Buchanan and Logan join the same, and from thence running with the dividing line of said counties, and the dividing line of the counties of Wyoming and McDowell to the great Flat Top Mountains, and with the dividing lines of the counties of Raleigh and Mercer, Fayette, Nicholas and Greenbrier, Webster and Pocahontas, Randolph, Pocahontas, Pendleton and Highland, to the Shenandoah Mountains, and with said Mountains, following the dividing lines between the counties of Pendleton and Rockingham, Hardy and Shenandoah, Hampshire and Frederick, Morgan and Frederick, Berkeley and Frederick, Jefferson and Clark, and Jefferson and Loudon to the Maryland line, and such other counties as lie contiguous to and adjoin the counties embraced in the boundaries aforesaid, as shall by a vote of the qualified voters residing within the same declare a desire to be attached to and form a part of said State, and the Legislature may so change the boundary lines, as herein set forth, as to include said counties, provided the vote be taken on the same day as hereinafter fixed for taking the sense of the voters within the counties embraced in the boundaries first herein mentioned.

2. That the present Constitution of Virginia, with such alterations as the exigencies of the times demand, be submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection at the polls on the first Thursday in November next.

3. The voters within the boundaries aforesaid, and within the counties that lie contiguous thereto, shall assemble at their respective places of holding elections on the said first Thursday of November next, and cast their votes for or against the formation of a new State, as well as for or against the adoption of the Constitution framed and proposed to them by this Convention. It shall be the duty of the commissioners who superintended, and the officers who conducted the election at the general election in May last, to attend their respective places of holding elections and superintend and conduct the election herein provided for. And if said commissioners and officers shall fail to attend at any such place of holding elections, it shall be lawful for any two freeholders present to act as commissioners in superintending said election, and to appoint officers to conduct said election. It shall be the duty of such persons superintending and conducting said election to employ clerks to record the votes and furnish poll-books for the purpose, and to endorse on the respective poll books the expenses of the same.

If on the day herein provided for holding said election there shall be in any of the said counties any military force of any hostile assemblage of persons, so as to interfere with the free and full expression of the will of the voters, they may assemble at any other place within their precinct and hold an election as herein provided for.

There shall be two poll-books. One of said poll-books shall contain two columns—one column shall be headed "for a new State," the other "against a new State," and the other poll book shall in like manner contain two columns—one headed "for the Constitution," the other "against the Constitution." And the names of all persons now entitled to vote in any of the said counties, and who shall offer to vote, shall be recorded in the one or the other of the columns aforesaid, according as such persons may vote. And it shall be the duty of such commissioners superintending and officers conducting said election, and the clerks employed to record the votes, each before entering upon the duties of his respective office to take, in addition to the oath now required by the general election law, the oath prescribed by the Convention which assembled in the city of Wheeling on the 11th of June, 1861. It shall be the duty of the officers and commissioners aforesaid, as soon as may be, and not exceeding three days after said election, to aggregate each of the columns of said poll-books and ascertain the number of votes recorded in each, and make a return thereof to the Secretary of the Commonwealth in the city of Wheeling, which return shall be in the following form or to the following effect:

We, , Commissioners, and conducting officers, do certify that we caused an election to be held at in the county of at which we permitted all persons to vote that were entitled under existing laws to vote, and that offered to vote, and that we have carefully added up each column of our poll-books and find the following result: "For a new State" votes; "Against a new State" votes. "For the Constitution" votes: "Against the Constitution" votes. All of which we certify to the Secretary of the Commonwealth. Given under our hands and seals this day of , 1861.

(SEAL)

(SEAL)

Under which certificate there shall be added the following affidavit:

County, to-wit:

I, , a Justice of the Peace, (or any officer now authorized by law to administer oaths,) in and for said County, do certify that the above named commissioners and conducting officers severally made oath before me that the certificate by them above signed is true.

Given under my hand this day of , 1861.

J. P.

The original poll-books shall be carefully kept by the conducting officers for ninety days after the day of election, and upon demand of the Executive shall be delivered to such person as he may authorize to demand and receive them.

It shall be the duty of the Executive to lay before the General Assembly, at its next meeting, the result of said vote, and if it shall be found that a majority of the votes cast shall be in favor of a new State and also in favor of the Constitution framed and proposed to said voters for their adoption, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to give its consent to the formation of a new State out of the territory aforesaid, with the following conditions:

1. That the people of the proposed new State shall take upon them a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, and receive an equitable distribution of the assets.

2. That all private rights and interests in lands within the proposed new State, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed new State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of Virginia.

3. That the lands within the proposed State of non-resident proprietors, shall not in any case be taxed higher than the lands of residents therein.

4. That no grants of lands nor land warrants issued by the proposed new State shall interfere with any warrant heretofore issued from the land office of Virginia, which shall be located on lands within the said proposed new State, now liable thereto.

5. That in case any complaint or dispute at any time arise between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the proposed new State, after it shall become an independent State, concerning the meaning or execution of the foregoing conditions, the same shall be determined by six commissioners, of whom two shall be chosen by each of the parties, and the remainder by the commissioners so first appointed.

And when the General Assembly shall give its consent to the formation of such new State, it shall forward to the Congress of the United States such consent, together with an official copy of such Constitution, with the request that such new State may be admitted into the Union of States.

MR. BOREMAN, of Tyler, offered the following as a substitute for the substitute:

THE SUBSTITUTE OF MR. WILLIAM J. BOREMAN, OF TYLER COUNTY.

WHEREAS, It has been represented to this Convention that a large number of the citizens of this Commonwealth, residing in the Western and Northern part of the State, desire a division of the State, and that the Western and Northern part be formed into a separate State; and the unsettled condition of the country renders it impossible at this time to ascertain the wish of the people within any boundaries likely to be erected into a new State, and we deem it inexpedient, unfair and anti-Republican to undertake to change the State relations of any portion of our people without first having given them a fair opportunity to be heard upon the subject; and

WHEREAS, We cannot now tell with any degree of certainty when the people will be relieved from the troublous state into which they have been thrown, and left free to act upon this grave and important subject, and this Convention was hurriedly, and from the most urgent necessities called together by the people to stay the mighty tide of rebellion which was then sweeping over our land, and to do all in our power to save our beloved country from the vortex of impending ruin; and,

WHEREAS, This body is a Convention of the State of Virginia, and not a Convention of Delegates sent by the people from that part of the State intended to be formed into a new State; therefore, be it

Resolved, 1st. That it is premature, and would be taking unwarrantable advantage of our position and great injustice to those of our fellow-citizens, within the boundaries of the proposed new State, who are not and cannot at this time be represented in this body, for this Convention to undertake the formation of a Constitution for such new State.

2d. That we are not only willing but anxious that a vote of the people should be taken within the territory proposed to be formed into a new State, upon the question of a division of the State, so soon as the affairs of the country are in such condition that the people can meet at the polls and give a free and fair expression of their sentiments upon the subject, therefore we recommend [to] the General Assembly, provided the people within the proposed boundaries shall be freed from their present embarrassments and the state of affairs in the country will then admit of a full and free expression of the popular sentiment, to provide for taking a vote within the proposed boundaries on the question of a division of the State, on the first Thursday of January next.

3d. That it is the sentiment of this Convention that the best interests of both sections of the State demand a division and we further call upon and recommend [to] the General Assembly that they shall, so soon as the people within the boundaries proposed for a new State, enact all laws in conformity with the Consstitution of the United States, which may be necessary to carry out the wishes of the people so expressed.

The question recurring upon the substitute for the substitute, Mr. Van Winkle proceeded to address the Convention at length and elaborately upon the subject of a division of the State, b[illegible]ning at the call of the Richmond Convention, giving a full history of movements in Virginia, up to the present time, and arguing against any present attempt to divide the State.—The speech occupied two hours, and is in itself an admirable production. We shall take occasion at as early a day as possible to publish a full report of it.

After Mr. Van Winkle had concluded,

The Convention took a recess till two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention met at 2 o'clock.

MR. CRANE, of Randolph, having the floor proceeded to reply to Mr. Van Winkle, reviewing that gentleman's position at considerable length. We shall have to defer a report of this until the publication of the speech to which it was a reply.

After Mr. Crane had concluded,

The President announced the question to be on the adoption of the substitute of the gentleman from Tyler.

On that question Mr. Snider demanded the yeas and nays.

FONTAIN SMITH said he desired to speak to the question, but he was at present physically unable to do so. He would like to have the vote postponed till morning, that he could have an opportunity to speak.—for that purpose he moved an adjournment.

MR. WEST hoped they would not adjourn without taking this vote, it could easily be done. It was a test vote, and by allowing it to be taken they could now tell whether the Convention intended passing anything looking to a separation or not. They had yet three hours, and much could be done in that time.

MR. SNIDER merely wished to say, that if they did not intend to take any action in this matter, they had better go home, and not remain here at an expense of some $3000.00 a week. If they intend to vote down this division let them vote it down and be done with it. They had had a speech yesterday that cost their constituents $400.00, and two to-day costing them $200.00 each. He thought prudence would dictate that if they intended to do anything, they had better do it and be done with it.

MR. BURDETT hoped the friends of division would vote down the motion so as to get a test vote.

MR. PAXTON trusted [that] the usual courtesy would be extended to the gentleman from Marion.

MR. SNIDER demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn, which being taken resulted—yeas 45, nays 31.

So the Convention adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—NINTH DAY.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15, 1861.

The Convention met at ten A. M.

Prayer by Rev. D. W. Fisher, (of New Orleans) of the Presbyterian Church.

Minutes read and approved.

MR. BURDETT moved to suspend the rule for the purpose of offering a resolution to limit and close debate on the subject of a division of the State.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That no member be allowed to speak to-day more than one hour, and from and after to-day no member be allowed to speak more than ten minutes on any subject, and that the debate on the subject of a division of the State close to-morrow at three o'clock P. M.

The rule was suspended.

MR. POLSLEY moved to strike out the latter clause, so as not to limit to ten minutes or to name any time for closing the debate. He was in favor of a full and free discussion.

MR. ZINN moved to amend the amendment by striking out "at 3 o'clock".

The amendment was accepted.

MR. SMITH, of Marion, said that restricting a member to one hour was simply to exclude members from the privilege of doing themselves justice before their constituents. What he desired to say he could not say in an hour. He asked as a courtesy that he be allowed more time. He was willing to sit and listen to other members till midnight, if need be.

MR. WEST thought it would be no more than justice to give the gentleman the time he desired. He had spoken and was not limited, and in order that other gentlemen might have the same privilege, he moved to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was put and the resolution tabled.

The order of the day was then taken up, it being the question upon the substitute of Mr. Boreman, for the substitute of Mr. Farnsworth for the report of the Committee on a Division of the State.

The substitute was read by the clerk.

MR. RITCHIE, of Marion, said that with the consent of his colleague he would like to make a few remarks. He was but a plain, unpretending old farmer, but had his views nevertheless on this momentous question, and he felt that he would not be doing his duty if he withheld their expression here.

He began by alluding to the indignation with which the passage of the ordinance of secession was received in Northwestern Virginia, and reviewed the circumstances of the calling of the first convention, its deeling totake action in dividing the State, and the calling of the second convention.

He thought many members of this Convention were over zealous in this matter. He held that a division of the State now would be in violation of the spirit, if not the letter of the [Federal] Constitution and cited the clause in reference to the formation of new States; that the consent of the whole State must be had, and not of one-third or one-fourth; that it would embarrass the action of the General Government in its effort to put down rebellion; that the slavery question must come up in the formation or adoption of a Constitution, and this would not only create controversy in Congress, but bring about a divided sentiment among our own people, which must result very disastrously. The present reorganized State Government would have to be abrogated, and the people of a portion of the State left without any government whatever. Such a movement must at this time tend to weaken the strength of the General Government and retard the restoration of the Union.

He desired a division of the State at the right time; none more than he did; but believing the results could be nothing but unfortunate, he desired to enter his solemn protest against any measure looking to a division of the State at this time.

He presented the following letter from a gentleman in high position in the government at Washington, which he desired the clerk to read:

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE,
August 12, 1861.

Hon. A. F. Ritchie,
Virginia Convention.
Wheeling.

SIR:—Your letter of the 9th instant was received within this hour, and as you ask an immediate answer, you, of course, will not expect me to go elaborately into the subject.

I have thought a great deal upon the question of dividing the State of Virginia into two States; and since I came here, as a member of the government, I have conversed with a good many, and corresponded with some of the good men of Western Virginia in regard to that matter. In all this intercourse, my constant and earnest effort has been to impress upon the minds of those gentlemen the vast importance—not to say necessity—in this terrible crisis of our national affairs, to abstain from the introduction of any new elements of revolution, to avoid, as far as possible, all new and original theories of government; but, on the contrary, in all the insurgent Commonwealths to adhere, as closely as circumstances will allow, to the old constitutional standard of principle, and to the traditional habits and thoughts of the people. And I still think that course is dictated by the plainest teachings of prudence.

The formation of a new State out of Western Virginia is an original, independent act of Revolution. I do not deny the power of Revolution (I do not call it right—for it is never prescribed, it exists in force only, and has and can have no law but the wil of the revolutionists.) Any attempt to carry it out involves a plain breach of both the constitution—of Virginia and the Nation. And hence it is plain that you cannot take that course without weakening, if not destroying, your claims upon the sympathy and support of the General Government; and without disconcerting the plan already adopted both by Virginia and the General Government, for the reorganization of the revolted States, and the restoration of the integrity of the Union. That plan, I understand to be this: When a State, by its perverted functionaries, has declared itself out of the Union, we avail ourselves of all the sound and loyal elements of the State—all who owe allegiance to, and claim protection of the Constitution, to form a State Government, as nearly as may be, upon the former model, and claiming to be the very State which has been, in part, overthrown by the successful rebellion. In this way we establish a constitutional nucleus around which all the scattered elements of the Commonwealth may meet and combine and thus restore the old State in its original integrity.

This, I verily thought, was the plan adopted at Wheeling, and recognized and acted upon by the General Government here. Your Convention annulled the revolutionary proceedings at Richmond, both in the Convention and the General Assembly, and your new Governor formally demanded of the President the fulfillment of the constitutional guarantee in favor of Virginia—Virginia, as known to our fathers and to us. The President admitted the obligation and promised his best efforts to fulfill it; and the Senate admitted your Senators not as representing a new and nameless State, now for the first time heard of in our history, but as representing "the good old Commonwealth."

Must this all be undone, and a new and hazardous experiment be ventured upon, at the moment when danger and difficulties are thickening around us? I hope not—for the sake of the nation and the State, I hope not. I had rejoiced in the movement in Western Virginia, as a legal, constitutional and safe refuge from revolution and anarchy—as at once an example and fit instrument for the restoration of all the revolted States.

I have not time now to discuss the subject in its various bearings: What I have written, is written with a running pen, and will need your charitable criticism.

If I had time I think I could give persuasive reasons for declining the attempt to create a new State at this perilous time. At another time, I might be willing to go fully into the question, but now I can say no more.

Most respectfully,
Your ob't serv't,

EDW. BATES.

MR. SMITH, of Marion, then addressed the Convention in opposition to an immediate division of the State. The first part of his argument was devoted to showing the natural antagonism between Eastern and Western Virginia; an antagonism of commercial interest, of climate and production, of social habits and thought, of educational modes and even religions, and showed that all these demanded separate governments for the two peoples. But he contended there were at this time difficulties in the way which he deemed insuperable.

One was that a division could not now be obtained in accordance with the intention of the Constitution of the United States.

He referred to the action taken by the then territory of Vermont in 1781, in its erection as a State out of the territory of New York and New Hampshire, and how its application had been rejected by Congress until the full consent of both the States had been obtained. Also to the action taken by a convention during the year 1784, in what was then the territory of Franklin, (now the State of Tennessee,) subject to and part of North Carolina. This territory, through a convention, made application to Congress for admission into the Union and was rejected on the ground that the consent of the Legislature of North Carolina had not been obtained. The result of the attempt was a deplorable State of civil war which ended only when that people returned to their allegiance to the State of North Carolina.

He next alluded to the case presented by the formation of Kentucky, out of Virginia, in which instance the Legislature of Virginia passed an act and the consent of Congress was granted upon application, for the admission.

From these instances he deduced the principle that new States to be formed of two other States, or carved out of any one State, must have the full consent of such States to their erection.

The speaker proceeded to argue that such consent of the people of Virginia could not now be obtained. That the larger part of the States was in duress, and could give no expression either through representatives or otherwise; and that it would be both wrong and unconstitutional to proceed to take advantage of what he styled a "legal fiction," in order to now obtain a division of the State in opposition to the Eastern part of the State, which was as much interested in the matter as ourselves, and had the same right to be heard.

Having now assumed to be the State of Virginia, they were of course responsible for the entire State debt. If they divided the State and abdicated all the government of Virginia, then, of course, it would be running counter to the interests of those who held $50,000,000 of bonds against the State, and all their opposition would have to be encountered. This was one difficulty in the way.

His own position was taken boldly, and was, that a division of the State could only be obtained by the consent of all of Virginia, Eastern and Middle, as well as Western, and he argued that when the rebellion should have been driven out of the rest of the State, the power of government would be in the hands of a different class of men in that part of the State from what it is now, poor men, whose interests would be identical with our own, who would be friendly to us and who, should we still desire it, give in their consent to a separation.

In regard to the possible failure of the United States to sustain itself, a division would in that event make us no bettter off, for then the Government would not be able to dictate terms. and Jefferson Davis determine not to surrender one foot of Southern soil, would sweep away all our imaginary lines as if by a magician's wand. But he had never doubted, and did not now, that the Government would entirely succeed, and in that event we were safe anyhow.

As to the question of slavery, he looked upon it as a matter of climate and soil. When men learned their interests they would always be governed by them. Had men taken this view of slavery it would have saved much bloodshed to the country. Slavery was constitutionally right, but it might not be always practicably so. He was willing to leave the settlement of that matter to a majority, and would submit to whatever might be the decision, but if this question was agitated now whilst the present party was in power, just so sure would an application for admission be rejected. His plan was to adopt the present State constitution with such modifications as might be necessary and hold an election, say October next, to get an expression of the people.

After Mr. Smith had concluded his speech, of which we are able to give but a very brief synopsis, the Convention took a recess.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at half past two.

MR. PAXTON obtained the floor and proceeded to say that he had no intention of afflicting the Convention with a set speech, but simply to give expression to a few remarks upon the question before them.

They had before them the most important question that could come up for consideration, and there should be a full and complete expression upon it. He was free to admit that nothing should be done here to embarrass the government. It could not be denied that the greater part of the loyal people of Western Virginia was represented here. These people, he went on to show, had long been oppressed by the remainder of the State, and even their warning, when the ordinance passed, that the people would not submit was treated with a sneering contempt. We had submitted, they said, and would again.

That our best interests demanded a separate State government from those from whom we are naturally separated does not demand an argument; and now, if this was so, and our people were clamorous for it, and if the constitutional difficulty to a separation had disappeared, why may they not now when they had the opportunity and power, initiate steps for a division of the State.

The answer is that this would embarrass the General Government. The whole answer, we believe, could be summed up in this, notwithstanding the said questions urged here.

With all deference to the opinion of these gentlemen, he could not see how action in this manner could embarrass the Government. They were now entirely dependent upon the Government and even if now everything were done necessary to make a division, it would avail nothing unlsss assented to by Congress. This could not, therefore, embarrass the Government.

If this State was ever to be divided, it must be begun some time by somebody. It would not divide itself. If it be so desirable was it not their duty here to undertake it, and if Congress refused they would have discharged their duty, and he thought Congr ss nor no one would blame them for looking to their own interests. This argument of embarrassing the Government reminded him of somebody who said during the oil excitement that it was sinful to bore for oil, "because," and then said he "it is evident that Providence placed this highly inflammable substance in the bowels of the earth to assist in the general conflagration of the world, and if you keep on you will get it all out directly and then you will defeat the designs of Providence." (Laughter.) He believed Congress would in good time sanction any proper division that might be made, and he thought the Convention should not adjourn without taking some step to meet the expectations of the people.

MR. LEWIS obtained the floor and said that early in this contest, forced upon the loyal people of this country, it was his fortune to have been regarded as loyal, and in several canvasses to assist in staying the hand of rebellion.

The meeting was held in Clarksburg to call the Convention here in Wheeling. He had been appointed to the Convention, but declined because he had understood it was called to organize a provisional government for Northwestern Virginia alone.

When the Convention was first assembled here it was for the purpose of dividing the State, and if they now failed to do this they would defeat the purpose, and the only one, the people had in calling together this Convention. He had listened with pleasure to the ingenious and able speeches that had been made here by his friends from Wood and Marion. He had been pleased with that portion of their speeches depicting the condition and wrongs of Western Virginia, and that part showing that we had practical, constitutional government here, fully recognized as such. The gentleman from Marion told them he was ready to divide the State whenever it could be done constitutionally, and according to the gentleman from Wood, it had all the power that any government of the State could have. If so, where is the difficulty upon Constitutional ground?

They had warned their eastern brethren that they had not the power to protect us here; and after the ordinance of secession passed civil government was powerless here, and they were forced to form a government here for their own protection.

He referred to the language of Letcher prohibiting the exportation of provisions, and said we had not had Republican government until this was formed, and it was right to establish one, and the duty of General Government to protect us in this Government.

Well, how long did gentlemen expect this provisional government here to last? He believed it was intended to last six months. Did they propose to follow the example of the Confederate States and keep the people under a provisional government in which they had no voice?

Did his friends who had spoken propose that this provisional government, in which the people had not had as much voice as they desired, should last until this revolution should come to a close? He admitted the necessity of the establishment of this provisional government, but the moment that necessity had passed away, let the government expire. Who could tell when this great question should be settled. and shall our people be deprived till then of their rights in a representative government?

MR. VAN WINKLE said it was not called a provisional government. It was to terminate in six months. It was temporary only in its executive.

MR. LEWIS inquired what was then to be done when the six months were out; when was it to come back to the representative character? If it was now in their power to bring it back to that, in the name of the people of this country, and of representative government, he demanded it should be done.

He admitted there were difficulties. But what great achievements did not encounter difficulties? But were the people to be thwarted from their wishes because there were difficulties? What disposition was to be made of the public debt? The secessionists, by their own former action, are committed to the adjustment of such matter by commissioners. of the Southern Confederacy, made a proposition to adjust by commissioners, the accounts between them and the Government.

He went on to show how much the West had contributed to the improvements of the East, and declared that they did not owe the East a dollar. He proposed to charge the counties with all they had received and credit them with all they had furnished. Then let every fair demand be met that might be made upon the government.

As for the question of slavery; he did not think it worth while to blink it.—Gentlemen were in the habit of apologizing for speaking of this question. It had been mooted here, it was a question of magnitude, but one, he thought, that ought to create no difficulty at this time. Were they willing to make sacrifices for the greatest good to the greatest number?—Time with the particular operations of interest would dispose of that question in Northwestern Virginia. Let the situation of the State be as it was now without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t". He had resisted rebellion because he believed it would strike a death blow at the institution of slavery. But this institution would go wherever it is profitable, and cease wherever it is not. Let them not hear the ravings of the abolitionists in their midst; but let the question be left to the silent laws of political economy. But if that question was to be met here let it be met now. Word had gone forth that they were afraid to organize a State government here, less the emancipationist should raise his head in our midst; that there was danger of this being a free State or breaking up in confusion and he wanted to meet the question now and see whether this was the case or not.

The question was no novel one. At the time of the formation of the Constitution, the smaller States demanded that Virginia should cede this Northwestern territory to help pay a war debt and because Virginia and New York, with all this territory, would become too powerful for the safety of the other States. Virginia then resisted the cession of that territory; and she never would, it was evident, consent to a division in time of peace. It was long ago anticipated that this very people would one day revolutionize to cut the cords that bind us to the East. Virginia, fearing that some day the West would get the ascendancy, a statute was enacted making it treason to attempt a division of the State. He read the statute making it treason to attempt to erect any "usurped government" within the State, and said he believed in time of peace it would be treason to propose the re-erection of any such government as this within the State, and would even be treason to petition the Legislature on the subject. And was it supposed that a people who had always violated thus the natural and guaranteed rights of freemen, would ever consent to a division which they had always so sedulously guarded against. But Eastern Virginia had a reason for this, and that was the salvation of her own material interests, and not so much the oppression of Western Virginia; and because our prosperity must of necessity detract from hers. Did they think that in times of peace, the East would allow the formation of a new State, through which a great thoroughfare leading from the lower Ohio by a shorter route towards New York, the great centre of Commerce, could be made, which would come in conflict with her channels of trade?

As for the question of boundary, he knew it would be a difficult one, but it had to be met, and might as well be met now. He believed they should not take in any unwilling county, or any which, by geographical position and material interest was not with us. He would like to have Jefferson for this great line of railroad to run through and he would like to have the counties along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, but it was not absolutely essential, for the road had a right-of-way of which it could not be deprived. He confessed, however, that where a county was situated in our midst which might not now be loyal, we had a right to take it in, if a majority of those around it should say their interest required it. But he did not desire to bring in such counties which lay upon the borders if they were unwilling; however, a provision might be made to provide for an expression from all such, and let the matter be determined by that.

This now was the only recognized government in the State. If action were taken now they could go before Congress having fulfilled all the requirements of the United States. The Constitution did not require the assent of the people of Eastern Virginia, but of the Legislature of Virginia. They did not belong to the East but to themselves, and why should they go on bended knees to those from whom they had received much wrong and nothing of good. The West had grown to be a power not by their aid, but in spite of them. We should take advantage of the position the East, by their own act, had placed us in, and not be withheld by any mock modesty. Would Congress refuse this request made by loyal citizens wishing to take their destinies in their own hands? He believed not. He believed the General Government would recognize us. He could not see how it would prejudice the cause of our common country

It might, however, address itself to the fears of the Southern States situated as Virginia is, with a loyal section within their boundaries, lest they should do as we are doing. That was their lookout, not ours. He repeated that this Convention had been convened for the express purpose of a division of the State, and read letters from citizens of the interior urging some measure looking to that purpose. He had presented these letters here that the voice of their people might be heard here. It was their duty as representatives to represent that voice or resign. One of the letters was from Hon. William G. Brown, and Mr. Brown told them now was the time.

After Mr. Lewis had concluded.

MR. POLSLEY gave notice that he desired to speak tomorrow.

MR. CARLILE offered a proposition with a view that it should be printed.

The paper was received and ordered to be printed.

MR. SMITH, of Marion, said that as numerous letters had been read, he proposed that a letter from Mr. Bates to a member of this Convention, should be read.

Several members said it had been read.

MR. CARLILE said in reference to this letter which had been read, that there was another letter from Mr. Bates now in the possession of the Secretary, in which that gentleman took very different grounds from those taken in this one; and if Mr. Bates was to be dragged in here for the purpose of influencing gentlemen to run counter to the wishes of their constituents, he would insist that he should be brought in in both phases in which he had placed himself. (Laughter.)

For himself, he knew not Mr. Bates in this transaction, nor any other high functionary; he knew alone the interests of the people to whom he was indebted for a place on this floor; and their interests and wishes should be the guide of his action, uninfluenced by any letters from those in authority. If the opinions of members of the Administration were to be used to influence them in perhaps the greatest question that ever interested a people, he could, if it would not be doing injustice to other members of the Administration, relieve them from the suspicion of participating in this second edition of Bates.

MR. SMITH retorted that Mr. Bates was as good authority as other letters read here this evening.

MR. CARLILE replied that Mr. Bates might be very good authority, but he was not their constituents. (Laughter).

MR. POLSLEY moved to adjourn.

MR. BURLEY asked the gentleman to withdraw his motion to allow the rule to be suspended to enable him to offer a resolution; and he would just take occasion to say that he thought it very unjust to attack Mr. Bates as interfering here when the letter was written only in answer to one addressed to him on the subject.

The rule was suspended, and Mr. Burley offered his resolution, which was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the session this Convention will meet at 9 o'clock A. M., sit till half-past 12 P. M., and meet again at 2 P. M.

The Convention then adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—TENTH DAY.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 16, 1861.

The Convention met at half-past 9 A. M.

Minutes read and approved.

The order of the day was taken up.

The question was announced upon the adoption of the substitute of Mr. Boreman, of Tyler, and upon this

MR. POLSLEY, of Mason, proceeded to address the Convention.

He said there was a great principle at the base of our action here. Let us try to discover it and adhere to it, for after all if the principle of our action was not correct we must certainly fail. Before proceeding to review their action here, he proceeded to pay his respects to the gentleman from Harrison, who had been the first mover of their movement here.

The Convention of May had been correctly denominated a mass meeting, and the primary object of that Convention was a division of the State. The county of Mason was at that time almost a unit for a division, but the representatives of that county came to that mass meeting prepared to adopt any course that might seem best. They listened to the discussion at that time, and the result of that debate was to satisfy them that they were not then ready to act for a division of the State; that it was then premature. He went on to speak of the somewhat acrimonious debate that ensued between

Mr. Carlile and Messrs. Jackson, Willey and Pierpont, and the offering and adoption of the proposition which resulted in harmonizing their action. That proposition did not in so many words call for a re-organization of the State government, but he was satisfied at the time that it must result in that. He spoke of the appointment of a Central Committee and the calling of another Convention and said that he would take it upon himself to say that this Convention was not called for the purpose of dividing the State, but they were called together for the sole purpose of reorganizing the State government. The appointment of that Committee was substantially the appointment of a provisional government, with the gentleman from Harrison at its head, and it was so understood everywhere, by the people and by the Federal authorities; and at the request of that Committee aid was furnished to Western Virginia by the Federal Government. It was substantially a provisional government, and so recognized by the public authorities.

Now in relation to what were the objects of the calling of this Convention, he read the eighth resolution of the May Convention, appointing the election for delegates to this Convention here on the 11th of June, "to devise such measures and take such action as the safety and welfare of the people may demand."

The Committee proceeded to take such measures as they deemed best, issuing addresses, etc., from one of which he read to show that the object shadowed forth in both that Address and the resolution of the May Convention, was to maintain their position in the Union; to organize resistance to secession. There was another Address issued by the committee, in which the object of this Convention was set forth as proposing to proceed to reorganize the government of Virginia, and nothing more nor less. Was he wrong in saying this?

MR. CARLILE said in reply, that he did not remember whether the gentleman had stated it right or not; the Address had not been written by himself, but by another member of the committee.

MR. POLSLEY said such was his recollection, that it distinctly set forth that object. He knew that speeches of gentlemen in the first Convention contemplated a division, but this Convention was not to be governed by such expressions, but by the authorized expressions and conclusions of that body, and the documents he referred to showed that this Convention was called for the specific purpose of a reorganization of the State government.

Not only so, but such was the understanding, and such substantially our own declaration in the first session of this Convention; and must they now go back and reverse their own decisions deliberately made? Then they had acted upon this very point and acted specifically, and this body unanimously declared that during the present revolutionary crisis and the continuance of hostilities, it was imprudent and inexpedient to undertake a division of the State. He read from the Address prepared by the Committee on Business and adopted by the Convention at the close of the first session, to sustain this proposition.

Now they were asked, clamorously demanded, to act upon the division question. Was there not danger of committing the error committed by the Convention at Richmond of exercising powers not intended to be conferred upon them by the people? He thought there was. He had therefore deemed it necessary to recur to the powers conferred upon them by the people. They should limit themselves to their legitimate powers. A certain amount of action was necessary, but it had been determined by this Convention itself not to take any action not absolutely necesssary for the immediate safety of the people; and this action taken here now had received the sanction of loyal people everywhere, and of the authorities of the United States. Did they suppose if they had inaugurated a mere paper re-organization of the government they would have received this sanction and recognition? No, Sir.

He appealed to them as statesmen to maintain their consisteney, and not to stultify themselves by repudiating all their former action. If they proceeded now to direct a division of the State before a free expression of the people could be had, they would do a more despotic act than any ever done by the Richmond Convention itself. That Convention had offered the people of the State at least the form of a vote, and the Northwest at least had had a full and free expression; and now they proposed to cut off Eastern Virginia without even the form of a vote. They now proposed a division when it was impossible for one-fourth of even the counties included in the boundaries proposed to give even an expression upon the proposition. Were they to act for the West alone, and when but a small portion of it even could speak? But gentlemen told them the enemy would soon be expelled, and then they could have a vote.

MR. LEWIS inquired whether the gentleman would vote for the original bill or the substitute of the gentleman from Upshur, or for that of Mr. Carlile, if the time of holding an election for an expression of the people should be put off till the first of January.

MR. POLSLEY said if he would so modify his proposition as to let the Legislature order an election so soon as it might appear that a satisfactory and free expression might be obtained. But he was opposed to fixing a particular day. He believed that a proposition to divide the State should originate in the Convention. He did desire most earnestly that this Commonwealth might be divided as early as possible, but he feared a false step now would effectually defeat the grand object which they all had at heart.

As for the danger in case of a compromise with a rebellion, he had never for one moment felt a doubt of the ultimate success of the arms of the Union, but if that danger did exist then he maintained their present position was much stronger than if changed in any particular. Was it presumable that in such an event the State of Delaware or Maryland could be transferred without their assent? If not true of them neither was it true of the State of Virginia. On the hypothesis that we were the legitimate government of Virginia, could any compromise be made to transfer Virginia without the consent of our government here?

They had been told that the people are clamorous for immediate action. He had endeavored to find out if this was an imaginary or a real clamor. When people are oppressed, or desire a grand object through their representatives, it has been customary to present their petitions for that purpose. Had a solitary petition been offered here?

A MEMBER said some three or four had been offered here, signed by some seven hundred names.

Several members volunteered to give the gentlemen information as to the willingness of their constituents to sign such petitions.

MR. POLSLEY resumed: "Well, then, here were seven hundred out of some 640,000, who had petitioned them on this subject."

The Speaker followed at some length in a criticism upon the course of the Hon. William G. Brown, of Preston, for attempting, as he said, to influence members of the Legislature to go for an immediate division.

He had been told that Senator Johnson, of Missouri, had expressed an opinion in favor of a division of this State, and that opinion was used as an argument here. Who was Senator Johnson? He was a nephew of Ex-Governor Joseph Johnson, of this State. Senator Johnson was found alongside of John C. Breckenridge, and others like him and was a secessionist, and gave that advice because, if acted upon, it would destroy public confidence in this body and our government here.

MR. CARLILE wished to say a word in justice to Senator Johnson, but

MR. POLSLEY declined to give way. He insisted that by the Union men of the country Senator Johnson was regarded as a secessionist; and his proposition was the very identical advice he would expect to hear from every secessionist in the land. Let him inquire if there was a solitary Senator in Congress, or member of the House of Representatives, who was in favor of immediate action towards a division of this State who could be relied on as sound and loyal. No, Sir; all such had advised them to adhere to the position they had now assumed. They had now the support of public opinion, and let them maintain it. Mr. Polsley concluded without being able, on account of ill health, to finish his remarks.

MR. HUBBARD, of Ohio [county] followed, apologizing for succeeding Mr. Polsley upon the same side of the question. He went back and reviewed the early steps taken in the movement here inaugurated and argued from the language of the call of the first Convention, and that of the Addresses of the Central Committee, and the resolution of the first Convention, that it was not inaugurated for a division of the State, but a re-organization of the government for the whole State, and the support of the General Government in putting down rebellion.

He alluded to the resolutions of Mr. Farnsworth, declaring that the object of re-organizing the government was to obtain the division of the State, which were laid upon the table by a vote of some fifty odd to seventeen. He criticised the course of Mr. Lewis, of Harrison, in relation to his former position upon this question, and referred to a card that gentleman had published denouncing the action of the first Convention.

MR. LEWIS said that the card referred to would show that he was opposed to a disintegration of the State at that time, which he understood the Convention to favor, because he believed it would then have been unconstitutional; but when the re-organization of the whole State was suggested he saw that an object which he had long desired might be accomplished constitutionally, and he had more than once expressed regret that he had at first misunderstood the object of the movement.

MR. HUBBARD, resuming, said his objection to action now in the direction of a division was that it would embarrass the General Government in putting down rebellion, and if he did not believe this he would make no objection whatever. He wanted to know of gentlemen if the regular State government now in operation here was destroyed how could the remainder of the State ever be restored to the Union. The President of the United States had said that this movement here was worth more to the Government than an army with banners. He regretted to have heard the suggestion that upon the erection of a new State, and the fixing of the boundaries at the Allegheny, our young men would rally to that barrier to defend us. Why, Sir, what would you have thought if the people of Ohio had rallied to the Ohio river and said: "Here we will defend the Union." He wanted them not to stand still but to go on until the loyal people of all the State, and of all the South, should be liberated from their present oppression. When this had been done he was willing to go for a division, but not till then. He felt that he was pledged to every Union man in Virginia to press forward their deliverance to a final consummation. It was not a question of self interest, but of duty to the whole country. He wanted them to realize that they were not a third party, but they were part of the government, and their highest duty was to the Constitution of the United States. He regretted that it had been doubted that the government would not be successful in the contest. He himself had no doubt. He knew of no way to restore the Union except for the loyal people of the seceded States to reorganize their State governments; and now that they had inaugurated this general movement, he hoped they would rise to the importance of this great movement and not turn aside for any object of minor importance.

The speaker spent some time in replying to the arguments offered a few days ago by the gentleman from Randolph (Mr. Crane).

Gentlemen wanted to know how long he was willing to remain connected with the East; just so long he replied, as it should be necessary to sustain the loyal people of the East, and aid the Government in putting down rebellion.

One more thought was that action now would injure this government here; that as soon as this other government should be projected they would lose their regard for this one. And in reply to the gentleman from Lewis in reference to wanting a representative government, he would say that a Governor could be elected as easily and speedily as the State could be divided.

There were many other points to be noticed in this connection, but he would leave them to other gentlemen.

After Mr. Hubbard concluded,

MR. ZINN made an explanation in regard to the letter written by Mr. Brown, which, it had been charged here, was written with a view of influencing the action of the Legislature.

MR. FARNSWORTH obtained the floor, but gave way to Mr. Carlile, who addressed the Convention at length.

MR. CARLILE having obtained the floor, said:

MR. PRESIDENT—I have already said so much on this subject that I feel that it would be inflicting unusual punishment upon the Convention for me to enter into anything like an extended line of remarks now. I do not design to do so; but will be brief as I can be and pointed as I may.

We should not, Sir, in the heat of discussion, in our zeal, or in the confidence we have in the correctness of our judgments, allow that zeal to run away with those judgments in the discussion of the question now under consideration. I have been astounded at listening to speeches from very patriotic and able gentlemen who seemed to argue this question as if our loyalty to the Union was bounded by State lines. My friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Hubbard) imagines in one moment that our loyalty to the Union ceases the instant the people of this country should run a line separating them from the residue of the State, and in the same breath, almost, he shows conclusively that that cannot be, for he pays a well-merited compliment to our loyal friends across the river,

MR. HUBBARD—I was simply commenting upon the remark of a member that we should fortify along the boundary of the new State when run, and merely referred to our Ohio friends in showing how unpatriotic was such a suggestion.

MR. CARLILE—Well, if I had supposed that loyalty was bounded by state lines, I would be the last to claim the State of Virginia as she stands today upon the question of loyalty, as my own. If gentleman will convince me that the running of a line on the top of the Allegheny mountains, or anywhere else separating the Northwestern portion of the State from the residue of the State, and erecting it into a separate and independent State, would relinquish the patriotism of its people, I would be the last man to do so. Or if you can satisfy me that the action we propose here will embarass the Federal Government in the slightest degree in the effort that it is now making to maintain the Union and the supremacy of the laws, I will join hands with you gentlemen and vote the proposition down. That is the only argument I have heard in which all those who have spoken on the other side of the question concur in the opposition of this movement—that it will embarass the Administration. How, Sir? How? Does the Ohio river that divides us from the State on the other side embarrass the Administration in the efforts it is making to put down rebellion? Is Ohio disloyal? Does she send fewer troops here? Does she respond less eagerly to the call for men and money to aid the government than she would if there were included within her State limits the soil upon which we stand? Away with the idea that imaginary lines, defining the boundaries of States, crush the power out of the government to maintain and protect itself. And, Sir, I was surprised to hear that here in the city of Wheeling, the constitutents of my friends on this floor will feel themselves constrained, in the event that the people of Northwestern Virginia shall be consulted as to the division of the State, to propose that they should be allowed to cut off what they call the "Panhandle" and attach themselves as an appendage to the small end of Pittsburgh! Wheeling, the city of the West, that in the event of a new State being erected here would be the great manufacturing and commercial city of the State—Wheeling, which has had to struggle with the State of Pennsylvania to be allowed the privilege of erecting the beautiful and magnificent structure that now spans the beautiful Ohio—Wheeling seeking to be an appendage to the small end of Pittsburgh! Let the question be put. We will vote today if desired; and I know the good sense and interest of the people of these four counties will prompt them to vote it down. I have no fears that Wheeling will ever commit such suicide as that would be to her.

Now, Sir, tell me how the government is to be embarrassed by what we wish to do towards dividing the State? We cannot divide the State. What, then, do we propose to do? We propose that the people within a certain boundary may be allowed to declare their wishes on this subject. That is all; and the bare fact of consulting the people upon a question that has long been agitated by them is denounced upon this floor in unmeasured terms. But the act, it is said, will embarrass the government in its military operations. Now, will any gentleman be kind enough to point out how? Show us in what manner this embarrassment is to be effected. I listened attentively and with pleasure, as I always do, to the very sensible and able argument of my friend from Mason (Mr. Polsley), and with all his ability and good sense, he contented himself upon this branch of the argument by merely announcing the fact. Now, Sir, I pledge myself to him, and to any other gentleman opposed to this movement, that, if they will assign one solitary reason—one reason true in itself—if they will point out and show to me how the passage of the proposition now under consideration will embarrass the Federal Government in the effort it is making, I will vote with him.

MR. HUBBARD—How is Eastern Virginia to be restored to the Union, if the State is divided?

MR. CARLILE—I will tell my friend how. Who is to restore Eastern Virginia to the Union? Who restored Northwestern Virginia to the Union? Why, Sir, the loyal people of Eastern Virginia will have to restore it. That is the way Eastern Virginia is to be restored. That is the way every seceded State in the Union is to be restored—by the action of the loyal people residing within its limits. But, Sir, this does not prevent us from aiding the restoration of the rest of the State. The passage of this proposition will not defeat that object; it will not render us less powerful than we now are. When do gentlemen suppose we will have assembled here representatives from all of Virginia?—Will they fix any time? I suppose, Sir, that if that sight is ever to be presented to our view, it will be presented before the meeting of the next sesssion of the General Assembly.

I suppose, Sir, that this object which gentlemen desire if not effected by that time, will be postponed an indefinite period of time; and I should be willing to accept as true the remarks made by Governor Sprague, of Rhode Island—than whom a more gallant and loyal heart has not exhibited himself during this controversy, marching at the head of his own regiments, regiments composed of men worth their hundreds of thousands of dollars—when he told his Legislature upon his return the other day that this was to be a long, protracted war. It is to be a long and protracted war; and if we are to take care of our material interests until that war shall have ended, as is intimated by the gentleman from Mason—if this is to be so, let us know it, and let our people understand it. He says he is for no action until we see represented here every portion of the Commonwealth of Virginia.—Then, Sir, what is that declaration? What does that declaration amount to? I put it to his candor —I ask him to answer me sincerely, and say if he believes that if we postpone action until we have here a full representation from every county in the State, a separation ever will be obtained? Sir, if he does, he has more faith than I have. I have none. This State never will be divided if you consult every individual county through representation in the General Assembly. Gentlemen seem to think, Sir, that it is ungenerous, unkind, to our eastern "brethren" to take this advantage of them now. Unkind! Who among them dares to make that charge? How much, Sir, were our interests or advantages consulted when they took upon themselves to throw off their allegiance to that Constitution which Washington formed, when they inauguarated a revolution in our midst and made this the seat of War?

MR. SMITH, of Marion—"Does the gentleman have reference to the remarks I made?"

MR. CARLILE—"Not unless you said so."

MR. SMITH—"No reference was made by me to the rebellious sentiment in Eastern Virginia, no sympathy expressed for them; but a sympathy was expressed for the Union men there who are now, Mr. President, trampled down by this worse than despotism. That is their situation there; and we believe that if they could be relieved by any effort of ours, a Union sentiment would be developed there which, in gratitude to us, would magnanimously grant to us our rights, and if we would change our present Constitution so as to rest our representation upon the white basis, that we will then have a majority, and we can control the East in these matters. Not that we should hesitate a single moment because of the rebellious sentiment in the East, but because of the loyal sentiment there."

MR. CARLILE—"The gentleman talks of controlling Eastern Virginia by a legislative majority. Sir, we never had, and I venture to say, never will have, a majority in the Legislature of Virginia.

Now, Sir, when gentlemen speak of the West, they speak of it as defined by a natural line. Sir, in a political sense, there is no West, and never has been, save the Northwest. That is the fact as the records and the journals of the Legislature for the last half century will testify. The only West, in its political sense, is the Northwest. Where was the fight made and the battle fought—as my friend from Wood (Mr. Van Winkle) well knows—but in the Northwest?"

MR. VAN WINKLE—"In the Valley."

MR. CARLILE—"In how much of the Valley?"

MR. VAN WINKLE—"Nearly all."

MR. SMITH, of Marion—"Yes, and in the East."

MR. CARLILE—"Yes, in the East! Wise fought for it. You had Wise over there then; but where is he now?

But, Sir, look at the lines of improvement in Western Virginia outside of the Northwest. Where do they lead? Where is the railroad that penetrates Monroe and Greenbrier and the whole Southwest? It is the road that runs from Richmond. And the canal that has its commencement there and extends on into Covington? They all lead into and connect with the East. It is idle for gentlemen to talk of any other west save the Northwest. All the rest and residue of the State is bound by iron bands and commercial ties to the Eastern part of the State, and can never have any commercial interests or intercourse with us.

Sir, in looking to this, for the first time in my life, last fall I traveled through the entire Southwest. I saw these things for myself, and if gentlemen have never been there they cannot appreciate the utter impossibility of ever forming anything like business connections between that portion of the State and this. The wealth of Croesus would not construct a single line of improvement, running anywhere from the Northwest into the Southwest, and even if it were possible to build commercial lines it would be an unnatural direction for trade.

Now, Sir, tell me if you can, how the loyal people of Eastern Virginia are to be retarded in any effort they may hereafter make in extending over them the protection, as has been said, of that flag, (pointing to the Stars and Stripes suspended over the President's desk.) Do we propose to take up our Government and people and walk over into Rockingham and Shenandoah and take a position there? Or is it,—and it is but fair to suppose that gentlemen believe that there are within all these counties patriotic and loyal hearts panting for an opportunity to show their allegiance to the government formed for them by their fathers, and their hatred to these who have involved them in this rebellion? Is not that the idea? Does any man suppose that ever Eastern Virginia is to be restored to the Union as she was before the inauguration of this rebellion, unless it be by the act of her own people residing within her own limits, and living there, precisely as Northwestern Virginia has done? Then, Sir, tell me how this is to be accomplished. As the armies of the United States march through that portion of the State and drive before them and out of the country, those who are engaged in rebellion, and leave the "loyal hearts" free, can they not act for themselves? What, then, is to prevent them? Have they not the same General Government we have? Have they not the same Constitution that we have? Have they not the same "loyal hearts" and the same wise heads that we have? If they have not, God help them. (Laughter). I fear that even with our efforts they could not be saved. (Renewed laughter). Sir, this great movement that is "worth more than an army with banners," which as was well said by the gentleman from this city, is the movement which is to restore the Union—this movement has to be made, and effected, and inaugurated, and persisted in by the people inhabiting and residing within the limits of the respective counties that have suffered from secessionism and rebellion. Have they not within their midst loyal men, wise men, men capable of being Governors and members of the Legislature? If they have not they could not send them here. They must have members of the Legislature, and those members must of necessity be selected from among their midst and how do you prevent their patriotic action, by either bringing them to sit in a legislative body at Wheeling, or allowing them to sit in one east of the mountains? Would they be less wise or less patriotic sitting in a legislative body there, than they would be sitting in one here? I grant you they would not have the benefit of our counsel, but in days gone by they have been unwilling to take our counsel. We have endeavored to force it upon them, but we have always been told in effect, to stand aside, and we have been spoken of as the "disgraced Northwest." And it is to these, "our brethren," who have brought upon us calamities under which our whole country is reeling and tottering—who have involved us all in one common ruin—it is tender consideration for these gentlemen that is to stay us in an effort made to relieve us from a dominant and arrogant governmental majority, and place us where, and make us what nature and nature's God designed us to be, a free, separate, independent, political community, occupying a place upon that flag, a star as large as either of them, side by side with the thirty-four now there. This is to be sacrificed; our material interests are not to be considered; the wealth contained within the surface of our soil is to remain as it has always been, undeveloped; and we are to seek in other States and in other communities, that sympathy that we should share and which we would share in our own State, if we were not separated from the rest of it by natural insurmountable barriers.

But, Sir, a resolution offered by my friend from Upshur, (Mr. Farnsworth,) at the last session of the Convention, is referred to as having been defeated, and it is sought, by constructions placed upon this and upon the action of the former Convention, to deny this Convention the power to do anything that will affect, in the slightest degree the status of our people, or any portion of them. They deny that the object of calling this Convention was to provide a way by which the people could declare their wishes on this subject; and then quote resolutions, all of which go to show that the object of this Convention was "to take such steps and adopt such measures as will best promote the welfare and secure the safety" of our constituents. Now, Sir, there are some of us here foolish enough to believe that our interests and welfare will be best promoted by a separation from the rest of the State. I would like to know if we so believe, if we have not the right, under and by the authority of those resolutions referred to, to endeavor if possible to induce the Convention to allow the people to speak their views on this subject. No definite action under prescribed rule was laid down for our government by the plan of any of these Conventions; but when that very resolution of my friend from Upshur was tabled—and I take it for granted I voted to table it—when it was under discussion here for two days, as mentioned by the gentleman from the city of Wheeling (Mr. Hubbard), I know one member of this Convention that did say that he opposed such propositions then because we had no legislature that could give the consent required by the constitution to our separation, but who did, in the very same speech in which he opposed the resolution, say that at the very instant, as soon as could be, after we have such a Legislature, he would be foremost among those who sought a division of the State. He who now addresses you said that on the 13th of June.

We knew how that resolution was tabled. That vote was no expression of sentiment, and it was so said by men who voted for tabling the resolution. I recollect my friend from Monongalia (Mr. Dorsey,) who came here from a county, at a town of which eight hundred and twenty-one votes were cast on the twenty-third of last May for a division of the State, and but eight hundred against the ordinance of secession. He took the very same ground whenever he saw that there was a constitutional difficulty in the way, that no good whatever could be accomplished by agitating the subject then, and he, with others, voted against this proposition, and they pledged themselves to use every effort in their power to bring about a division whenever it could be accomplished. That is the ground we all took, and the published debates show it to be so."

MR. HAWXURST, of Fairfax—"Why then did you invite the Union people of the East to meet you in Convention?"

MR. CARLILE—"Why, Sir, we want you here, we are glad to have you with us; you came, however, without our invitation in the first place, allow me to say. That call as read this morning by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hubbard), was a call for the Northwest, and it alone. But when you come here to participate with us we like you to do so, so long as we have a government claiming to be the government of Virginia—not only have you here that are here, but have an addition to your number."

MR. LAMB—"According to my recollection of the call, the language of the call was very different."

MR. CARLILE—"I drew that resolution with my own pen."

MR. LAMB—"I do not allude to the call for the first Convention."

MR. STUART—"Mr. President, the hour of half-past twelve has arrived, and I believe that is the hour fixed for adjournment."

MR. CARLILE—"I would be glad if I could have a few minutes to finish; it would take but a few minutes."

Several members, "Go on!" "Go on!"

General consent was given and Mr. Carlile proceeded.

"MR. PRESIDENT, my recollection of that call is as it was read; it was a call to the Northwest, drawn up by myself and adopted by one of the largest and most respectable assemblages that ever met in Harrison county, and, Sir, we took occasion to send messengers with the proceedings of that Convention into every county of the Northwest."

MR. LAMB—"I referred to the call for the June Convention. It will be found that the purpose of that call was very different."

MR. CARLILE—"I take it that that was an invitation to all loyal citizens to participate here. Reference to that call has been made and it is used as an additional argument why we should "wait!" "wait!"—"wait until it is too late for the accomplishment of our purpose. Our friends from the Eastern part of the State ask us to "wait." We have been waiting upon them ever since the 13th of last May. We called upon you then; we called upon you in June, and we call upon you now in August; and because you are not disposed to put your necks into the halter here, as some gentlemen have talked about doing—I have never talked about it—it may be for that or for some other reason, you have not heeded our call. Are we to "wait," and "wait," and "wait," until we are bound hand and foot by that same old governmental dominance, and the power has passed from our hands, and that which our people have hoped for, prayed for, worked for, be forever denied?"

Without concluding, Mr. Carlile gave way for a recess.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled, and Mr. Carlile took the floor, and proceeded to finish his remarks begun in the morning session, as follows:

"Sir, nations and political communities are governed, so says every writer upon the laws of nations and every writer upon the morals that govern political communities, by interest. Interest is at the base of all political action; and if we believe it to be to our interest to sever the bonds that connect us to old Virginia we are justified in the eyes of the world. We have the highest authority for our availing ourselves of the opportunity now (I think) providentially presented to us, of obtaining that which we believe to be essential to our interests. Sir, I am enlisted in this war for the maintenance of the Union as much as any man; I will do no act, take no step that will in the slightest degree, if I know it, prejudice the Union cause in any way, shape or form; and I will say here now what I have always said that the first object, with me, is the preservation of the Union, (a member "that's it.") Satisfy me that that first object is to be enfeebled and endangered by any act now looking to a division of the State and I am with you. I make a division of the State subordinate to the maintenance of the Union. But I cannot believe that it is to come in conflict with any effort that it is to be made by us or by any one else for the preservation of the Union; and until I have a reason assigned me, showing how it is to conflict, will I not yield the position I have taken upon this subject.

Why, Sir, I was surprised to hear gentlemen enumerate difficulty after difficulty, all of which as was well said on yesterday by my friend from this city, (Mr. Paxton) has existed and will continue to exist throughout all time, with the solitary exception of the embarrassment of the Administration in this struggle. These reasons are assigned by gentlemen who tell us that they are in favor of a division "at the proper time;" and that "proper time" is when all Virginia is represented in the Legislature, and then the time is when you never can get the consent of the Legislature: Now, Sir, I have my own views about the position of gentlemen when they tell me they are in favor of a division of the State, and say they intend to postpone it until that time; for they must know if they postpone it until then they never can get the consent of the Legislature. Then, Sir, there is an argument which I alluded to the other day and will repeat, that is a full answer to all that has been said on this question of embarrassing the government. If it is believed by the Congress of the United States that a separation of this State will embarrass the efforts making to suppress the rebellion, will they admit us as a State? Each one can put that to himself and answer. It is not worth while for us to say what Congress will do or will not do. That is all speculation. I do not think that any gentleman is authorized to speak for any deliberative body, because they very often, in a very short period of time reverse their own opinions. Now, Sir, if we act as is proposed, and provide that the sense of the people within the boundary shall be taken upon this question of a new State, and they declare for it, and the Legislature consents to it, and Congress gives its assent, why it will be [the] very best evidence in the world that gentlemen are mistaken in supposing that it will embarrass the Administration; but if Congress should withhold its consent—should it be the opinion that the Administration or the Government is to be embarrassed in the slightest degree, my word for it they will postpone action on your application. Congress will not admit you; they may not reject your application; they may let it lie over and say to you: "When the proper time arrives we will admit you," but they will not admit you now. Tell me how the initiatory steps, the proceedings taken here, are to affect in the slightest degree the power of the government to determine this question of embarrassment for itself. That is the question I put. Answer that. Depend upon it Congress, according to its members, is just as loyal as we are. Congress will guard the interests of this Union with as much care as we can; and if our application should be made to that body for admission into the Union as a State, and they believe it will embarrass the government in the slightest degree, they will either refuse our application at once or postpone action upon it. They will take care that the public interests suffer no detriment whatever by any action we have had out here in the country, and that action is the assembling on a given day of voters in their prescribed districts to declare their wishes upon a separation of the State, and their adoption or rejection of a Constitution proposed to them to govern them if they do vote for a new State, and the action of the Legislature upon it; all of which is nothing, affects nothing, binds nobody; changes the relation of no one, affects no political organization whatever until it has obtained the assent of Congress. Such consent will not be given, we may rest assured, if gentlemen shall be found right in their predictions, and if it is found that the government is to be embarrassed in the struggle.

A word or two more, and I have done. I thrust my opinions unwarranted upon no one. I have heretofore shown that I am willing to yield the cherished principles that I have advocated with warmth and zeal. I yielded to the gentleman from Mason, and others who thought with him in the Convention of May. I yielded, as my friend knows, after doing all I could in that Convention for a separation. I am willing now, if any compromise that looks to any reasonable accomplishment of the object we, nearly all of us, profess to have at heart, can be agreed upon, to go with you. I would dislike exceedingly, I assure you, that any action of this body should go out to our people by a meagre vote. I should dislike exceedingly, that those of us who believe our people almost unanimously demand at our hands that we should provide a means by which they might be allowed to their opinions on this subject that they should be denied that expression by a bare majority of one or two. I should dislike exceedingly to have a minority go away dissatisfied, determined to make an opposition. Whatever may be our conclusions here, let us all resolve that we will support them unanimously; and if we have the good luck to beat you by two or three votes, which I think we will, just come in as we do, you know, when we want to elect our party candidates, and make it unanimous."

MR. SMITH, of Marion—"And you won't go away and break up the government?"

MR. CARLILE—"No, Sir."

MR. VAN WINKLE—"You will do it if you agitate this subject."

MR. CARLILE—"Why, Sir, how can that be? This question is agitated all the time; it has been agitated for a long while."

MR. BURDETT—"Yes, for thirty years."

MR. CARLILE—"Yes, Sir, and you may say "down!" "down!" But, gentlemen, it will not go down. It will be agitated. It is a question, Sir, as was stated by one of my colleagues (Mr. Lewis) yesterday, that has been looked to and expected from the foundation of our government. It was predicted, as we were told by one of the brightest lights in the Convention which formed our first Constitution, that this part of the State would not submit to a continuance of its connection with the rest of the State. Why, take the map of Virginia and look at it, and you will see at once, that this is an unnatural connection, and works injuriously to the interests of the people thus connected; and upon that great rule, that all political communities will do that which best promotes their interests, they say this separation will have had. You cannot affect the government at Wheeling. It is by that government that we expect to get the separation, Sir; we cannot turn our backs upon it."

MR. VAN WINKLE—"You will bring it into contempt."

MR. CARLILE—"Sir, you cannot bring a government into contempt while my friend from Wood is a member of it. (Laughter.) No man ever brought himself into contempt, except by his own misconduct; and no government can but by the same. But, Sir, I will tell you what will bring it and every one into contempt — weakness in its knees. Scarcity of funds, Sir, will bring it into a position where contempt might reach it. How are you going to get funds? Thus far we have been fortunate. The great Democratic party has conferred upon us a boon by refusing in our State to take the share of the public proceeds of public lands, which belong to us under the act of 1841. (Laughter,) We eagerly jumped at it, Sir, and it has been the means of supplying our empty treasury; but in consequence of the many drafts which are made upon it, it is fast dwindling away; and if we stay here much longer, the forty-one thousand dollars will be entirely gone." (Laughter.)

MR. HAWXHURST, of Fairfax—"If we of the East are to be cut off, will the gentleman tell me how we are to get our share of it?"

MR. CARLILE—"Why, take it out in $4 a day mileage, as the member from Fairfax is doing now. (Laughter.) As long as you remain in Virginia you throw into market your Virginia bonds at a nominal value of about forty or fifty cents; but divide the State, and your bonds will go into market at par, and you will have the funds necessary not only to pay us in legislative assemblies, but to improve our country and to start the iron horse snorting through all these hills. (Applause and laughter.) Sir, that is a question I have looked at from the beginning. No government ever was respectable, no government ever will be respectable without money, and very few men, I think. (Laughter.) That has been the cause of my want of respectability all my life. (Laughter). And, Sir, I appreciate it, I have felt it, I know it, and therefore, while I may, as an individual, lack the respectability that funds would give me, yet, as a member of a State, with plenty of money, I may feel at least that I have political respectability. Now, Sir, how are you to get the money—where is it to come from, that is to grace this Wheeling government? Echo answers, where, But, Sir, take these steps, if your people really do, as we believe they do, desire a division and will vote for it, and the Congress of the United States admits you, you start upon a new career, unembarrassed by debt. For, Sir, when ever there is a settlement made between this portion of the State and the residue, and a correct balance struck, it is in our favor.

MR. VAN WINKLE—"Does the gentleman mean to say that by separating we get rid of the debt?"

MR. CARLILE—"I say whenever we divide this State, and settle this question of debt and there is a correct balance struck, we will bring the other side in debt, that is what I say."

MR. SMITH, of Marion—"How is it to be settled?"

MR. CARLILE—"That, Sir, is to be left for yourself and other eminent gentlemen who will be in the future legislative assemblies of Virginia to determine. (Laughter.) "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." It will be time enough to consider this matter when the time for considering it arrives. The subject of this settlement is to be a subject for gentlemen who are to fill the legislative halls of a new State.

But, Sir, instead of embarrassing the Government by this movement, I maintain it would relieve it to a very great degree, and how? If we had a defined line to defend, all we would have to do would be to put our military there. But, Sir, where have we any definite boundary to protect? Tell me the definite boundary we have to protect. With 20,000 or 30,000 Government troops today in our midst, they are scattered from county to county, with no force capable of resisting anything like an armed force brought against us. Give us a line; and the line we propose for the new State that we will have to defend is only the line that divides us from the rest of the State, and if there are "loyal hearts" they will soon be able, with the advancing march of the Federal Army to save us all trouble of protecting it. Then we shall have a definite boundary which alone we could call upon the Federal Government to aid us in protecting, for we will rely upon the brave hearts and strong arms of our loyal citizens to protect us against secessionists in our midst. For, Sir, once get that line established those of them who are disposed to give us trouble will "leave their country for their country's good" but so long as they are here, encouraged and assured by the presence of the Confederate Army within our limits, so long will they prove a thorn in our side, and so long will they resist successfully the operation of our Wheeling government. There is an advantage which it seems to me we would derive from this separation, that nothing can give us. With a defined line beyond which secession forces dare not approach without violating the "sacred soil" and sovereignty of a free and independent State, we could defend it with fewer Federal troops and less of the Government's money than it will take to suppress an indiscriminate rebellion, and protect indiscriminately a population scattered all over this section of the State. There is another argument, Sir; it will relieve the Confederate forces from all obligation they feel to protect their own soil. Once let them see that this portion of Virginia is beyond their grasp; once let them see that this is a separate and independent political community, a State to themselves, recognized as such, they may in the language of Wise, be willing to let the "disgraced Northwest" go, and take their armies where they may be wanted more for home protection of secession than they are in this region. There will be no longer what I may call an honorable obligation resting upon the State to protect its soil, because that soil will be no longer hers, and we may in this way relieve our people from these secession armies in their midst. And we can confidently tell them "beyond this line you cannot and dare not come.

These may be all insufficient reasons, but they are some of the reasons that induced me to advocate the proposition now under consideration. I shall, as I remarked, however, bow to the decision of a majority of this body, and I will go as far as he who goes furthest to suppress anything like a revolutionary movement. We hope by fair argument, we hope by holding up before you the honest wishes of the people, we hope by appealing to all that we think should influence and govern men in a representative capacity, to obtain the sanction of this body to the proposition now under consideration, which is not a proposition to divide the State, which I repeat works nothing, effects nothing, changes no relation on earth until it has the assent of the Congress of the United States who will judge the propriety of giving or withholding their consent.

Now, Sir, I desire to notice a remark made in relation to what I said the other day, that a new State would deprive me—"

MR. STUART (interrupting)—"Mr. President, I must insist on an adjournment; it is now within a few minutes of one o'clock, which is dinner time for most of us, and we have to be back here at half-past two."

MR. CARLILE—"I will forbear willingly, and thank the Convention for having indulged me so long already."

The Convention took a recess, and on its re-assembling at half-past two, Mr. Carlile took the floor and concluded his remarks as follows:

"MR. PRESIDENT, the great argument, the main argument, and the one that seems to be relied upon by all who have opposed this measure publicly, is the embarrassment to the Administration in consequence of our government here not extending itself over other portions of the State. Now, with all kindness and with all respect for our friends who like myself are filling offices under this government, I would say according to my view, it would be a little more modest, to say the least of it, in us allowing the loyal citizens of Eastern Virginia whenever the armies of the United States allow them to do so, to select for themselves their own governmental officers, and not for us by virtue of our power to spread over them our own. It is a fact well known, Sir, that only those who have been represented in the Convention here, and in the Legislature had a voice in the selection of any of these officers. Therefore, I repeat again I cannot see how our action is to embarrass the Federal Government in restoring the former government to the loyal people of Eastern Virginia unless it is to be done without the consent of the people who are to be governed and without allowing them to determine who shall be their officers under the government, or unless it is presumed that we will have the military power to govern them by mere force, which I presume no one desires or would advocate.

Then, Sir, without delaying the Convention longer, I think I have successfully met the main argument of the opposition to this measure. I meet it first by showing there can be nothing in it, for nothing we can do affects or changes our relations in the slightest degree to the people of the Union or the people of the State. All that we do is initiatory, and is void, and can be of no effect, unless consented to by Congress. If consented to by Congress, it is the best evidence in the world that the government will not be embarrassed by our action.—They have full and entire control over the whole subject, and we all know that if Congress should suppose for an instant that the legalizing, acknowledging and recognizing of our action would embarrass the Administration, they would refuse to do so.

Then I show, I think, conclusively, and beyond doubt, that there can be no government restored to the people of Eastern Virginia only by and through the action of the loyal people of that portion of the State. They must act, and then the government that is restored to them is a government of the people—a government deriving all its vitality, its existence, its being, from the action of the people. The government that we would thrust upon them without their expression and their action, would be as perfect a tyranny as could be established over any people. Therefore, I take it, it is not contemplated by the opponents of this measure that even if we remain as we are, one State, with no government but ours that we have restored and organized here, it shall not be extended over them without the action of the loyal citizens of Eastern Virginia, and they can just as well restore their former Government for themselves without having our Governor and Council, as they can with them. Therefore, I cannot for the life of me—it may be because I am unable to understand—I cannot see the force of the arguments that have been used.

But, Sir, I desire again to call attention to the important point, and I want the question answered, if we continue as we are, if the loyal citizens of the eastern portion of the State cannot be relieved by December next, where is the money to come from that is to supply the treasury? Does my friend from Fairfax, who wants his "share" of the public money—does his county contribute anything towards the expense of this government? How much has it paid into our treasury? How much does he suppose it will, until the armies of the country have relieved his people? How much has been contributed by those living east of the mountains toward the expenditures that have already been incurred, and how much do we expect will be contributed towards those to be hereafter met? I say not this by way of reproach, but of sorrow. It is because of the inability of those who we say are devoted to the Union, to do so; they have been prevented from doing it; and we have not the power of ourselves to relieve them. If relieved at all, they must be relieved by the Federal power, and by our taking action here which will relieve to a small degree the Federal army and will enable it to retain in our midst a less force than will be otherwise required. We to that extent early contribute to the realization of the hopes of our loyal friends east of the mountains.

But we are met with the question how is this debt to be apportioned and settled? It is a sufficient answer at any and all times to say that it is to be met whenever a division takes place, and if there is any argument in the question at all, if anything is to be inferred by its use, it is an argument against a division for all time and under all circumstances; for whenever it takes place it must be met. But, Sir, I will say that if there could be no other way of meeting it we could meet it by buying up every dollar of it ourselves. If we had a separate State existence we could issue our bonds in the market and command fifteen millions of money tomorrow; and if our bonds can now be bought up at thirty cents on the dollar, as a gentleman of this city informs me, less than fifteen millions would pay the forty-six millions which Virginia owed prior to the first of January last. But there is no necessity for this. The question of an equitable assumption can be met just as well today as it can be a hundred years hence, if those who come after us are found as we are, struggling for this separation.

Give us, then, the position designed for us. Let us avail ourselves of this opportunity. There is no reason in morals, and there is no reason in law, why we should not avail ourselves of it. There has never been a time before, in my humble judgment, when it could be accomplished, and I think it extremely doubtful if there ever will be again, when it can be accomplished peacefully, constitutionally and legally. Now is the day and now is the hour. "There is a tide in the affairs of" peoples as well as the affairs of "men," which taken at the flood leads on to fortune." That tide is flowing for us. Let us avail ourselves of it. Let not the golden moments pass by, for they may never return. Let us all sacrifice all of personal pride and personal feeling and private opinion we may have entertained. Let it all go as the veriest dust; let it be thrown to the winds of heaven, and let us bring to the altar of our common country all the patriotism and all the wisdom that is within us. I repeat, Sir, there is no difference of sentiment among the members of this body, or among our constituents, as to the support we should give the cause of the Union. Its flag we will maintain and uphold, and we can better do this with a separate existence than we can now, embarrassed as we are at every step we take by the innumerable burdens that are weighing upon us so long as we remain in this State."

MR. CARLILE then proceeded to reply to charges of sympathy with secession made by Mr. Polsley against Senator Johnson, of Missouri, after which he concluded his remarks, as follows:

"MR. PRESIDENT, with the evidences which we have of the desire on the part of the people to be heard upon this question, whether it be a majority or a minority, I think it is as little as we can do as representatives professing obedience to the will of that people, to give them an opportunity to be heard at the ballot-box upon this subject. This is all we propose; all we ask; all we will be pledged to by any action of our own; and, Sir, that we may not be here an indeterminable length of time, and that this thing may close one way or the other, I would suggest to the friends of this measure, that we sit here and patiently vote down all the motions to adjourn until a vote is had on this question. I have spent many a night in similar bodies, and I think it is the only way in which an end can sometimes be reached. I am perfectly willing to sit here until the sun rises tomorrow, and for one, I shall vote against all adjournment until a vote is taken upon this subject."

MR. STUART followed, and in the course of his remarks said he wanted it distinctly understood that he was in favor of a division of the State, and he had believed and urged that it should take place at the time of the Constitutional Convention of 1850. But we as a people are here reorganizing our Government interests. We have an honor to maintain. Everything else sinks into significance compared to the great object of maintaining the Union and the Government of the United States. What was Northwestern Virginia without the Union? If their action here was likely to injure the cause of the Union, could not they hesitate before they took any such action? He said the friends of division urged the measure, lest the debt of the State contracted by the usurpers at Richmond should be fixed upon them. Was it to be supposed that they would have anything to do with the debt contracted by a rebellious people which the Government was now putting down? He knew there were true men in the eastern part of the State. He had seen them shed tears in the Richmond Convention when the ordinance was passed and he did not desire to cut loose from such men as these. He protested against such selfish action.

But he professed to be a constitutional man, and he prayed them not to be the first to trample the constitution under foot, and appealed to them, what was the spirit of the provision of the consitution in relation to the formation of new States, which he quoted? Did they believe that this contemplated that two-thirds of a State should cut loose from the remaining State by an arbitrary majority and leave that third to maintain their government as best they might? It was contrary to all ideas of justice in governments. And if two-thirds could not do so how could one-fourth of a State force a division without the consent of the remainder of a State? The gentleman had asked for a reason for not taking immediate action. That reason was that we cannot comply with the requirements of the constitution of the United States. Certain influences had been brought to bear here that he had not anticipated. That influence was his friend from Harrison. In the May Convention he was in favor of a division. On the 13th of June he found him opposing a division of the State at that time, and urging that the primary object of this movement was to restore Virginia to the Union. Now we find him turning around and urging a division.

Why was it that gentlemen were so changeable? His argument was that in the first of this session there was no Legislature. Was there any in May, when he wanted a division? But it was necessary to obtain the consent of the Legislature; he would say that it was not yet obtained. The gentleman from Harrison (Mr. Lewis) wanted the State divided so as to get back to the old representative form of government. Well, Sir, this was a representative government. He had been sent here by constituents, who so regarded it. But they didn't send him here to divide the State; it was to aid in putting down rebellion. In canvassing before his constituents he had made this and the support of the government the great question, and had ignored the question of a division because he believed it would result in dividing our people among themselves. He did not stand here to dissent from his constituents, and if any man would convince him that his people wanted him to take hasty action he would go with the advocates of division. But he wanted first, before he did such a thing, to go back to his constituents for instruction.

He alluded to the assertion of Mr. Lewis, that an equitable settlement would show that the West did not owe the East one dollar.

He animadverted severely upon the suggestion made by Mr. Carlile, that with the bonds of the New State, Virginia bonds could be bought at from 30 to 40 cents. Should they thus swindle the people who had come here to protect and defend our people from the hordes of secession? No, Sir. He hoped the gentleman would never mention the suggestion again. He alluded to a remark of Mr. Lewis in relation to treason against the State, that he believed it would even be treason to petition for a division of the State. The Constitution of the United States was above any statute of any State, and the right of petition on any subject was one that was and must be inviolate. He had always contended, and always should, that the people of Northwestern Virginia had the right of petitioning for a division of the State, or for any other object. With regard to taking advantage of the circumstances which gentlemen styled "providential," that was another argument which he placed in the same category with the proposition of buying up our own State debts.

Why was it that all the secessionists in his section of the country were now clamoring for State division?

MR. LEWIS replied that he believed it was because they regarded that the vote given upon that question was a manifestation of the views of the people upon a division of the State, and they were willing to acquiesce in the majority.

MR. STUART said that acquiescing and advocating was a very different thing.

MR. CATHER said in his part of the country they had understood from that vote, that a majority here were in favor of the Constitution of the United States, and by dividing the State, and the formation of the new State, they would have a good excuse for submitting to this majority.

MR. STUART believed notwithstanding the explanations that the secessionists were doing this because they believed it was a measure that would involve us in difficulties and dangers.

He again attacked the position of the gentleman from Harrison (Mr. Lewis) and read that gentleman's card published last May in regard to the movement just then inaugurated. And he paused before he could consent to be led by a gentleman who held as Mr. Lewis then did that he owed an allegiance to the United States subordinate to that due to the State. He argued against any such doctrine and said it was the doctrine of secession. Now, Sir, these gentlemen were advocating the doctrine of secession—the right of one-fourth to secede from the remaining portion of the State and break up their State government without the consent of the rest of the State. This argument that two peoples who were not quite homogeneous in interest with each other, should strike by force, if need be, for a separation was but another form of the "irrepressible conflict," thrust upon them by the villains at the North—the Abolitionists: though by that term he did not mean the Republican party. He reviewed a position taken by Mr. Carlile in a speech delivered some days ago that it was impossible ever to have commercial intercourse with the East, and wanted to know why he wanted to exclude the counties in the Kanawha Valley, which were to all intents and purposes identical in interests with ourselves. He believed if the State was ever to be divided, and he should vote for it at the proper time, the mountains should be the boundary.

MR. CARLILE explained that the proposition was substantially Mr. Farnsworth's; he had only changed it in one or two respects, and not at all in respect of boundary, except to cut out one county.

MR. STUART proceeded to criticise other provisions of the proposition of Mr. Carlile, particularly that in relation to the adjustment of the State debt. The West had no right to cast up an adjusment of the debt, and then tell the bondholders they may look to the remainder of the State. They had assumed a position that entitled them to the sympathy of the whole United States, and of the world, but if they did this, as here proposed, it would be both wrong and disgraceful. The gentleman from Harrison seemed to think that an imaginary line would be all the defence we would want, and that the people of the East could go on and erect a government, as we have done. How would the General Government ever provide for law and order there, if they should be left without any government at all. He depicted the situation of Union men in that part of the Sate, and said this would cut them off and give them over to the rebellion authorities, and they would have nothing at all around which to rally.

MR. FARNSWORTH succeeded, and as he had had the honor of presenting a substitute upon this question, he claimed the right of saying a few words.

He had never heard such a tirade of abuse as had here been launched at the advocates of a division. He had never been so much puzzled in his life, as to tell what was the argument of the gentleman from Doddridge, and his reason for wishing to delay action.

He proceeded to review Mr. Stuart's argument, and said that that gentleman had confessed that he did not know the sentiments of the Union men of his section but he did seem to know all about the secessionists there.

He charged upon a portion of the gentlemen opposing immediate action that they were opposed to the formation of a new State altogether. Two of the members had told him they were, and they were found acting with the gentleman who professed to be in favor of a new State, and were now opposing what they were pleased to call "precipitate action."

It had been claimed on this floor that one of the great objects had been to get into a condition to legally and constitutionally take these steps. That was the argument of the gentleman from Wood. If they were not now in such a situation they never would be. He recapitulated the different steps that had been taken to make this a legitimate government. And they were not to be prejudiced by the rebellion in Eastern Virginia. They were not to suffer because the rebels there had done wrong.

He took the bold ground that the Government could not refuse them admission into a new State if the application were properly made. It was a right they had under their State Constitution, with the assent of their Legislature to demand admission. The argument that because they were formed into a new State they could not be loyal, was the weakest he had ever heard; and if the success of the General Government depended on denying the rights of the people of Western Virginia, then its success hung on a brittle thread, and that was already snapping. But the government was high above such position as this. She was contending for constitutional liberty, and we contending with her for the same. He replied to several arguments advanced by Mr. Van Winkle, of Wood, and to the objection that they should wait; he told them that if they let this opportunity pass they never would get a division. It was taking no advantage of the East. They had refused to join us, and should we suffer because of their refusal? Suppose they did wait, and Virginia should give us their consent, and we should tell them they would be without any form of government, they would laugh us to scorn—for they would still have all the rights they ever had and the same constitution they have now.

Besides there was a settlement with them that must be made, and separating from them will not aggravate the case in the least. He was for making all that settlement at once.

As to boundary, he would like to have the boundary run with the mountains, but at this time perhaps, that boundary could not be had. Only give them a State composed of such counties as those named in his proposition, and it would vie with any other State in the Union. He was opposed to taking in any counties at this time that would have to be coerced into measures. They could at any time adopt an ordinance making provision for their admission.

MR. LAMB moved that to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock the floor be given to Chairman of the Committee on Division of the State, and that the debate be closed at five o'clock, and that the Convention then proceed to vote in order upon the various propositions with such amendments as may be offered before the Convention.

MR. CALDWELL moved to amend the resolution so as to close the debate at half after 11 A. M.

MR. CARLILE did not, as he had had opportunity of discussion, desire to deprive others of the same opportunity.

MR. LAMB withdrew the resolution, and offered another extending the time to Monday, which was, upon the motion of Mr. Caldwell, laid upon the table for the present.

The Convention then took a recess till half-past 7 o'clock.

THE NIGHT SESSION.

The Convention met at half-past seven.

MR. LAMB obtained the floor and delivered a strong logical, forcible argument against action towards a division of the State. He spoke as follows:

"Mr. President:—

"I had not intended to address this house on the subject of a division of the State. So much has already been said upon that subject that I thought it might only serve further to weary the members of this body. But, Sir, it is a matter of too deep importance to us all for me to omit giving utterance to some considerations, which I think ought to influence the members of this Convention in their discussion of so momentous a question.

"Mr. President, let me say in the outset that I am for a separation of this State when it can be done at the proper time and in the proper manner. In that division, however, I should insist upon, at least, obtaining the line of the Alleghenies or the line of the Blue Ridge—the latter if it was to be had—if not, the Alleghenies extending down, at least, as far as Kanawha. With the amount of population which we possess, with the amount of revenue which can be commanded in this district of country, it is essential, I think, that we should have our position capable of easy military defense, in order that we may occupy a respectable position in the family of States. It will be necessary for the purpose of the argument which I propose to make, to glance for a moment, and very briefly, at the reasons which I think would render a separation from Eastern Virginia desirable to us all.

We have long suffered, Mr. President, from the misrule of the Eastern section of the State. They have repeatedly denied us our proper share of representation in our legislature—they have subjected us to an unequal and unjust system of taxation for the protection, as far as possible, from the burden of State service, of their own property. In the distribution of the expenditure of that taxation they have endeavored to encourage the prosperity of their own section of the State, and have left the West without any participation in the benefit of that expenditure. We are in fact, Mr. President, a different people. Our social habits are different. Our commercial relations are not with Eastern Virginia. The productions of our soil and our workshops do not go in that direction; nor do we purchase the articles which we want from the cities of Eastern Virginia. Every consideration which can be addressed to the wisdom of a statesman, would demand a separation at the proper time and in the proper manner. I am as deeply sensible of this, as firmly convinced of this, as resolutely determined on effecting that separation, as any gentleman who will vote upon the other side of this question.

But, Sirs, that separation should be effected at the proper time and in the proper manner. It is when we could command such a boundary as our new State ought to have. It should take place only when a full and free and fair expression of the opinion of the people could be had throughout all the limits of the new State. When these conditions can be complied with, I am ready to go into the measure; and they cannot be complied with in the midst of confusion and civil war. They cannot be complied with at present, and I see in the agitation of this question, in the heat with which members are disposed to hurry forward this measure at present, nothing but that which precedes misfortune to Northwestern Virginia.

Mr. President, it is not sixty days since our present form of government was inaugurated. Our Governor was elected on the 20th of June; it is now the 16th of August, and we are already seeking to overthrow all that was then established. Already we would change all that was then fixed and determined upon. Already we would uproot the government which we had established from its foundation, and start off in pursuit of a new scheme—a new experiment, for experiment it is in such times as these.

This disposition, Mr. President, to be continually changing great fundamental institutions, is one which can lead to nothing but misfortune. We are proceeding more rapidly in this course than the zealots of the French Revolution, for their constitutions and their fundamental systems of government at least lasted sixty days. How long will it be, if this spirit is to be encouraged, before some new scheme will be started upon which men may excite the passions and prejudices of the people, for the purpose of riding into power or office? I would impute no such motives to any man here. With their motives I have no concern. But this disposition shown here, to have something new—some great change—before we have even tried the system which we have adopted, is to my mind, one of the worst signs of the times. Why is it, Mr. President? Why this disposition to precipitate? Why this hot haste in reference to this measure? Are we subject now to the control of Eastern Virginia? Are her tax gatherers amongst us now? Are our people to be transferred into Eastern Virginia? Is she now contracting debts which we are to pay? No, Sir! As a matter of fact, whatever the theory may be of the separation which gentlemen demand—the separation which they are so anxious for at this present moment,—practically we are perfectly independent now of Eastern Virginia. She has no control over us. The misrule which she has exercised over us so long, she exercises over us no longer. We have no present evil here that it is necessary for us to rouse ourselves in order to shake off. It is not for the purpose, then, of getting rid of an evil under which we are now at this present moment suffering; but it is because gentlemen apprehend there can be no other reason—that in some mode or other we are to be subjugated again to this rule. If there is danger, Mr. President, that, at some future day, we may be again subject to the misrule and misgovernment of Eastern Virginia, when that danger is imminent I will be ready to meet it. But I would not destroy our efficiency in the great work of maintaining the Union until that danger was upon us—until it became necessary to act, to act resolutely and to act decidedly in order to avert it.

There are two modes in which we may again be subjected to the government of Eastern Virginia. Let us consider them for a moment. The United States government, which I do not for a moment believe can ever be the case, may be unable to maintain itself and defend us, and we may be again subjected, by force of arms, to the Confederate States. If this is the danger that gentlemen apprehend—if this is the way we are again to be subjected to the oppression of our brethren of Eastern Virginia, let me ask them will their paper constitution, or the red lines they draw across the map to define the boundaries of the new State, protect them from the arms of General Beauregard or General Lee? Is there any protection to the measure which is now proposed to us against such an apprehension? Certainly gentlemen will not suppose for a moment that there is. If this is their apprehension, they derive no protection from having marked out the lines of a new State upon the map. But the United States may succeed, as I believe they will. The arms of the United States, I have no doubt, will be successful in this contest. Twenty-one millions of freemen against five or six millions, and a proportional property in favor of the former, infinitely greater than that against it, must succeed in the end, if they are determined and resolute in the contest. Then as they succeed, as the secession pressure is taken off from county after county of the other portions of Virginia, they may unite with this government; and gentlemen suppose that when they do so unite they will join in refusing us a separation of the State. I do not believe it for a moment. As was said by the gentleman from Harrison, (Mr. Carlile) who addressed us today, it is an unnatural connection. "Any one," to use his own strong expression, "with the ideas of a goose" could see that this connection could not be maintained. Can he suppose that the people of Eastern Virginia—the Union men of Eastern Virginia—the men who will be our brethren in this contest, and who, if the United States government succeeds, will outlive the State government—can he suppose for a moment they will deny to their brethren, the Union men in the West, the right to dissever a connection, which, it must be as apparent to them as to us, is entirely unnatural. But if they were disposed to do so, we will have plenty of opportunities to bring up this question, before all of Eastern Virginia is represented in our legislature. The progress of the arms of the United States will be gradual. We will be able to foresee and know the time when all Eastern Virginia can come in, and we can then act, if there is, which I believe there is not, the slightest danger of their over-riding us, in regard to a question of this kind.

Let us suppose, Mr. President, however, that you have established your new State government. The first clause of this ordinance proposed by the gentleman from Harrison (Mr. Carlile,) and which I suppose is to be the doctrine, reads as follows:

"Be it ordained by the people of Virginia, in Convention assembled, That the new State be formed and erected out of the territory included within the following bounds."

Let us suppose that new State formed. As a matter of course, the present government of the State of Virginia is superseded—that government of the State of Virginia, which has been acknowledged by the Executive of the United States, which has been acknowledged by the Congress of the United States, is superseded. The very passage of that ordinance practically will supersede it, because from the time that this Convention announces that another government is to be formed, who will regard or obey the present government? Its prestige throughout the counties over which it has heretofore exercised its authority will be gone.

Then, Mr. President, to carry out the plan of the administration, if the arms of the United States are to succeed in Eastern Virginia, a new State government is to be formed there. As secessionism is put down in district after district of the State, the counties of Eastern Virginia are to be furnished again with a "constitutional nucleus," around which they can rally the support of the Union. Your government—the government of the State of Virginia—the government acknowledged by all the authorities of the United States is out of the way. What sort of a government will be formed in the East? Necessarily a government to represent the State of Virginia. Your new State will yet be unrecognized. Congress will not have acted in reference to it. And the Executive will not have acted in reference to it. And they cannot act in reference to it; for carrying out the great plan in bringing back the State of Virginia into the Union, they must, as expressed in a letter from the Attorney General, read to this Convention, have "a constitutional nucleus, around which the shattered elements of the Union throughout the States can rally." You have here, then, and I take it, it is the necessary result of the action which this Convention is urged to take upon itself—another State government for the State of Virginia organized in the East. As the arms of the United States government may succeed in restoring the Union sentiment, throughout that section of country, this government will extend itself gradually over the whole of the East. It will be the government which the United States will recognize. It will be the government which Congress and the Executive will recognize, and it will be again what we now have—the legal government of the State of Virginia. If that is to be the result—if there is any apprehension that such a state of things will exist—will these men in the East then regard our ordinances? You have superseded your old government, which the United States has recognized, which has become the legal government of the State, and your new government has no such claims. It is nothing in fact—it is nothing in truth—it is nothing in law—until it is recognized by the government of the United States. If they establish their government in the East as they must do, and bring back Eastern Virginia into the Union with that Eastern Government, when it is spread over the East—when it has brought in all those counties lying east of the Blue Ridge, and all the counties of the Valley, what respect will it pay to your ordinances and to such lines as you have marked out for the new State? What respect will they be bound to pay in regard to it? As the State of Virginia, they will have again that very control over you of which, justly, you have so much complained. And when they send their tax gatherers here to gather up your taxes and substance again, if they are resisted by domestic violence, recollect that the Constitution of the United States requires—makes it imperative on the general Government, to protect that government which they have recognized, as the State government of Virginia, against domestic violence. I see, gentlemen, even in the success of the measure—which you here propose to us—quite as much cause for apprehnsion that Eastern Virginia may again extend her influence, her control, her domination over us. That domination which, as ever, I do heartily detest—that she may again extend them over us—quite as much danger as there is in waiting until you can have a full and fair expression of opinion throughout the boundaries which you intend to designate for your new State.

If there were no other considerations, however, supposing that all I have addressed to this Convention were entitled to no weight, certainly it is entitled to some weight that we should not go to work to effect these great changes amid the confusion and danger that surround us. It is a fact, Mr. President, which no one on the opposite side has denied, as asserted by the gentleman from Mason (Mr. Poisley,) who addressed this Convention, that you cannot now, within the boundaries of the State proposed by the substitute of the gentleman from Harrison (Mr. Carlile) have a full and fair expression of one-half of the people. It is a fact that within the boundaries proposed by the report of the majority of the Committee, you cannot now have a fair and full expression of one-fourth of the people upon any subject. Is this not, Mr. President, some reason why we should not hurry inconsiderately, hastily, recklessly, into this subject? Is there not an obvious propriety—if it be possible to secure our object—in waiting, at least, until the matter can be thoroughly submitted and fairly acted upon, by the people in whose name we profess to act? By the people whom we profess to bind by our action here? And, gentlemen, we are not only to include them within the boundaries of our new State, but we are to go to work and fix up a constitution for them. We are to fix up a constitution for the people of Jefferson and Morgan and Berkeley and Hampshire and Hardy, and for the people of Boone and Logan and Nicholas, and I know not how many other counties. Will my friend from Upshur, who has proposed this substitute for our adoption, undertake to carry that Constitution into these counties, before the first Thursday of November next, or the fourth Thursday of October next, and explain its provisions to them, and explain why we took this action or that action—why we adopted this provision or that provision?

The report of the Chairman of the majority Committee proposes to extend the boundaries of the New State to Bull Run. Will the chairman of that Committee undertake to explain to the inhabitants along that Run this constitution which he proposes to adopt for them—to discuss the matter in public meetings there, and secure us a full and fair expression of the people in the county of Fairfax?

MR. WEST—"I think it will be recollected, Sir, that there has already been a vote taken upon the Constitution. I proposed that Constitution myself, that we might have some ground or place of beginning, and I propose that we take a vote upon the adoption of the old Constitution. And the Constitution as it now stands, with some slight amendments, will be the Constitution of the new State. As to the other questions in relation to boundaries, etc., I will explain them perhaps at another time."

MR. LAMB—"When the gentleman proposes to make that explanation, he should also explain another position of his opening argument, which struck me as singularly inappropriate. He stated in his opening argument that they had included the county of Fairfax and the city of Alexandria, within the limits of the new State which the majority of the Committee proposed to form, with a view of thus furnishing protection to the capital of the Union, against the hosts that are now assembled at Bull Run."

MR. WEST—"Does the gentleman ask me to explain that now?"

MR. LAMB—"Mr. President, there has been a good deal of argument of this same kind before this Convention. We have been told—the argument, of course, has been inconsiderately urged—that this thing of establishing a new State was to be a perfect protection to us here against the dangers that surround us. That it would protect us against the arms of the enemy—that it would be equal to an army in the field. Another gentleman who has addressed the Convention would seem to have considered the action of this Convention if they passed his project to be equivalent to the glorious efforts of William Tell for the defense of his country. Why, Sir, did William Tell defend Switzerland by proclaiming that the boundary was here, and giving notice to the Duke of Austria that he must not go across those lines?—No, Sir: Your lives and your property are not to be defended by measures of this kind. Nothing but stout hearts and strong arms will defend them. They are to be defended by the rifle and the bayonet, and the cannon. Your paper Constitution and your paper State will not be worth a single musket in defense.

Mr. President, the new State as proposed in the substitute last offered will have a population of less than three hundred and twenty thousand. It will have a revenue of about $550,000.00. This will be the utmost extent for many years to come, a much larger extent in fact than you will be able to extend your taxation to. Yet the gentleman from Harrison (Mr. Carlile,) who addressed the Convention today, told you, form your new State and you could at once get a loan of $15,000,000.00 without any difficulty. Is it possible that this Convention is to be amused here with assertions of this kind? Why, Sir, your whole revenue will hardly pay the interest on one-half the amount. Deduct the necessary expense of your government, and it would not pay the interest on one-fourth that amount. The whole revenue of your new State will enable you to support in the field an army of about 7,000 men—not a soldier more for the defense of so wide an extended frontier as it will present. Yet, gentlemen, this is the measure into which we are to be precipitated and hurried on without consideration. With the gentleman from Mason, I must say, "reflect; reflect;" before you plunge into such a system; reflect before you abandon the lofty position which you now occupy, in pursuit of this ignus fatuus of which so large promises have been made but of which so little is to be expected. Why, gentlemen, measure the boundaries of your new State as laid down in this document? You propose a frontier of over a thousand miles. Pennsylvania, with a population of 2,800,000, has a frontier of less than a thousand; Ohio with a population of 2,300,000 has a frontier of less than a thousand; yet with a population of under 320,000 and an ability to support in the field an army of only 7,000 men, you have a frontier to defend of a thousand miles. Four hundred miles of that frontier borders upon secession Virginia. How will you defend it? If any defense should be necessary, if this Union is not to be restored how will you defend that frontier? Why, gentlemen, an army of 100,000 men and a revenue of eighty millions will be required to defend the frontier. And yet, you abandon the passes of the mountains. You are not willing to wait until you can secure Pocahontas and Greenbrier. You give up the main passes of the Alleghenies, leaving your frontier, according to the military expression entirely in the air. If the arms of the United States do not succeed in this contest, and if the Confederate States are to be able to maintain themselves, you present to them a frontier, unsupported by natural defenses, of four hundred miles. You will have a State, if you accomplish your object, weak, continually relying on its neighbors for support, for existence itself. You will have a people who must always call upon their neighbors—heretofore nobly have they responded to such calls—for the defense of our fireside, our homes, and our property.

I wish to correct here a mistake into which the gentleman from Harrison (Mr. Lewis,) who addressed the Convention yesterday, fell in regard to the character of the government which has been instituted here. He called it "a provisional government," he seemed to think it was to expire, according to the system which we have adopted, within six months. This, Mr. President, is not the system which we have adopted. It is true, Sir, when this Convention met in June, it was impossible to have throughout the counties of Northwestern Virginia an election for Governor. The Convention, from the dictates of an imperative necessity, were obliged to assume the responsibility of electing a Governor themselves. That far we interfered with the rights of popular sovereignty, but we trusted to our constituents to excuse us for that interference on account of the necessities, the difficulties, the vast embarrassments, with which we were surrounded. They unanimously approved of our course.—

Throughout the whole length and breadth of this land our action in June has been approved of; approved of by the government of the United States; approved of by the loyal men of the loyal States everywhere. We were fully justified, therefore, in doing it. But, Sir, having elected a Governor in this irregular—and except so far as it was justified by the circumstances with which we are surrounded—unjustifiable mode, we prescribed six months for his term of office. Yet, Sir, we went on here to enact as follows:

"The General Assembly to provide by law for the election of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor by the people, as soon as in their judgment such election can be properly held."

The office of Governor under the reorganized government, is not to terminate at the end of six [months], at least according to the ordinance for the reorganization of that government. An express provision is made for its continuance, and for its continuance in a regular manner by election by the people whenever in the opinion of the Legislature such election can be properly held. And I would ask attention for one moment to the expression in this clause. The Convention did not recommend this to the Legislature; they did not request the Legislature to do it; but they are, in the language which is used here, required to do it. Then, Mr. President, look at the provision in regard to members of the Legislature. "They shall hold their offices from the passage of this ordinance until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected." The members of the House of Delegates under this system, hold their offices until 1863, and a portion of the Senators until 1865. When the terms of those officers expire, if this system is to be continued, their successors will be elected in the regular way. In no proper sense of the term, therefore, is this merely a provisional government, for a provisional government, I take it, is a government which fixes in the very charter of its creation a period beyond which it is not to continue. I would wish, also, in connection with this same matter, to correct a singular mistake into which the other gentleman from Harrison (Mr. Carlile,) appeared to have fallen, in the argument which he addressed to the Convention today. He seemed to think that there are members here from a certain portion of the State on their own motion—that they had come here independent of our invitation. He seemed to think that the call for this Convention was addressed to Northwestern Virginia exclusively. I notice these things because it is necessary, it seems to me, in order that the Convention may understand the precise purpose and object of the movement we have instituted. This is all a mistake. The call under which this Convention was elected, was addressed in the following terms:

"Resolved, That in the event of the ordinance being ratified by a vote, on the 23d of this month, (May,) we recommend to the people of the counties here represented, and all others disposed to co-operate with us, to appoint on the fourth day of June next, delegates to a general convention to meet on the 11th of that month, etc."

The call is addressed to all the Union men of the State of Virginia, for that is the meaning, and the only meaning, and that was intended to be the meaning, to my certain knowledge, by the expression, "all others who are disposed to co-operate with us." The gentlemen who have come here from Fairfax and Alexandria, have come here upon our call.

MR. CARLILE—"I was speaking of the first call, not the second."

MR. LAMB—"We have other evidence upon this subject, which will show the intended expression of the measure which we have adopted. In this Convention on the 14th of June, 1861, Mr. Hagans, of Preston, offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"That in consideration of the peculiar circumstances that have surrounded our loyal brethren of Loudon county, as well as their geographical position, this Convention now extend to them a cordial and special invitation to accredit and send to this Convention their regular number of delegates as soon as may be."

At a former date of the Convention, I find that "John S. Carlile, of Harrison, submitted the following resolution, which was adopted:

"That the loyal people of the counties of this Commonwealth that have not yet appointed delegates to this Convention or are not already represented here, be and they are hereby cordially requested to appoint such delegations without avoidable delay."

Such, then, gentlemen, was the system which we had adopted. We adopted a government here, not provisional; we extended our invitation to all the counties of the Commonwealth, to be represented in this government. We did not intend the movement as a movement of Northwestern Virginia alone, but of all the State, according to the objects expressly set forth in the call."

MR. CARLILE—(Interrupting)—"I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman, but I alluded to the call emanating from the county of Harrison."

MR. LAMB—"The gentleman will excuse me, but I do not see how that is possible."

MR. CARLILE—"It is possible in this way. What I had said in reply to the gentleman from Fairfax, (Mr. Hawxhurst,) was brought to the attention of the Convention by the gentleman from Mason (Mr. Polsley,) and in my reply I alluded to the fact that I had drawn up the call myself, referring, as I had done in the first instance, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Fairfax to the original call for the first Convention. Then it was that the gentleman himself called my attention to the fact that this Convention was called by the Convention which met in May, and was not assembled under the call of the original Harrison county Convention."

MR. LAMB—"Did not the gentleman from Harrison tell the member from Fairfax that he was not here upon our call?"

MR. CARLILE—"I so stated, that he was not here upon the original call. The fact is, it is a Convention to-day of Northwestern Virginia."

MR. LAMB—"It is perfectly immaterial, Mr. President. I had no other object in mentioning these things—certainly no intention of saying anything that might be in the slightest degree displeasing to my friend from Harrison."

MR. CARLILE—"It did not displease me at all; not at all."

MR. LAMB—"I had no other object than for the purpose of explaining in such a method that it could not be contradicted, what had been the purpose and object of our movement here—that it was just that very thing that was mentioned in the letter from the Attorney General of the United States—that from the beginning of this movement, at least, from the beginning of this Convention, down to the present time, it has been the object of a majority of the members of this Convention to furnish to the Union men throughout the State of Virginia, that "constitutional nucleus, around which the shattered elements" of Unionism throughout this State could rally. Such was unquestionably our object. The gentleman will recollect that motion after motion was made in the June session of this Convention looking to a division of this State; it was objected to and voted down, because it might interfere with this great object. Yet all this is now to be swept away. The Union men in our portions of Virginia outside of the limits of the proposed State, after the fourth Thursday of October next, are not to be at liberty to unite with us; they will have no longer a nucleus around which they can rally. They will have no State government within this State unless the United States—as I think the United States will be pledged to do—shall encourage the formation of another government for the State of Virginia, after we shall have swept off the present one.

There is one other subject which before I take my seat I wish to touch upon, but very tenderly. It is the subject of slavery in connection with this plan. Your new State, Mr. President, as developed in the substitute last submitted, extending over so large a district of territory will have within its borders according to the census of 1860, 14,800 slaves, only. The slave population of Virginia, is I believe, not quite 500,000. You select precisely that portion of the territory that contains the smallest amount of slaves for the purpose of forming your new State.—And, gentlemen, I have no intention to impute a design of the kind to any member of this Convention, for I do not honestly believe that such a design is ascertained, but I have heard it said, and it will be said with such facts staring us in the face, that this is an abolition movement. According to the census of 1860, the slave population of this new State was 14,800, and what is it now? It is considerably less already. You appear in Congress, then, presenting this plan before them, asking their acknowledgment of the new State—asking their consent to the formation of such a State. You present it to Congress in the midst of troubles and distractions which rest upon this country—for you will not wait for a moment—you inevitably raised the slave question there.—With the facts I have stated, gentlemen, there can be no other result. They will say to you: The slave population within your State is insignificant; come to us as a free State and you shall be admitted. You know that when you present this State before them such facts will raise that question; and do you want to raise such a question as that? Do you want to push such a question upon the councils of the nation, a question of that nature in the midst of the difficulties and troubles which now surround us? I hope you do not.

Mr. President, I have as little personal interest in this matter perhaps as most of you, but I feel the importance of the subject most deeply. I fear if you press this measure upon us as you seem determined to do, that its only result will be woe to you and me and mine. But if the measure carries I certainly shall join heartily, fairly and honestly, in carrying out your determination, my fate will be yours, and I can only hope, that whether weal or woe come of it, I may still be able, in any event, to protect those that are dependent upon me."

MR. FAST followed in an argument of some length in favor of division, and after he had concluded,

MR. FROST moved an adjournment but gave way for Mr. West, who by general consent offered the following resolution:

WHEREAS, In consequence of existing hostilities and the disorganized condition of our once happy and prosperous Commonwealth, it becomes necessary for the Legislature that met in July last, in extra session, to meet again in December next; and

WHEREAS, it is believed by this Convention that rebellion will soon be swept from every part of Virginia; be it therefore

Resolved, That if the Governor of this Commonwealth in his wisdom may think it safe and prudent, and the interest of the State requires it, he shall cause the next annual session of the Legislature to be ordered to meet in the city of Richmond on the first Monday of December next, unless he, in his opinion, shall think the good of the Commonwealth demand the assembling of it at an earlier day.

MR. WEST gave as a reason for offering this resolution, that he wanted to test the sincerity of gentlemen who insisted that they were legislating and should continue to legislate for the whole State.

A motion to adjourn prevailed, and the Convention adjourned without a vote upon the resolution.

ADJOURNED SESSION—ELEVENTH DAY.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1861.

The Convention met at ten, and was opened with prayer by Rev. D. B. DORSEY, member of the Convention from Monongalia.

Minutes read and adopted.

The resolution of the gentleman from Wetzel came up as unfinished business.

MR. WEST said the yeas and nays had been called upon the adoption of that resolution, he believed.

MR. VAN WINKLE had hoped a night's reflection would have induced the gentleman to withdraw the resolution. The gentleman from Harrison had spoken of the poverty of this government yesterday, and such allusions were calculated to bring the government into contempt. This resolution too, he thought must have the same effect. Such playful resolutions in ordinary times could do no harm, but they should not be introduced here at such a time as this.

MR. CATHER hoped the gentleman would withdraw the resolution.

MR. WEST said he never intended to withdraw that resolution.

The order of the day came up.

MR. CARLILE said that the friends of division were willing to offer to the opponents a proposition for something like this:

Adopt the first section of the proposition of the gentleman from Upshur, which simply fixes the boundary lines, and then add an additional section making it the duty of the General Assembly at its next session, if the state of affairs would permit, to provide at an early day, for taking the sense of the people within the boundary.

MR. FROST expressed a willingness to meet the friends of division half way in any fair proposition of compromise. He had desired to speak upon this question, but as the Convention had already been worn down with speeches, he would forego any remarks, if the business could proceed and a vote be taken.

MR. BOREMAN did not know that he understood the proposition. He would like to have a little more time on it, and if it was what he thought it was, it would suit him. He should not say a word to the Convention, but from the fact that no gentleman had yet taken up the substitute offered by himself, and defended it in its various positions. They seemed to have left this for him to do, and he asked indulgence to be allowed to make a few remarks in advocacy of that proposition.

Were they to be selfish in the view they took of this great question? No; he argued that all they did should be done in a spirit of magnanimity, of forbearance, of enlarged and comprehensive patriotism, and not allow that patriotism to be bounded by State lines. Let them recollect that they had a government, around which clustered the most glorious recollections and all their best hopes. They were here to do all they could to transmit this government to their posterity, and should not as good loyal men, look well to this very act, lest they should weaken the cause of their country and strengthen that of their enemies. He would say as Mr. Carlile had, that next to success of the whole country, was the division of Virginia, because it was the interests of his people, the interest of the whole State, and his own personal interest. With respect to the State debt, he did not look upon that question as many gentlemen did. Congress had nothing to do with our State debt. If they presented the question to them there, and Congress saw that the two peoples could not live together in harmony, in justice to both they were bound to sanction the separation, and let the two States settle that question among themselves after the division was made. Congress had nothing to do with it. As for the time of division, he believed no man desired an immediate vote, because they were honestly convinced of the fact that they were not prepared for a vote at this time. The people could not vote. The number of rebel forces within the borders of the proposed State, prevented any meeting and discussion among the people, and must at this time effectually prevent any expression at the polls. And if a vote could not be taken now, when could they take a vote? If they could tell him this, then he would answer the question put to them so often, how long would they propose to wait. He was satisfied they should not fix permanently upon a day at all. Because, as gentlemen have admitted by their own propositions we are now unprepared to take a vote. And then did they know they would be ready on a particular day? He had shown they did not. Then would it be right to fix a day when they had no assurance that the people could vote upon that day. The gentleman from Harrison (Carlile) wanted an expression of the people; and yet would he ask the people to vote upon a day when he knew they could not vote or when it was uncertain at best. Why not provide for this disability and prepare for taking an expression at such time as it might appear hereafter the people could have an opportunity of doing so? The enemy should be driven out first; to offer them an opportunity to vote when they knew they could not would be little better than insult. The same reasons that were valid for postponing a vote were equally valid for postponing the formation of the constitution. Some gentlemen propose to take the old constitution with some slight modifications; why, Sir, nothing could be more obnoxious to the people of Western Virginia than every line of that old constitution. But, Sir, for a Convention of the whole State of Virginia to turn around and claim to be a Convention chosen by a portion of the State, to form a constitution for that proposed new State would be a monstrous proposition. The proposition offered by some of the substitutes, proposing to adopt an ordinance allowing certain counties not now to be included in the boundaries to vote upon the question hereafter, was a recognition of the fact that the people of these counties could not, vote upon the subject. Well now this was just his proposition with reference to nearly all the counties, and if the principle would apply to these counties, would it not apply equally to those? He wanted no expression at all until it could be a full and fair one.

. He proceeded again to denounce the old constitution, and was interrupted in reply by Mr. West. He declared, in resuming, that to get rid of this constitution was one reason for his having long favored a division of the State. But, Sir, if they went into the formation of a constitution for the new State, it was the formaion of a government for it. A constitution was difficult to be changed. People would submit to them even if oppressive, rather than resort to revolution to free themselves from them. They had long done that thing in this State; but they had lived in hope that some day the fetters would be broken and they would be released from a most grinding oppression.

He took up the substitute offered by himself, and after reading it, proceeded to a discussion of its provisions. He had not offered it to kill off any proposition to divide the State or to destroy any measure proposing to take an expression of the people upon the question. It simply proposed to say that it would be premature and would be taking advantage of a portion of their fellow-citizens for the Convention to attempt the formation of a constitution now, and expressed a desire that the General Assembly, provided in their opinion the people could at that time vote, appoint an election on the first Thursday in January, to obtain an expression as to whether the new State could be formed or not.

As to boundaries, if the people would vote for it in those portions of the State, he would like to take all the territory proposed by the ordinance reported by the Committee; but he did not want to take in counties that might aid in voting down a new State altogether. He should not strenuously object to the fixing of boundaries now, but he believed it would be better to let that matter rest until the meeting of the Legislature, when they might be able to obtain more territory than it would be thought now advisable to take in.

In reply to the question, how does precipitate action embarrass the General Government, it would for one thing introduce the slavery question into Congress. If introduced there, and the Constitution should be rejected, it would be said they refused it because it was a Republican Congress, and it was a slavery Constitution; and it would foment such an excitement in Western Virginia as was never before witnessed.

MR. LEWIS inquired whether that same difficulty would not have to be met, even if the application were not made till peace was restored.

MR. BOREMAN said it would not then be so embarrassing because the government would not have so many and such great difficulties upon its shoulders, and it would then be a very different question. Just at this time it was a very unpropitious moment. If we now undertake to strike a line here as proposed would it not go forth that we were trying to aid the South, that this Wheeling government had abandoned its position and were preparing for a dissolution of this Union. Besides this movement then loses all its prestige in the other States. This is an auxiliary movement to aid the Government of the United States, and what must be the effect in Tennessee and Alabama, and all over the country? They would say we had acted hypocritically, covering up the selfish design of building up a State for ourselves. It would be used by the secessionists everywhere to embarrass the Government and strengthen their own position, and would destroy the moral force and prestige of all we have done here. This proposition left all this responsibility of action upon the Legislature.

Suppose they did divide the State, which was the old State and which the new State? Reorganize a new government here and what becomes of the old one? It revolutionizes this part, it drives out the old government. He would leave the question for gentlemen to answer it for themselves. This might be the grand reason why all secessionists were in favor of a division; because it would prevent the loyal people of the other seceded States from following our example in reorganizing the whole State government. It would demoralize the whole movement.

The gentleman from Upshur had said some members were opposed to the whole movement for a division. He had not heard any members so express themselves; but he had heard them all say just the contrary. For himself, he was acting in good faith, and whenever the conditions would allow a vote to be taken he would go for a proposition for a separation of the State; and he intended to go home and support whatever decision this Convention might arrive at, let that be what it might.

MR. CATHER followed, and in reply to what had been said about precipitate action said that none of them were for the taking of the vote at once. His own proposition was for the fourth Thursday of November. But he would vote for any measure looking to a division of the State. He would favor some measure that would compromise their differences.

MR. JOHNSON believed that this question ought not [to] have been introduced here. This was not the proper body to take this question of a division into consideration. He took substantially the same grounds occupied by Mr. Boreman. He alluded to what had been said about the possibility of the success of the Southern Confederacy, and said that the establishment of a boundary at this time between the loyal and rebellious portions of the State would be the drawing of the first line between the Northern and Southern Confederacies. He made the point that inasmuch as the Constitution of the United States guarantees to every State a Republican form of government, Congress could not admit a State which in its creation destroyed the only republican form of government there was in the State. He charged that the thing of taken advantage of the East, which many gentlemen proposed, would be dishonorable. Besides it was a revolutionary measure because it could not be carried out according to the spirit of the Constitution.

MR. DORSEY moved the previous question.

MR. LEWIS suggested after the question was put that a recess be taken.

MR. HARRISON called for the yeas and nays on the main question.

MR. WEST hoped the House would vote down the motion.

The vote was taken and the main question ordered to be put.

The main question was upon the substitute of the gentleman from Tyler, Mr. Boreman.

MR. FROST moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, which he afterwards withdrew.

MR. STUART moved a reconsideration and the President decided it out of order.

MR. STUART appealed from the decision of the Chair—and on that Mr. Van Winkle called for the yeas and nays.

MR. WEST moved to lay the appeal upon the table, and upon that Mr. Frost called the yeas and nays.

The time fixed for adjournment having arrived, the Convention adjourned without a vote.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at half-past two [o'clock.]

The President said the question when they took a recess was on laying the appeal on the table, but as the occasion for it had passed it had been withdrawn.

The yeas and nays upon the substitute of Mr. Boreman having been called were taken and resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atkinson, Boreman of Tyler, Barns, Bowyer, Burley, Broski, Barrack, Crothers, Crawford, Close, Caldwell, Carskadon, Copley, Flesher, Gist, Graham, Harrison, Hubbard, Hall, Hawxhurst, Johnson, Koontz, Logan, Lamb, Mason, Montague, Nicholls, Polsley, Price, Ritchie, Smith of Marion, Slack, Stuart, Tarr, Trout, Van Winkle, Withers, Wetzel, Watson, President (Boreman of Wood)—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Berkshire, Brown, Burdett, Brumfield, Cather, Carlile, Crane of Preston, Crane of Randolph, Dorsey, Downey, Davis, Evans, Ferrell, Farnsworth, Foley, Fast, Fleming, Hale, Hooton, Howard, Jackson, Kramer, Lewis, Love, Martin of Wetzel, Myers, Michael, Paxton, Parsons, Smith, Scott, Snider, Smith (J. L.), Swan, Taft, Vance, West, Williamson of Pleasants, Wilson, Zinn—42.

The question recurring upon the substitute of Mr. Carlile for that of Mr. Farnsworth, he proposed as an additional section the following, prepared by Mr. Lamb, at the end of the same:

"The government of the State, as reorganized by the ordinance for the re-organization of the State government, shall retain the powers and authority undiminished and unimpaired until the proposed State shall be admitted into the Union by the Congress of the United States."

MR. FARNSWORTH accepted the substitute with this addition, in lieu of his own proposition.

MR. CARLILE took occasion to make some remarks urging the adoption of the proposition, and appealing to them all, whatever the result might be, to go away from here resolved to act in unity and use their best efforts to carry out the objects of the Convention and unite their people in their support.

After MR. CARLILE had finished his remarks,

MR. HALE moved the previous question.

MR. LAMB said if they were thus to be met with the previous question on all occasions he hoped the gentlemen who had acted with him upon this question would leave the Convention and let gentlemen upon the other side raise a quorum the best way they could.

MR. HALE subsequently withdrew the demand.

MR. NICHOLLS offered the following as a substitute for the second section of Mr. Carlile's substitute:

Sec. 2. Be it further ordained, That the General Assembly shall provide for taking a vote within the boundaries aforesaid on the first Thursday of January next, if the state of affairs will admit of a full and free expression of the popular sentiment within four of the counties above named, and if not then, as soon thereafter as possible, on the question of the formation of a new State, and also for the election of members of a Convention for the purpose of forming a Constitution for the proposed State, in which Convention each county and election district shall have the same number of representatives to which it will be entitled at the next succeeding session of the House of Delegates.

MR. NICHOLLS followed in a very forcible speech of some length, in opposition to a division of the State, and was followed by

MR. SHIDER, who replied to Mr. Nicholls and others, who had preceded him. He favored immediately having an expression of the people, and made some very spicy remarks in reply to what had been said about his hint at a counter revolution among the people in case no action was taken.

MR. FROST succeeded, upon the same side of the question as Mr. Nicholls. He concluded by declaring that whatever should be the action of the Convention, he would give it his entire and hearty support, and he hoped all would do the same.

After some further remarks by MESSRS. NICHOLLS, CATHER and BARNS.

MR. MARTIN of Wetzel called for the previous question. The demand was sustained.

The previous question upon the amendment of Mr. Nicholls, was ordered.

The main question upon the amendment of Mr. Nicholls, was then taken by yeas and nays and resulted, 34 nays, yeas 42.

MR. POLSLEY offered the following as an amendment:

"That five commissioners from as many different counties be appointed by this Convention who shall meet in Parkersburg on the first Monday of ————————, and appoint a day for the holding of said election if in the opinion of a majority of them, a free and fair election can be holden in four-fifths of the counties within the boundaries of the State to be fixed."

MR. POLSLEY spoke briefly in advocacy of his amendment and was followed by Mr. Burdett in a very spicy little speeech in favor of a division of the State and in opposition to the amendment. In the course of his remarks in alluding to the objection made that the slavery question must be dragged into this controversy in forming a constitution, he said that although he was as good a pro-slavery man as any one in the State, he would see the whole institution abolished before his country and its government should be destroyed. He loved his country more than he loved the institution.

MR. FARNSWORTH called for the previous question, which being sustained, the question upon the adoption of Mr. Polsley's amendment was taken and lost by yeas 31, nays 45.

MR. STUART proposed to strike out the boundaries proposed in the substitute, and insert the boundaries proposed in the report of the Committee.

MR. FARNSWORTH rose to call the previous question. This was only another dodge to kill the bill.

MR. STUART appealed to the House for a few moments to speak upon his amendment.

The call for the previous question was sustained, and upon the question, Shall the main question be put? Mr. Stuart called for the yeas and nays, which being taken, the call was lost, by yeas 32, nays 42.

MR. CROTHERS moved an adjournment.

MR. CARLILE arose to say a few words by general consent, for the benefit of his friend from Ohio and others.

THE PRESIDENT said it could only be by general consent.

Several members objected.

MR. CARLILE said he must say it, and amid great confusion and cries of order, he proceeded to say that if this course was to be pursued by the opponents of compromise after the offer he had made to meet them upon a compromise, he would now take it all back, and if they would and must have war, they could have it.

Some member said "and war it shall be!" another said "We will meet you."

MR. FROST arose and said he too would take back all he had said of a willingness to meet the advocates of a division upon compromise grounds.

MR. CROTHERS withdrew his motion, and

MR. STUART proceeded to make a speech upon boundary; after which the yeas and nays, having been demanded upon the question of adopting Mr. Stuart's amendment, were taken and resulted yeas 38, nays 37.

So the amendment was adopted, being decided by Mr. Atkinson changing his vote.

The question recurred upon the substitute as amended, and Mr. West proceeded to address the Convention on a variety of subjects, but chiefly in relation to boundary.

MR. CARLILE said he had stated repeatedly that he should yield a willing acquiescence to whatever might be the conclusion of the Convention. He regarded the adoption of this amendment as equivalent to an indication that the Convention had determined not to adopt any measure that would result in the division of the State, or that the voice of the people within what should be the legitimate State, should at this time be heard. They all knew that territory was thus included which must vote down a proposition for separation, and he presumed it was so intended. He was now willing to accept this as an expression of the Convention and as such he would acquiesce in it. Amended as it now was he must vote against the substitute which he himself had offered, still hoping that at some future day they should be able to accomplish the much-desired end now, as he was willing to regard it here defeated.

MR. TARR, with a hope that a little time and reflection would tend to produce a better feeling among members, moved to adjourn.

MR. FARNSWORTH said they now had no further business here, and he moved to adjourn sine die.

Several members cried out, "Yes, let's adjourn and go home." "We have no more business here." &c.

THE PRESIDENT decided the motion out of order—the motion to adjourn taking precedence.

This motion was put, and the Convention adjourned with much disorder.

ADJOURNED SESSION—TWELFTH DAY.

MONDAY, AUGUST 19, 1861.

The Convention met and was called to order at half-past 9 o'clock A. M.

Prayer by Rev. Gideon Martin of the M. E. Church.

Minutes of Saturday read and approved.

THE PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Governor, tendering his resignation as a member of the Convention.

MR. LEWIS followed in some remarks upon the form of the government here, and suggested that the executive and legislative department of the government ought to be entirely separated, and that it should be brought back to its original representative character. The Richmond Convention had placed the supreme power in the executive, and he thought that in re-constructing this government they ought to remedy the evils brought upon us by that Convention. We should be careful of patterning after them in destroying the representative character of our government and investing too much of the authority in the hands of an executive. He favored the acceptance of the resignation.

MR. LEWIS went on at some length to explain the card to which allusion had been made in debate here. He reviewed circumstances which induced him to write it, and defined what he meant by a divided allegiance, to be strictly in accordance with the Constitution of the United States and of the State. He took the position he did at the time, because he understood the movement then being inauguarted here as a counter revolution, and not what it has since proved itself, the reorganizing of the government of the whole State; and because he thought it possessed a disintegration of the State at a time when he thought it would have been unwise. "If that card was mistaken in the doctrines it announced, if it was imprudent in its inception, and ill-judged in the time of its being put forth; it, as was remarked by the gentleman from Ohio, threw impediments in the way of those who are engaged in this great movement. I will from this day make use of all my powers, intellectual, moral and physical, to undo what was wrongfully done in the righting of that card."

The resignation of Mr. Pierpont was accepted.

The order of the day came up being upon the substitute as amended by Mr. Stuart.

MR. HOOTON proceeded to address the Convention. He believed upon the harmonious settlement of this vexed question here depended the welfare of this government. Since Saturday they had all had time to reflect, and he came here this morning holding out an olive branch to gentlemen who advocated the opposite of this question. For this purpose he submitted the proposition that this whole matter be referred to a committee to consist of six members, three from each side, with the express understanding that the committee report tomorrow morning. He moved that the whole matter be thus referred.

MR. FARNSWORTH asked the gentleman to withdraw his motion for a time.

MR. HOOTON declined to do so, as he was aware that there were, at least, half a dozen propositions to be offered. He could not consistently do so.

MR. FARHSWORTH said his object was to present a modification of his proposition, which he believed would give general satisfaction. If this should fail he would then favor the proposition.

MR. HOOTON said the gentleman could present his modified proposition to the committee for their consideration.

MR. BOREMAN said he was willing to meet gentlemen on the other side half way, and he thought every proposition had much better be referred to the committee.

MR. DORSEY moved to amend the motion by inserting as the committee, the names of Messrs. Carlile, Lamb, Kramer, Carskadon, Jackson and Boreman of Tyler.

MR. TARR moved to amend by making the committee consist of ten, and thought they should be selected from every side of the house.

MR. VAN WINKLE remarked that in the Convention of 1850, when the Compromise Committee was appointed to consider the question of the white basis, they were appointed by ballot, each member voting for half the committee. He did not make the motion to select them in this way, but merely made the suggestion.

MR. WEST expressed a hope that the proposition of the gentleman from Preston would prevail.

MR. DORSEY withdrew his motion.

MR. POLSLEY rose merely, as he said, for the purpose of expressing his cordial approbation of the proposition of the gentleman from Preston.

MR. TARR withdrew his amendment to the motion of Mr. Dorsey.

MR. LAMB suggested that each side of the house upon the question to be determined should select its half of the Committee.

MR. HOOTON accepted the suggestion.

MR. HOOTON'S proposition as thus amended was adopted unanimously.

MR. LAMB, from the Committee on Credentials, reported that E. B. Hall, of Marion, was entitled to a seat in the Convention, to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. Pierpont.

The report was adopted and Mr. Hall sworn in.

MR. FROST presented an ordinance to provide for holding a special term of the County Court of Jackson county, to commence on the fourth Thursday of August, 1861, which ordinance was passed.

MR. VAN WINKLE by general consent, offered the Committee on Business an ordinance providing for the collection of the public revenue in certain cases, which was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

The Convention then took a recess until the regular hour, to afford opportunity to elect a Compromise Committee.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convention met at half-past two. [o'clock.]

MR. FROST said the members of both sides respectfully elected the following gentlemen as the Committee on Compromise: Messrs. Farnsworth, Carlile, Paxton, Van Winkle, Ruffner and Lamb.

MR. VAN WINKLE said he was instructed by that Committee to recommend to the Convention an adjournment until tomorrow morning, in order that all propositions connected with the subject which are pending or may be offered, be referred to that Committee, and that they have liberty to print their report before submitting it to the Convention, if they can agree in time. "In that case the matter will be ready for your action at the opening of the morning session, and will hardly be got ready before. In reference to the other business that is pending here I mentioned it to the Committee, and they said they would like to be present when it is acted upon; and upon the whole, considering the state of anxiety in the minds of the members upon this subject, it was thought if we would dispose of this in the morning, the other business could be taken up and disposed of in perhaps a half hour or an hour.

"I therefore move that all propositions and any proposition that may be offered in reference to a division of the State, be referred to the Select Committee on that subject, and that they have leave to print such report as they may agree to by tomorrow morning."

MR. LEWIS—"In accordance with the suggestion just made, I move that the Convention now adjourn."

MR. FROST asked the gentleman to withdraw his motion a moment to allow him to make a personal explanation, which he proceeded to do as follows:

"The impression seems to have gone abroad, Sir, that on last Saturday, after making the statement I did, that I had paired off with Mr. Todd, of Taylor county. I voted upon the amendment of the member from Doddridge. I distinctly stated then that I believed under the arrangement I had made with Mr. Todd, I had the right after the proposition of Mr. Boreman was voted down, to vote upon any subsequent proposition, but I declined doing it, lest it might be misinterpreted. I voted upon one proposition alone, and that was upon a motion to put the main question. I voted against that in order to allow the member from Doddridge an opportunity to speak upon his proposition. This impression seems to have gone abroad outside of the hall from the report of members who seemed to have misunderstood the vote I gave. I make this statement in order that reporters may make some minute of it to show why I declined voting. I was in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Doddridge, and should have voted in favor of it, but for the reason assigned I did not vote upon it."

MR. LEWIS then renewed his motion and the Convention adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—THIRTEENTH DAY,

THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 1861.

Convention met and was called to order at half-past nine A. M.

Prayer by Rev. Gordon Battelle.

Minutes read and approved.

MR. FARNSWORTH—"As Chairman of the Committee, Sir, whose duty it was by special appointment to try, if possible, to compromise upon some measure to be adopted by this Convention, we are ready this morning to report, and, we would say to this Convention, that the labors of that Committee were arduous. We met in the spirit of harmony and union; we met for the purpose of meeting, if possible, upon some general compromise ground that would suit this entire Convention and suit the people. And I am happy this morning to say to this Convention that we have agreed upon a plan to be submitted this morning; and we have not only agreed, but unanimously agreed. Every member of the Committee, and I believe, with heart and hand, has agreed to it. And we take great pleasure this morning in submitting the result of the labors of that Committee, hoping that this Convention may properly appreciate the report we make.

The following is the report:

AN ORDINANCE TO PROVIDE FOR THE FORMATION OF A NEW STATE OUT OF A PORTION OF THE TERRITORY OF THIS STATE.

WHEREAS, It is represented to be the desire of the people inhabiting the counties hereinafter mentioned to be separated from this Commonwealth, and to be erected into a separate and independent State, and admitted into the Union of States, and become a member of the Government of the United States:

SEC. 1. The people of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain that a new State to be called the State of KANAWHA, be formed and erected out of the territory included within the following described boundary: Beginning on the Tug Fork of [Big] Sandy river on the Kentucky line where the counties of Buchanan and Logan join the same, and running thence with the dividing line of said counties, and the dividing line of the counties of Wyoming and McDowell to the Mercer county line, and with the dividing line of the counties of Mercer and Wyoming to the Raleigh county line, and thence with the dividing line of the counties of Raleigh and Mercer, Monroe and Raleigh, Greenbrier and Raleigh, Fayette and Greenbrier, Nicholas and Greenbrier, Webster, Greenbrier and Pocahontas, Randolph and Pocahontas, Randolph and Pendleton, to the south-west corner of Hardy county, thence with the dividing line of the counties of Hardy and Tucker to the Fairfax Stone, thence with the line dividing the State of Maryland and Virginia to the Pennsylvania line, thence with the line dividing the States of Pennsylvania and Virginia to the Ohio River, thence down said river, and including the same, to the dividing line between Virginia and Kentucky, and with the said line to the beginning; including within the boundaries of the proposed new State the counties of Logan, Wyoming, Raleigh, Fayette, Nicholas, Webster, Randolph, Tucker, Preston, Monongalia, Marion, Taylor, Barbour, Upshur, Harrison, Lewis, Braxton, Clay, Kanawha, Boone, Wayne, Cabell, Putnam, Mason, Jackson, Roane, Calhoun, Wirt, Gilmer, Ritchie, Wood, Pleasants, Tyler, Doddridge, Wetzel, Marshall, Ohio, Brooke and Hancock.

SEC. 2. All persons qualified to vote within the boundaries aforesaid, and who shall present themselves at the several places of voting within their respective counties, on the fourth Thursday in October next, shall be allowed to vote on the question of the formation of a new State as hereinbefore proposed; and it shall be the duty of the Commissioners conducting the election at the said several places of voting at the same time, to cause polls to be taken for the election of Delegates to a Convention to form a Constitution for the government of the proposed State.

SEC. 3. The Convention hereinbefore provided for may change the boundaries described in the first section of this Ordinance, so as to include within the proposed State the counties of Greenbrier and Pocahontas or either of them, and also the counties of Hampshire, Hardy, Morgan, Berkeley and Jefferson, or either of them, and also such other counties as lie contiguous to the said boundaries, or to the counties named in this section; if the said counties to be added, or either of them by a majority of the votes given, shall declare their wish to form part of the proposed State, and shall elect Delegates to the said Convention, at elections to be held at the time and in the manner herein provided for.

SEC. 4. Poll Books shall be prepared under the direction of the Governor, for each place of voting in the several counties hereinbefore mentioned, with two separate columns, one to be headed "For the New State," the other, "Against the New State."

And it shall be the duty of the Commissioners who superintended, and the officers who conducted the election in May last, or such other persons as the Governor may appoint, to attend at their respective places of holding elections, and superintend and conduct the election herein provided for. And if the said Commissioners and officers shall fail to attend at any such place of holding elections, it shall be lawful for any two freeholders present to act as Commissioners in superintending said election. It shall be the duty of such persons superintending and conducting said election, to employ clerks to record the votes, and to endorse on the respective poll books the expenses of the same.

If on the day herein provided for holding such election, there shall be in any of the said counties, any military force or any hostile assemblage of persons, so as to interfere with a full and free expression of the will of the voters, they may assemble at any other place within their county, and hold an election as herein provided for. It shall be the duty of such Commissioners superintending, and officers conducting said election, and the clerks employed to record the votes, each before entering upon the duties of his respective office, to take, in addition to the oath now required by the general election law, the oath of office prescribed by this Convention. It shall be the duty of the officers and commissioners aforesaid, as soon as may be, and not exceeding three days after said election, to aggregate each of the columns of said poll books, and ascertain the number of votes recorded in each, and make a return thereof to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, in the City of Wheeling, which return shall be in the following form, or to the following effect:

We, ..., Commissioners, and ....., conducting officers, do certify that we caused an election to be held at ..... in the county of ..... at which we permitted all persons to vote that were entitled to do so under existing laws, and that offered to vote, and that we have carefully added up each column of our poll books, and find the following result: For a new State, ...votes; Against a new State, ... votes. Given under our hands, this ..... day of..... 1861.

Under which certificate there shall be added the following affidavit:

.....County, to-wit:

I. ..... a Justice of the Peace, (or any officer now authorized by law to administer oaths, in and for said county, do certify that the above-named commissioners and conducting officers, severally made oath before me that the certificate by them above signed, is true. Given under my hand this.....day of ..... 1861.

.....J. P.

The original poll books shall be carefully kept by the conducting officers for ninety days after the day of the election, and upon the demand of the Executive shall be delivered to such person as he may authorize to demand and receive them.

SEC. 5. The commissioners conducting the said election in each of said counties shall ascertain, at the same time they ascertain the vote upon the formation of a new State, who has been elected from their county to the Convention hereinbefore provided for, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Commonwealth the name or names of the persons elected to the said Convention.

SEC. 6. It shall be the duty of the Governor on or before the fifteenth day of November next, to ascertain and by proclamation make known the result of the said vote, and if the majority of the votes given within the boundaries mentioned in the first section of this ordinance shall be in favor of the formation of a new State, he shall so state in his said proclamation, and shall call upon said delegates to meet in the city of Wheeling on the 26th day of November next, and organize themselves into a Convention, and said Convention shall submit for ratification or rejection the Constitution that may be agreed upon by it, to the qualified voters within the proposed State, to be voted upon by the said voters on the fourh Thursday in December next.

SEC. 7. The county of Ohio shall elect three delegates; the counties of Harrison, Kanawha, Marion, Marshall, Monongalia, Preston and Wood shall each elect two; and the other counties named in the first section of this Ordinance shall each elect one delegate to the said Convention. And such other counties as are described in the third section of this Ordinance shall, for every seven thousand of their population, according to the census of 1860, be entitled to one delegate, and to an additional delegate for any fraction over thirty-five hundred; but each of said counties shall be entitled to one delegate.

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Governor to lay before the General Assembly, at its next meeting, for their consent, according to the Constitution of the United States, the result of the said vote, if it shall be found that a majority of the votes cast be in favor of a new State, and also in favor of the Constitution proposed to said voters for their adoption.

SEC. 9. Said new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all State expenditures within the limits thereof, and just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government, since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the monies paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State within the same period. All private rights and interests in lands within the proposed State, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of Virginia.

The lands within the proposed State, of non-resident proprietors, shall not in any case be taxed higher than the lands of residents therein. No grants of lands, or land warrants issued by the proposed State, shall interfere with any warrant issued from the Land Office of Virginia, prior to the 17th day of April last, which shall be located on lands within the proposed State, now liable thereto.

SEC. 10. When the General Assembly shall give its consent to the formation of such new State, it shall forward to the Congress of the United States such consent, together with an official copy of such Constitution, with the request that the said new State may be admitted into the Union of States.

SEC. 11. The Government of the State of Virginia, as re-organized by this Convention at its session in June last, shall retain, within the territory of the proposed State, undiminished and unimpaired, all the powers and authority with which it has been vested, until the proposed State shall be admitted into the Union by the Congress of the United States; and nothing in this ordinance contained, or which shall be done in pursuance thereof, shall impair or affect the authority of the said re-organized State government in any county which shall not be included in the proposed State.

MR. VAN WINKLE—"The questions involved here are those of boundary and of time. We had conceded to the gentlemen on the other side an opportunity of bringing this matter before the Legislature at its next session, in consideration, partly, at least, of the fact that if the next legislature holds only its regular session it will not meet until two years after December next. It however will be seen, leaves discretion enough in the Legislature to act upon this matter, and if as we have feared the state of the country should be such that this vote cannot be taken in any considerable number of the counties, why, of course, the thing would fail for the present.

Again, Sir, what we think, to some extent, has been conceded to us is that another Convention shall be called for the purpose of making a Constitution for the new State. There were serious objections to going on with the old constitution and organizing a government under its provisions, and in a few months have to make another Constitution. The Constitution of the new State will therefore be submitted to the people before the application comes before the Legislature.

In reference to the boundary, I can only refer gentlemen to the bill. There have been so many different and conflicting views in reference to that subject that it is hard to say which side has yielded and which has not. And while my views were very strong in the beginning of this matter to endeavor to include the valley, I have somewhat changed in regard to them. One ground of that change is that it would be perhaps taking too much from the old State. Another is that the Valley itself would not consent, or at least no other parts than those for which provision is made in this ordinance. I will only say in conclusion that the ordinance is made up of the different propositions offered here, and is, I believe, really the result of a sincere desire on the part of the Committee to do something that would meet the approbation of the Convention and the people generally.

The dangers that we feared from too early action will perhaps be obviated by the provisions of this ordinance, and I think if this belief is general, that there can be no objection to passing it as it is. If there are any counties in which from the occupation of hostile troops, elections cannot be held, the matter cannot be acted on by the Legislature. At any rate there is discretion left to the Legislature to act properly in this matter, and if we go on to Congress with our application in that way, and if there is any irregularity it is not likely we will obtain their consent. It will, therefore, behoove gentlemen who are favoring this movement most strongly to wait until they have the consent of these counties embraced in this boundary, to insure the assent of Congress. We think that the great concession made on our side is in conceding early action, to refuse which would, perhaps, be fatal to the whole thing. It was to decide between this and the danger of postponing the whole matter, by permitting the friends of a division to risk action now."

MR. CRANE moved to amend by adding at the end of the 88th line in the 7th section the words "the said delegates shall receive the same per diem as that which is now allowed to the members of the General Asembly."

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. POLSLEY obtained the floor, and proceeded to give expression to his reasons for opposing the adoption of the report of the Committee. His real objection was that the Convention had no power to act on this subject; that "although we are de jure—we are in fact the rightful government of the whole state of Virginia, according to the principles of American Government and according to the principles recognized by the government of the United States, yet" he contended that "we are not de facto the government of the whole of the State of Virginia." For this reason he could not feel that they had any right to adopt measures for a separation of the State.

MR. MARTIN, of Wetzel, moved the previous question.

Several members asked him to withdraw it.

MR. MARTIN consented to withdraw it, but he did not think the subject needed any further elucidation; it was already exhausted, and he did not think any new light could be thrown upon the subject.

MR. LAMB addressed the Convention briefly, in favor of the report of the Committee. He had consented to it somewhat reluctantly, but he would remind his friends that, by the Constitution of the United States, no action of the people of Virginia can effect anything without the consent of the Legislature, towards the formation of a new State, and that consent must be free and untrammelled. This was one security against a division. Another was, that another Convention was to be held to prepare and submit a constitution to our people of the new State. If that Convention should find the state of things would not allow the subject to be fairly and freely acted upon, they certainly would postpone the matter until such an expression could be had. He thought they had at least a reasonable security that no action would be had unless an actual and fair expression of popular sentiment should be previously had.

MR. TARR proposed to amend the Ordinance in the 20th line, of the first section, by inserting the counties of Hampshire, Hardy, Morgan, Berkeley, and Jefferson.

MR. STUART moved to add, as an amendment, the counties of Pendleton and Highland, and made some remarks in favor of his motion, going to show how strong was the Union sentiment in those counties.

MR. BURDETT retorted by saying that some idea could be formed by the strength of the Union sentiment there by the fact that the first rebel troops that invaded Northwestern Virginia were from Highland county. They had been quartered in his own town (Pruntytown) and in his own house. Among them was one Captain Hull who in the Richmond Convention was a Union man and who finally yielded and perhaps signed the Ordinance of Secession.

MR. STUART inquired if there was not a company of secession troops in the gentleman's own county (Taylor) before these troops came over from Highland.

MR. BURDETT replied, that might be true, but he had alluded to that fact to show how strong was the Union sentiment in Highland. He supposed the gentleman had, perhaps, some relatives over there and he believed it would be cheaper for him to go over to them than to try to bring the country to us.

MR. DOWNEY obtained the floor for the purpose of vindicating the Union element of Hampshire county. He went on at length to advocate the amendment of Mr. Tarr taking in that and other counties.

MR. HOOTON demanded the previous question.

The question was put upon the amendment of Mr. Stuart, and the amendment lost.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. Tarr.

MR. BURLEY hoped gentlemen would concede them this one amendment.

The question on the adoption was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted, yeas 35, nays 27.

So the amendment was adopted.

MR. CARLILE took the floor, and said that by the action just taken, he was satisfied it had destroyed the ordinance reported by the Committee, and this being the case, he should not object to any other amendments. He proceeded to speak in opposition to including the counties named in the amendment. A provision was incorporated into the ordinance by which they could come into the new State, if they desired it; if they did not desire to come in, no power to be exercised here could bring them in. One object was to get rid of the secession forces. He believed that Eastern Virginia was willing to let Northwestern Virginia go and form a separate State, but would they be willing to let these counties go, containing some 8,000 slaves, and which were within their natural boundaries, without a fierce struggle to maintain them. Besides we had no assurance that these counties wanted to come with us at all. They were, some of them, largely secession, and would have to be coerced, if brought in at all. The provision of the ordinance would afford them an opportunity to come in, if they desired, and if they did not want to, we certainly did not want them.

As to wanting these counties because the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad ran through them he would just say that in times of peace we had free and unmolested use of that road, and in times of war it could not be used anyhow. So that argument had no force whatever.

MR. CALDWELL interrupted Mr. Carlile and moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

MR. NICHOLLS followed in a very eloquent appeal to members not now to again throw an element of discord into the Convention. They all knew he had opposed immediate action as much as any of them, but they had appointed their committee to adopt measures that might harmonize them, and should not captiously oppose what that committee had proposed to them. Let them not now again distract the Convention and ruin everything. He hoped they would adopt the report and let them go home united, and enter upon the field of duty to which their country now called them, the defence of their homes and firesides. For one he was willing to act with all who were ready to aid in saving their country in this hour of its extremity.

MR. TARR proposed to amend his amendment by leaving out the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson.

MR. HALL, of Marion, obtained the floor and occupied some time in vindicating the Union sentiment of Richmond and Eastern Virginia. He was in favor of taking in the counties included in the amendment of Mr. Tarr, and hoped that gentleman would let them all stand, and not be satisfied with half a loaf. He was opposed to being in a hurry. Let them consider this measure calmly and not hasten things too much toward a division of the State.

MR. VAN WINKLE made some further remarks in explanation of the report of the Committee. If these counties were to be left out they could vote themselves in if they chose to, but if a county should so vote with another intervening between it and the new State, of course they could not come in. But if the counties named in the amendment, or any others, were included in the boundaries they must come in whether willing or not. The leaving out of these counties and others, and then making the provision by which they might come in if they wished was the very essence of the compromise they had effected.

MR. CARLILE demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion of Mr. Caldwell to reconsider, which being taken resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Berkshire, Brown, Burdett, Brumfield, Burley, Cather, Crawford, Carlile, Crane of Preston, Crane of Randolph, Caldwell, Davidson, Douglas, Davis, Evans, Ferrell, Farnsworth, Fleming, Gist, Graham, Hale, Hagans, Hooton, Howard, Jackson, Kramer, Lamb, Lewis, Love, Martin of Wetzel, Myers, Mason, Nicholls, Smith of Pleasants, Scott (J. L.) Swan, Taft, Vance, Van Winkle, West, Williamson of Pleasants, Wilson and Zinn—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkinson, Boreman, Barns, Bowyer, Broski, Close, Carskadon, Copley, Downey, Foley, Fast, Harrison, Hall of Marion, Johnson, Koontz, Montague, Michael, Polsley, Ritchie, Smith of Marion, Stuart, Tarr, Trout, Withers, Wetzel, Watson, and Mr. President (Boreman of Wood)—27.

So the vote adopting the amendment was reconsidered. The time of a recess having arrived the Convention took a recess, MR. STUART having the floor.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

MR. STUART took the floor, and addressed the Convention upon the question which recurred upon the adoption of the amendment of Mr. Tarr. He thought the report of the Committee was the worst proposition that had yet been offered, and yet some gentlemen here thought it was above criticism. He was opposed to this bill much more than the bill proposed by Mr. Farnsworth, originally. He believed the concession had all been one way. He must give Mr. Carlile credit for having managed this thing admirably. After he had concluded

MR. MARTIN of Wetzel called for the previous question.

The main question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Tarr to add the counties of Hardy, Hampshire, Morgan, Berkeley, and Jefferson, and being taken by yeas and nays resulted, yeas 31, nays 48.

So the motion to so amend was lost.

MR. BURLEY said he would propose as a compromise, that the counties of Hardy, Hampshire, and Morgan, should be included within the boundaries of the new State. The question upon the amendment was taken and decided in the negative.

MR. CARLILE said the Convention had now spent about two weeks discussing this question, and he thought it was about time for them to come to some conclusion. They had all made their speeches over about ten times—he had he knew—and he hoped this thing was to come to an end.

He was followed by MR. SMITH, of Marion, who urged in opposition to the adoption of the report of the Committee, that this proposition would bring up prominently the consideration of the slavery question, which must result most disastrously; that such was the state of things in many counties that a fair election could not be held. He argued that this Ordinance would override the Ordinance for the organization of the State government in its provision that the Legislature should order an election for executive officers so as to end their term of office at the end of six months, and thus would perpetuate the present executive of this State government until the new State shall be admitted into the Union.

He moved to strike out, in the 24th line, all after the word "proposed," down to the 33d line.

He was replied to by MR. CARLILE, who said that Mr. Smith and his friends had all along during the session of the Legislature and in the early part of this Convention, favored and insisted on a Convention to form a constitution, and now that that Convention was provided for in this proposition the gentleman had turned against his own pet scheme.

The question was taken upon Mr. Smith's amendment, and it was rejected.

MR. STUART proposed to amend the 1st section by striking out "Kanawha" and inserting "West Virginia," as the name of the new State.

MR. HALL, of Marion, asked for a division of the question.

The motion to strike out "Kanawha" was put and rejected.

MR. WEST said he wished to define his position. He said they had in a manner entirely fair and impartial gone into the selection of the Committee that had reported this morning, and while he did not pretend to say that any other members felt bound, for himself he did feel bound in good faith to carry out the objects of the Committee.

MR. CRANE, of Randolph, proposed as an amendment to the end of the 7th section, as amended by himself this morning, to add these words: "But no person shall receive pay as a member of the General Assembly and of the Convention at the same time."

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. SMITH, of Marion, moved to amend the eleventh section by adding at the end of it the words: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall annul the power of the Legislature to call an election to fill the vacancy of Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, and Attorney, and provided for by an ordinance entitled, 'An Ordinance for the re-organization of the State Government.'"

MR. LAMB said if he could see the least necessity in the world for it, he would vote for the amendment cheerfully, but he could not see such necessity.

MR. SMITH said he saw a necessity for it; because these ordinances would come in conflict. The question might arise in the next Legislature, whether we have that power or not, and by having that proviso here, it sets aside the question forever.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. POLSLEY proposed the following amendment: "Strike out the first sentence of the 7th section, and insert:

That each of said counties shall be entitled to one delegate; and each county having a white population of 7,000 inhabitants, two delegates; each county having a like population of 13,000 shall have three delegates; and Ohio county shall have four delegates.

MR. POLSLEY spoke in favor of his amendment and was replied to by Mr. Lamb.

MR. HOOTON called for the previous question.

The question was put and the amendment rejected.

MR. LEWIS now demanded the previous question on the main question.

The main question was ordered, it being upon the adoption of the ordinance reported by the Select Committee, and having been taken by yeas and nays, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Berkshire, Brown, Burdett, Brumfield, Cather, Crawford, Carlile, Crane of Randolph, Crane of Preston, Caldwell, Copley, Davidson, Douglas, Downey, Davis, Evans, Ferrell, Farnsworth, Foley, Fast, Fleming, Hale, Hagans, Hooton, Howard, Jackson, Kramer, Lamb, Lewis, Love, Martin of Wetzel, Myers, Price, Paxton, Parsons, Ruffner, Slack, Smith of Marion, Smith of Pleasants, Smith of Upshur, Swan, Scott, Taft, Vance, Withers, Williamson of Pleasants, Wilson and Zinn—48.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkinson, Boreman of Tyler, Barns, Bowyer, Burley, Broski, Crothers, Close, Carskadon, Gist, Graham, Harrison, Hubbard, Hall of Marion, Hawxhurst, Johnson, Koontz, Mason, Montague, Polsley, Ritchie, Stuart, Tarr, Trout, Wetzel, Watson, and Mr. President (Boreman of Wood)—27.

Several members were paired off.

Remainder of members absent.

So the Ordinance as reported by the Committee and amended by the Convention, was adopted.

MR. HARRISON in casting his vote obtained leave to read an address to the Convention, setting forth his reason for the vote he cast.

MR. SMITH, of Marion, in casting his vote said:

"The bill as presented to the House is, in my opinion, evidently defective. But I have ever been disposed to give the people an opportunity to vote on the subject. I think the people abroad require at our hands that some steps should be taken towards a division of the State, and I have struggled throughout this Convention with a view of getting it before the people in the most unexceptionable shape I possibly could. I regard this as the most objectionable shape in which any proposition has been presented to the House, yet so anxious am I that the people shall have a vote on the subject that I shall vote yea. I do so not because I subscribe to the modus operandi, but because I subscribe to the sentiment it has embodied in it, viz: that the people shall exercise their inalienable right of suffrage at the polls."

MR. CALDWELL also made an explanation of his vote, but the reporter not attending at the time did not catch it.

MR. LAMB offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourn tomorrow, it shall stand adjourned until called together by the President of this Convention or the Governor; and if not so convened on or before the first Thursday of January next it shall then stand adjourned sine die.

MR. SMITH, of Marion, moved to amend by striking out after "tomorrow" and insert "it adjourn sine die." He thought there could be no necessity for recalling this Convention.

MR. LAMB said it was possible there might arise an emergency that would justify the assembling of this Convention, and it would at any rate do no harm to leave that power in the hands of the Governor and President of the Convention.

MR. HUBBARD suggested the 26th of November next instead of the first Thursday of January, lest, according to the provisions of the ordinance, there might be two conventions in session at the same time.

MR. LAMB reminded him that the Convention to be called together under the operation of the ordinance would have no power to meet any such emergency as was contemplated. It would be a Convention called for a special purpose, the formation of a Constitution.

MR. SMITH could not see that there ever would be any need of summoning this Convention together again, but at the suggestion of friends he would withdraw the motion.

MR. STUART moved to strike out that part authorizing the President to call them together. He preferred to leave it to the Governor alone.

MR. LAMB replied that the Governor might die, or the secessionists might carry him off. They had better have two strings to their bow.

MR. VAN WINKLE said that in the event of the death of the Governor there would be nobody to call the convention together, and should any emergency arise at such a time this government must go all to pieces.

The amendment was rejected and the resolution adopted.

MR. NICHOLLS presented the following:

Resolved, That the doorkeepers of this Convention be allowed three dollars per day for their services, instead of the sum now fixed.

The resolution was adopted.

MR. VAN WINKLE said he had some resolutions to offer, and while he had no doubt they contained the sentiments of every member of the Convention yet he thought possibly it might be best, or at least well, to put something on the record. They refer, he said, to the necessity, the obligation, which rests upon every member here when he goes back among his constituents, to enforce upon them the importance of aiding and of maintaining, in every way possible, the civil power of this government, and also of aiding and co-operating in the raising of State volunteers in our home defence. The armies of the enemy having left our country, we may think there is no more necessity for this. Even if their return were not probable, we ought to be prepared to put down any domestic violence that might arise ourselves, inasmuch as the Government may, thinking there is no longer any necessity of keeping its troops amongst us, withdraw them for some other field of action.

Every one must be sensible that, unless the civil arm is strengthened in every way it can be, and unless all domestic broils and violence can be kept down until peace returns, our business and other interests must remain in their present prostrate condition.

The following are the resolutions as they were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this Convention most earnestly urge upon their loyal fellow-citzens the importance of extending to the re-organized government a cordial recognition, and that support in its efforts to establish the civil authority and to cause the laws to be administered and executed, and maintain peace and good order throughout its jurisdiction.

Resolved, That this Convention further urge upon their loyal fellow-citizens the importance of encouraging by their countenance, active co-operation in the enrollment and drilling of, at least, one company of State volunteers in every county for the purpose of suppressing rebellion and insurrection, and aiding the civil authorities in the enforcement of the laws.

MR. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Business, reported an ordinance to provide for the election of representatives in the Congress of the United States; also an ordinance to increase the compensation of the Adjutant-General, during the continuance of hostilities in the Commonwealth.

He moved to take up the following ordinance, which was accordingly put upon its passage and adopted:

AN ORDINANCE ASCERTAINING AND DECLARING IN WHAT CASES OFFICES ARE VACATED UNDER THE DECLARATION OF JUNE 17, 1861.

The people of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention, at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. Every incumbent of an office held under authority of the commonwealth, or of any county, city or town thereof, who, on and before the 17th day of June last was in rebellion against the government of the United States, or who by any overt act, or by writing or speaking, supported and upheld, or attempted to support or uphold, the usurped government at Richmond, or the pretended government of the Confederate States, and who has not before the passage of this Ordinance, taken and subscribed the oath of office prescribed by the Ordinance of this Convention, entitled "An Ordinance for the Re-organization of the State Government," shall be deemed and taken to have vacated his office; and it shall be the duty of the Governor, upon satisfactory evidence thereof, to proceed to fill such vacancy; or cause the same to be filled, in the mode prescribed by the fifth section of the above cited Ordinance.

2. This Ordinance shall be in force from its passage.

He then moved to proceed to the consideration of the following, which was also taken up and passed:

AN ORDINANCE, PROVIDING FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF COLLECTORS OF THE PUBLIC REVENUE IN CERTAIN CASES.

The people of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. If in any County there shall be no Sheriff or Collector of the Public Revenues authorized to act under existing laws and the Ordinances of this Convention, and the County Court of such County cannot be convened, or being convened, shall fail or refuse to appoint and qualify a Collector of the State and County Levies, and other public dues, within the said County, it shall be the duty of the Auditor of Public Accounts, with the approbation of the Governor, to appoint a Collector of the Public Revenues for said County, requiring him to take such oaths and with proper and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Governor and Auditor, to execute such bonds as are required from Collectors appointed by the County Courts under the said laws and ordinances. The said bonds shall be filed with the Auditor of Public Accounts, who shall transmit certified copies thereof to the Clerk of the County Court of such County, which copies shall be received as evidence in all the Courts of the Commonwealth.

2. This Ordinance shall be in force from its passage, and may be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

He then called up the following just laid upon the table and it was taken up and also passed:

AN ORDINANCE TO PROVIDE FOR THE ELECTION OF REPRESENTATIVES IN THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The People of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. In every Congressional District of the State where from any cause an election for Representative in the Congress of the United States was not held on the fourth Thursday of May last, and in the Eleventh District, where a vacancy now exists, an election shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October next, which shall be conducted, and the result ascertained, declared and certified in the manner directed in the 2d section of the 2d edition of the Code of Virginia.

2. If in consequence of the occupation of any county by any army or forces in hostility with, or rebellion against the government of the United States, such election cannot be, or is not, held in such county, any person entitled to vote therein may vote in any other county of his district; and if no election shall be held at the time appointed in the 1st section of this ordinance in any Congressional District therein mentioned, the Governor on receiving satisfactory evidence thereof, may by proclamation or writ appoint another day for holding such election therein.

3. This ordinance shall be in force from its passage.

On motion of MR. CARLILE, the following ordinance was taken up from the table and adopted:

AN ORDINANCE INCREASING THE COMPENSATION OF THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL DURING THE CONTINUANCE OF HOSTILITIES IN THE COMMONWEALTH.

The People of Virginia, by their Delegates assembled in Convention at Wheeling, do ordain as follows:

1. During the continuance of hostilities within the Commonwealth, the Adjutant-General, in addition to the salary now allowed by law, shall be entitled to receive the sum of $700.00 per annum.

2. This ordinance shall be in force from its passage, and may be altered or repealed by the General Assembly.

On motion, a committee, consisting of Messrs. Van Winkle, Boreman and Lamb, were selected to revise the ordinances of the Convention.

MR. CALDWELL presented an ordinance relating to grand and petit jurors and attorneys-at-law, requiring them to answer certain questions before entering upon the duties of their offices, which, after some consideration, was indefinitely postponed.

MR. KRAMER offered the following, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the ordinance providing for the formation of a new State, be published for circulation within the counties of the proposed new State and counties lying contiguous thereto.

MR. BURDETT moved that when this Convention adjourn, it adjourn to meet tomorrow at 4 P. M.

The motion was agreed to, and on motion the Convention adjourned.

ADJOURNED SESSION—LAST DAY,

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21, 1861.

The Convention met at four o'clock P. M.

Minutes read and approved.

MR. BOREMAN, of Tyler, offered the following which was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to wait upon the Governor, and inquire whether he has any communication to make to the Convention before its adjournment.

Messrs. Boreman, Smith of Marion, and Withers, were appointed said committee.

MR. NEWMAN, of Wirt, who had been absent, obtained general consent to vote upon the ordinance creating a new State. He voted nay.

MR. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee of Revision, made their report, which was adopted.

MR. WEST moved to take up the resolution offered some days ago by himself, providing for the next meeting of the next Legislature in Richmond.

MR. CROTHERS suggested that it would not be exactly proper for citizens of Kanawha to meet in Richmond.

A vote was taken and the Convention refused to take up the resolution.

MR. BARNS offered the following resolution of thanks, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention are due and are hereby tendered to the President of this body for the able and impartial manner in which he has discharged the duties of his position.

MR. EVANS offered the following, which was also adopted:

Resolved, That this Convention take pleasure in acknowledging the satisfactory manner in which the Clerk and other officers of the Convention have discharged their respective duties.

MR. WEST offered the following which was also adopted:

Resolved That the thanks of this Convention are due and are hereby tendered to the reverend Clergy who have opened our daily sessions with prayer.

After some time had elapsed in waiting for the return of the Committee,

MR. CARLILE said he believed they had got about through their labors.

A member said the Committee had not returned.

MR. CARLILE—"Well, Sir, we cannot wait here all night on the Committee. I have always found that when we have nothing to do, we are sure to do something we ought not to do. "Idleness is the parent of Vice," is a copy I used to write when a boy at school. I therefore move that this Convention do now adjourn."

MR. WEST—"It would certainly be a very unusual proceeding after having appointed a committee to wait upon the Governor, to adjourn before that committee returned."

THE PRESIDENT reminded the gentlemen that a motion to adjourn could not be discussed.

MR. CARLILE—"I submitted it for that purpose, Sir. I knew we would have to be discussing something while waiting here, and I thought this about as innocent a motion as we could discuss." (Laughter.)

The Committee at this juncture returned.

MR. CATHER offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this body are due to the Reporters of the Proceedings of this Convention.

The Committee reported that the Governor would shortly communicate to the Convention in person.

The Governor appeared in a few minutes and addressed the Convention in executive session.

After the Governor had finished his communication,

MR. WEST moved that the Convention now adjourn.

The motion was put, and the Convention adjourned without day.

THE PRESIDENT (Arthur I. Boreman, of Wood) said:

"Gentlemen of the Convention: I desire in parting with you, to say a few words to you, and but a few. I return you my thanks for the complimentary terms in which you have chosen to speak in the resolution you have adopted. We have been assembled in Convention, at the last session and this, about one month; and during that time we have had delicate and responsible duties to perform. It gives me pleasure to say that you have performed those duties fairly, honestly and fearlessly.

At the earlier session, as is well known, you reorganized the government of Virginia, a step which, in my estimation, is fraught with great and grave interests—a step which I trust and believe you will never regret. I feel proud in saying that so far as my information has extended, that step meets with the cordial approbation of the loyal and patriotic citizens throughout the Commonwealth. They hail it as the best, and, probably, the only hope they have of deliverance from usurpation and despotism. It is for the present, in my estimation, our only salvation. I have assurances from the members of this Convention—I believe from all of them —that they will not desert this government; that they will not abate one jot from their hitherto laudable efforts to assist this government in putting in execution its laws under its authority.

You have passed many ordinances for the purpose of carrying out the objects of your assembling, amongst them one has lately been adopted by you probably more important than any other. You have taken the initiative in the creation and organization of a new State. This is a step of vital importance. I hope, and I pray God it may be successful; that it may not engender strife in our midst, nor bring upon us difficulties from abroad, but that its most ardent advocates may realize their fondest hopes of its complete success. So far as I am personally concerned, I am content with the action of this Convention; I bow with submission to what you have done upon this subject.

Gentlemen, your labors have not been light; they have been arduous. You have not shrunk from the discharge of your duty, however. I feel that your constituents ought to be proud of their representatives, as I am sure that you are proud of a noble, generous and confiding constituency.

Now, gentlemen, permit me to congratulate you upon the harmony, the kind feeling which has characterized all your deliberations during both the sessions of this Convention. If at any time, through a laudable zeal, the members have been led into any manifestation of feeling or excitement, it passed with the moment, and only served to increase their ardor, their zeal and their cordiality in co-operating in the measures adopted by you.

I now hope that each and every one of you may be permitted to go to your homes and that you may find your homes, your firesides, your families, soon restored to their wonted peace and tranquillity and happiness.

I now, gentlemen, bid you adieu, and in accordance with the resolution which was passed on yesterday, I pronounce this Convention adjourned."

APPENDIX[1]

SPEECHES OF JOHN S. CARLILE AND CHAPMAN J. STUART ON A DIVISION OF THE STATE, DELIVERED IN THE SECOND CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA, AT WHEELING, VIRGINIA, AUGUST 8, 1861—THIRD DAY OF THE ADJOURNED SESSION.

Mr. Carlile said:

"Mr. President:—This Convention will at least accord to me sincerity of purpose and honesty of motive in advocating the adoption of these resolutions at this time. The Legislature, to whom I am greatly indebted, have conferred upon me a position worthy the ambition of any man. I am secure in that position at least for four years to come if things continue here as they are. None but the body of which I am a member can deprive me of my place, except action such as I propose. If the Convention shall adopt the resolutions, and a separate State shall be formed, the instant it is formed I cease to be a member of the Senate, and the representatives of the new State will select my successor—Therefore there can be no ambitions personal or pecuniary influences operating on my mind when I seek to obtain the object contemplated by the resolutions; but, Sir, it has been the cherished object of my life; and I would be worse than ungrateful if I could at an hour like this, forget a people who have been engaged ever since my residence among them in showering upon me all the honors within their gift.

There are considerations weighing upon my mind, Mr. President, which induce me to believe that the time has arrived now when we shall act. If we were at peace; if our people were not engaged in a struggle to obtain the government of our fathers, the natural barriers that separate the people inhabiting the region of country embraced in the resolutions make it, in my opinion, to their interest that they should no longer continue a connection which has been nothing but prejudicial to them ever since it began. The channels of trade, business and commercial relations of the counties named in the resolutions I have offered have been everywhere else than with the rest and residue of the State in which we live. All the feelings that operate upon men—the kindest feelings of my nature—the love I have for home, the scenes of my childhood, the place of my nativity, have all struggled with my sense of duty in this matter. Sir, if we act as I propose, I shall be separated by line, an imaginary line it is true, but yet a State line, from the county of my nativity and the home of my birth. But the counties I have designated have no facilities, either of land or water, for any commercial or business intercourse with the rest of the State. We must seek an outlet for our products elsewhere. We must look for our markets in Maryland, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Kentucky. We never can—nature has fixed it and made it impossible— we never can have business relations with the rest of the State. The Southwestern part has its railroads, turnpikes, and canals penetrating through its valleys and mountains and leading to the capital of the State. The centre of the valley, the county of Frederick, my native county, has its public improvements reaching to Alexandria and Richmond, affording to them an outlet. Hence they are not interested as we are, as are the counties mentioned, in commercial relations with other States, and they are not compelled by force of circumstances which cannot be overcome, as we are, to seek a market for their produce and a channel for their industrial interests in other and neighboring States. Therefore, as a mere material question in time of peace, it is the interest of the people inhabiting these counties to separate themselves from the rest of the State, and organize a separate State Government of their own.

But then, Sir, there are other considerations now. We have entered upon a war such as heaven and earth never saw before, and such as I trust in God never will be witnessed again. What is to be its end nobody knows; no man can tell. And what, when peace shall at last come, with a tired and oppressed people, ground down by taxation and oppression, legitimate and natural consequences of war—what consideration would they bestow, the 28,000,000 of people, when coming upon terms and ratifying and concluding a peace, upon the 308,000 people who inhabit the counties set forth in the resolution? How long would they let that people stand in the way of a settlement at the termination of this war? It is a question I throw out as a suggestion to be revolved by gentlemen in their minds when they rest upon their pillows. God grant that a separation of these States never may take place! I hope it never may; and as it depends on my action, it never shall. — But, Sir, I am but a grain of sand on the sea shore; and you are but a grain of sand, and we are all but grains of sand on the shore of our country's destiny. It is a duty we owe to the people who have confided all their interests to guard and protect them against every possible contingency; and while I admit with you that it is improbable that this war shall ever be terminated in any other way than by maintaining the integrity of the Union, and the supremacy of its laws, yet you must admit with me that there is a possibility of its terminating in some other mode. I, therefore, feel it incumbent upon me as one of the representatives of a people who have ably sustained me upon any and all occasions to guard them against a possibility of injury. Looking at that possibility—and it is a possibility—where, in case of a settlement, if we remain inactive, would we go? Where would we be? Then if we act and that possibility does not take place, we are where you and I and our people wish us to be—disconnected from the rest of the State, the connection being an unnatural one, in contravention to the laws of nature. Ever since you and I have known anything of the workings of the connection it has been prejudicial and to our injury, under any circumstances, in any point of view, in which I have asked you to look at this question. My opinions, formed years ago, in a time of profound peace, have been strengthened by every day's experience. It will be remembered by the members of this Convention that in our last meeting in June, while I was then behind some of my friends in this movement, and while I was pointed at as having abandoned what I had uttered before, in the former Convention, as the matured convictions of my mind, I pledged gentlemen that if they would wait until their purpose really could be accomplished, that then we had no recognition, no Legislature known to the Federal authorities as such, that then we had no Legislature that could give us the assent provided for and required by the Constitution to be given to a separation—but that the moment we had a Legislature, recognized as such, speaking in the name of the State, whose assent should go to the Congress of the United States and be respected as the assent of a constitutional Legislature, then I promised you, gentlemen, I would go with you at the earliest possible moment for this division. I am here to redeem that pledge today.

It is argued, Mr. President, by some, that action of this kind will not be taken in favor by the Federal Government; that it may embarrass it in its present operations. Will any gentleman tell me how? If it is regarded with disfavor by the Congress of the United States, the war-making power, the power that must supply the means to carry on this war, the power that must be used to assert the supremacy of the laws and maintain the integrity of the Union, they will refuse our admission into the Union, deny their consent; and there is an end of it, and we are no worse off for having made the effort.

It is said by some that we ought to aid the government in extending a loyal government over the rest and residue of the State. Does this interfere with us at all? Does this interefere with this Provisional Government we have inaugurated here, the government of the State of Virginia, as fast as the arms of the Union sweep secession before them, and when the Congress of the United States admits us as a new State? Surely not; surely not? On the contrary it will have a most happy effect on the Federal Government, by showing to them the importance of extending their military operations in other parts of the Commonwealth, whenever they are in a condition to do it. But is there a gentleman here that for one moment supposes that if the armies of the United States, have not swept secession out of the State and relieved the loyal citizens of the state by December next, will they ever do it? How long, gentlemen, do you propose to remain as you are? How long is the Government to be employed in relieving from the evils of secession, and the destruction that rebellion upon the country, the people of this one State? If it takes a longer period than the meeting of next Congress in December to sweep rebellion out of our State, how long will it take to sweep it out of all the rebellious States? Sir, when is this war to end? We happen to know that the only hope of East Tennessee as to relieving her people, is in their organizing a separate and independent State government for the loyal portion of that Commonwealth. And we do happen to know that the government does regard with favor the effort that is to be made there as soon as the advancing columns of the Federal Army shall march into that region of country and enable its loyal citizens to perform the deed.

But, Sir, it is said that our boundaries are not sufficiently large. I avoided, intentionally avoided, in drawing up those resolutions, including within the limits of this new State a single county which I do not believe, by a large majority of its people, would desire to be a part and parcel of it, except two. There are two counties named above which I have the slightest doubt as to the sentiments of their people, and they are so situated that it is absolutely essential that they shall belong to us; and a necessity for their belonging to us justifies their being included within our limits. Their interests, like ours, are identified with those of other States and the State of Virginia. The great thoroughfare between this and the Atlantic passes through them, and we never can, we never ought, it would be unjust to them and to us, to allow that territory to be included within the limits of any other State.

Then it is said we have friends from Fairfax and Alexandria who would like to go with us. One of the resolutions secures you the way. If Alexandria and Loudon desire, let their people speak, and an ordinance of this Convention will provide for their admission. But, Sir, there is a bill now introduced into the Senate of the United States, and for which I intended to vote unless otherwise instructed by the gentlemen who have honored me with a place there, declaring the law ceding Alexandria county to the State of Virginia unconstitutional and a nullity, and providing for its return to the District of Columbia. This is but in compliance with my own views, expressed on the floor of the Senate of Virginia some years ago, when the question of admission of a delegate in the House was determined favorably under the retrocession of Alexandria county. I introduced resolutions into the Senate then which would have excluded him, and denying the constitutionality of the act; but it was the first winter of my legislative experience, and I was prevailed upon to let the go-by be given to them. I have no doubt, and have always believed that this District was selected by the Father of his Country with a view to placing the capital beyond the reach of any ordinary military assault; and the possession of Alexandria county is necessary today to put Washington in a state of proper military defense. I think the instant the territory was ceded by Maryland and Virginia, all the powers they had they conferred upon Congress, under the Constitution to exercise exclusive legislative jurisdiction to legislate for the people within the prescribed limit.

Thus it seems to me, that the initiation of proceedings now by this Convention, none of them being of binding effect,—none of them affecting at all our political status,—none of them affecting in the slightest degree, our relation either to the State or Union, until they have been assented to by the Legislature, which does not meet until December, and until our admission into the Union by Congress, which does not convene until December—none of them affecting at all our relations either to the rest of the State or of our own State, as a people,—I cannot for the life of me, see how the voice of the people, which comes up to us in tones not to be misunderstood, dare be disregarded by members of this body; and why any effort should be made to procrastinate and delay action in the face of the circumstances that surround us, where by possibility procrastination may be death. No man is authorized to say what the Government of the United States will do, or will not do. We have nothing to do with any part of that Government save the legislative department of it, when to Congress, and to Congress alone, it committed by the Constitution the right to determine whether we shall be admitted or not. I care not what other departments of the Government, or what officials of the Government, may think of this question.

But, then, we have been compelled to ask that the forces of the Government be sent on here to protect us, and they might take them away. Sir, how can they desert us, how dare they desert us, when the instant they desert us they desert the Union? Virginia is to be the battle field. This is to be the battle ground. Here is where the question of supremacy of the laws is to be decided. Sweep out Unionism from this portion of Virginia, and secession has nothing to do but to march from the southwest corner of the State into East Tennessee, inaugurate rebellion in Kentucky, and the Southern Confederacy is a fixed fact. Then the Administration dare not desert us in this hour; and we are powerless in our present condition to aid the Administration. Where would we have been had it not been for the United States military force that was sent into our midst? So impressed was I and the rest of the members of the Central Committee, that there must be no delay, and the opinion that longer delay would find us in the power of the secessionists, that they started me on the 23d of May, to urge these facts upon the attention of the Administration. On the next day after I arrived at Washington, the telegraph bore the order to General McClellan to move. They cannot desert us, whatever their opinions may be. They cannot leave us at this hour, so bondsmen of the field sold to those who have engaged in this effort to destroy our republican institutions. There is no just or well-founded apprehension of this that any member of this body can reasonably entertain.

But there is another objection. It is said that the Legislature at its late session refused its assent to a separation. According to the Constitution, Sir, I think they had no right, or at least there was no necessity for their giving their assent at this time. The assent of Congress to the admission of a State into the Union is never given until after the application has been made. I say never, as a general rule.—When a Territory seeks admission into the Union as a new State, it seeks it after it has assembled its Convention, framed a Constitution and elected officers under it. Then it presents its application, accompanied by its Constitution to the Congress of the United States, and then Congress acts on the application. No previous assent is necessary. Call to mind the action of the Senate of the United States upon the proposition urged with so much ability and zeal by the late lamented Senator from Illinois (Mr. Douglas) in relation to the Kansas question. He desired to introduce a rule that should operate on all future Territories asking admission into the Union, that the consent should not be had after the organization of the Territory into a State by the adoption of a Constitution and the election of officers, but that Congress should, prior to any action taken by their people, pass what he was pleased to call an "enabling act." But, Sir, the project fell still-born from the author. It has never been the practice of this Government before then or since, to act on the application of a State for admission, until the people of the proposed new State acted themselves, and transmitted to Congress with their application their Constitution. Why? Because one of the requirements of the Constitution is that the State to be admitted into the Union must have a republican form of government. And how could Congress give its consent to the admission of a State without having before it the Constitution of the State to enable the members to judge of the form of government proposed for the new State—to see whether it is such a Constitution and form of government as the Constitution requires and demands it to be?

Thus the consent of Congress must come afterwards. There is, Sir, the same propriety that the assent of the Legislature should come after the act of the people.—The Legislature giving its assent to the organization of a government to be thereafter formed! The Legislature giving its assent to the separation of a people, from the State in which they have heretofore lived, before an official sense of that people has come up to them desiring a separation! There was an obvious propriety, in my humble opinion in the Legislature refusing at its last session this assent.—While I, if I had been a member of the body, might have voted for it, for the purpose of hurrying this thing on, and while it might have been repealed at its very next session, after the vote of the people had been taken upon the Constitution, and might have been held for naught, yet I say, entertaining the convictions that I do that three-fourths of the people within this boundary desire a new State. I might have been the foremost of those who desired the Legislature to give its assent. But it would not have been worth that (a snap of the finger:) liable to be repealed, taken back, at the very next meeting of the Legislature, and probably upon the formation of a form of government and of a return of the sense of the people, circumstances could have shown an obvious propriety in withholding the assent.

What is the language of the Constitution on this subject? Will my friend from Marion find in this Constitution the language I desire to quote?

MR. SMITH—With pleasure.

MR. CARLILE—Then, Sir, there is another consideration. In times like these, when all the energies of the people are taxed for the great purpose of aiding the Government in its effort to crush rebellion we should harass our people as little as possible, with expenses to be incured any way. Now, Sir, by the ordinances of this Convention, passed during its session in June, organized this government, every officer is limited in his term to six months, or until his successor shall be elected and qualified. There will, therefore, have to be within or near the period of time when we propose to call the people from their homes and ascertain their sense on this question, an election of some sort or other.

But here is the clause of the Constitution in reference to the formation of new States;

"New States may be admitted by Congress into this Union, but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, or any such State formed by the junction of two States or parts of States without the consent of the Legislatures of the States, as well as of the Congress."

Is there anything in that provision to limit the action of the Convention in taking the initiatory steps to organize a separate State government, as to time or the manner in which it is to be done? Surely not. Ascertain the sense of the people in your proposed boundaries, lay before them the form of government you expect to extend over them, and with this before them, let them say whether they desire it or not; and if they do, their servants in the Legislature can give their consent.

Sir, you will remember that this Legislature, if recognized at all, is recognized as the Legislature, possessing all the powers that the Legislature of any State can exercise. That thing is fully, clearly decided by the Supreme Court in a case reported in Curtis' report, familiarly known as the case of Luther vs. Borden. The decision says that the admission of representatives in Congress upon the floor of the Senate binds every other department of the Government, settles the question as to what is and who is the government of the State. This is the language of it. The question is settled. If you are the Legislature, if you do represent the State, and are recognized as such by the admission of Senators in Congress, then your legislative capacity can never be questioned again by any department of the Federal Government.

Now, Mr. President, there is a just expectation in the country on the part of the people we represent here, that this action will be no longer delayed. They are looking for it, waiting for it, expecting and demanding it. And I cannot for the life of me—it may be owing to my obtuseness of intellect that I cannot understand the mystery and pierce the clouds that are around and about me—but I cannot see any reason why you should refuse to those you represent:—your masters, my masters, the legitimate sovereigns, the people,—the right, in a form prescribed by you, to declare their wishes and will upon this subject. Why, Sir, should it be withheld? What is driving from our borders many of our people within its limit? And what is preventing thousands upon thousands of others from coming amongst us? What is wanted to develop the immense deposits of mineral wealth that fill our hills and with which our valleys teem? A separate and independent existence—a position that nature has designed us to occupy. I said here last Spring that in five years, aye, Sir, I will say now that three years will not roll around until our population will be quadrupled, and there will be more people in the limits of the proposed boundary of the new State than there is in the whole State of Virginia today. Our neighbors in Ohio and Pennsylvania and our friends in many other States of the Union are all looking and anxious for it. I have lately received hundreds of letters making inquiry in regard to a separation. Everywhere loyal hearts are beating to come and share with us the destiny we ought to provide for ourselves and which nature has designed for us, if we have but the manliness and are equal to lift ourselves to the circumstances that surround us.

For centuries under the incubus of a false political philosophy, we have remained here, digging, almost in a primitive state, from the bowels of the earth the necessary means of support, while nature has filled us to overflowing with all the elements of wealth, seeking nothing in the world but the hand of industry to develop them and bring them into active use. Borne down by an eastern governmental majority, cut off from all connection or sympathy with a people with whom we have no commercial ties, we have endured the disastrous results that ever must flow from an unnatural connection. Cut the knot now! Cut it now! Apply the knife! You are compelled to wait at best for a realization of your hopes some four or five months, and by that time the advancing columns of the nation's army will have moved rebellion far beyond your borders, or they will have been stayed forever in their march." (Loud applause.)

SPEECH OF JUDGE CHAPMAN J. STUART.

"Mr. President:—I do not propose to discuss the merits of this question. I am sorry it is pressed upon the consideration of this body at this time. A bill on this subject will be reported at an early day by the Special Committee on a Division of the State and the question will then come up in due form. And, Sir, I do not want to see the hand of the Committee tied at this time by resolutions like these. I desire this Committee to be free to discuss the measures proposed in these resolutions without having any embarrassment to contend with, or without having its hands tied by any proposition of this character.

It strikes me, Sir, that the best way to dispose of these resolutions would be to lay them on the table. Let this Committee report. I presume it will report advisedly when it does, having a member from each county represented on this floor. They are preparing a report; let us have it.

I would like very much, if I had not determined in the outset that I would not go into the merits of this question, to pay my respects to my friend from Harrison. I have been following him, Sir, for a long time. He has assumed many positions. I wish to indicate to the Convention that I will make a motion to lay on the table before I leave the floor. I am not prepared at this time to discuss the merits of this question. I did not anticipate it would be forced upon this body at this time. I supposed no one member would seek to tie the hands of this Committee by instruction, when the indication has been thrown out that a bill for dividing the State is about to be reported.

But I have been following the gentleman for a long time. I have been a member with him in several Conventions and have supported him often, but I must be permitted to say here that if the gentleman in former Conventions had intimated the same things he has in this, he would have found one minus, at least, at a certain time. I have heard him often before, but never did I hear him hold out a single doubt as to the ability of this Government to sustain itself and put down this rebellion.—This is the first intimation of this kind. And now at a time when we should all be united, for our old stand-by and champion to come forward and intimate a doubt on this question—

MR. CARLILE—"Mr. President, if the gentleman from Doddridge had attended to what I said with the same interest I listened to what he said, he would not have represented me as he has done. I said to-day what I have always said heretofore, that I believe this Government would maintain the integrity of the Union; that I believe it would put down this rebellion; but I said, what he and all must know, if I had never said it, that there are things that take place sometimes that have not been anticipated in minds as feeble as mine; and I said there was a possibility—that the thing is possible—that the Government may not do what we believe they will, I give it as my belief, and it is worth no more than the belief of any one else, that they will put down rebellion; but it is possible I may be mistaken. That was all I said; in other words, I granted it was possible that I might be mistaken."

Mr. Stuart.—"I fully understood the gentleman, Mr. President, and it is the first time that I ever heard him assert the possibility of anything of the kind. He has been the most uncompromising for putting down this rebellion, and never yet had a possible doubt on the question.—Read his speeches, and you will never see a doubt expressed in the mind of the gentleman. Certain members of the Convention now present, know that the position occupied by the gentleman now, is one formerly presented before a certain body by myself—that there was always doubt —that there might be a possibility, you know; but that doubt was expressed by me before any reverse in our arms had taken place, or was even anticipated. But at this stage of things, no man will ever find me expressing a doubt. It is not a time to do so. It is a time to lift ourselves above all personal feelings and motives, and look only at the great issue involved before our country. We should not be looking solely at Western Virginia's interests. Our object should be to support the General Government in putting down this rebellion, and never for one moment hold out a doubt that the Government is to succeed.—I suppose the doubt in the mind of the gentleman, is the reason why he is pressing this matter prematurely, wanting to tie even the hands of the Committee to prevent it from reporting a bill. A doubt! Sir, let us have no doubts, there are no doubts about it.

Why, Sir, the gentleman's resolutions propose to tie the hands of the Committee, and instruct not only this Committee, but the Committee on Business, to report a Constitution and form of government for this new State, saying at the same time, that the State Legislature that was convened by act of this body, repudiated action on this subject at this time. He says this question should rise from the people. Well who are the people? Was not the State Legislature the people? Is not this Convention the people, or is it our constituents, the gentleman appeals and refers to? If it is our constituents, gentlemen, I want you to point me to a solitary act that ever authorized us to come here for the purpose of dividing the State and forming a Constitution. If they have done so, then, Sir, I will be with the people. If not, then I am for referring this question to the people and let them speak; and if they speak for a division, then Sir, I am willing for it. But I was not sent here for the purpose of dividing the State of Virginia, or making a constitution. The thing never was mooted before my people, but just the reverse. I came here to aid the General Government in putting down the rebellion and if it was not for that, I do not know what I came here for at all.

I do not propose to go into the merits of the question raised by the gentleman from Harrison. I merely wish to indicate to you, why I think hasty or premature action at this time would embarrass the General Government in putting down this rebellion, and place us in a worse attitude even than we are in at present. I simply rose for the purpose of moving to lay these resolutions upon the table. Let the Committee that have this matter under consideration make their report, and do not tie their hands. I move to lay the resolutions upon the table."

EVENTS OCCURRING IN THE HISTORY OF WEST VIRGINIA.

FROM THE ADJOURNMENT OF THE SECOND CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE OF NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA, AUGUST 21, 1861, TO THE ADMISSION OF THE STATE INTO THE UNION, JUNE 20, 1863.

1861 August 20 In the "Ordinance to provide for the Formation of a new State out of a Portion of this State," adopted by the Second Convention of the People of Northwestern Virginia, at its adjourned session; it was provided that an election should be held on the fourth Thursday, (the 24th) of the ensuing October, to vote upon the question of the proposed new State. Poll-books were to be prepared under the direction of the Governor with two separate columns, one to be headed "For the New State," the other, "Against the New State." The commissioners were to be the same as those who conducted the election in the preceding May, and in addition to taking the vote on the question of the proposed new State they were to cause polls to be opened for the election of Delegates to a Convention to frame a Constitution for the government of the new State, in case a majority of the votes cast should be in favor of its formation. The commissioners were to certify the result of the election to the Secretary of State; and the Governor was to make proclamation thereof, fixing therein Wheeling as the place, and November 26, 1861, as the date of the commencing of the Constitutional Convention.[1]

Oct. 24 In compliance with the requirement of Section Four of the "Ordinance to provide for the formation of the new State out of a portion of the territory of this State,"

1. See Ordinances of the Convention, pp. 17, 18, 19.

adopted August 20, 1861, the election was held in all the counties named in the First Section of said Ordinance. The total number of votes cast was 18,889, of which 18,408 were in favor of the new State and 481 against it.[1]

Nov. 6 The returns of the election held October 24th, having been properly certified to Governor Pierpont, he issued his Proclamation calling the members elected, October 24th, to the Constitutional Convention to assemble on the 26th of November ensuing, in the United States Court Room, in the Custom House in Wheeling, for the purpose of organizing themselves into a Convention to form a Constitution to be submitted to the voters for ratification or rejection, within the bounds of the proposed new State.[2]

Nov. 15 Governor Pierpont issued a Thanksgiving Proclamation recommending the observance of Thursday, November 28th, as a day of thanksgiving to Almighty God for the blessings of the year. In this he said:

> "In the midst of war and its afflictions, we are more forcibly reminded of our dependence upon Divine Providence; and while in all we suffer we should own His chastening hand, we should be ready to acknowledge that it is of His mercy that we are not destroyed, and that so many of the blessings of life are preserved to us."

This was the first Thanksgiving Proclamation issued under the Restored Government of Virginia.[3]

Nov. 26 The Convention to frame a Constitution for the new State of KANAWHA assembled in the United States Court Room, and was called to order by Chapman J. Stuart, a Delegate from Doddridge county. Forty delegates had been chosen in forty counties, and thirty-four of them were present. Before the Convention finally completed its work the names of sixty-one members appeared on its rolls. Hon. John Hall, of Mason county, was elected President; Ellery R. Hall, of Taylor county, Secretary; and James C. Orr, of Ohio county, Sergeant-at-Arms. The organization was completed the first day and the Convention proceeded to the work before it.[4]

JOHN HALL, Point Pleasant, Mason County.....President
ELLERY R. HALL, Pruntytown, Taylor County.....Secretary
JAMES C. ORR, Wheeling, Ohio County.....Sergeant-at-Arms

Dec. 2 The first General Assembly under the Restored Government of Virginia commenced its first regular session, in the Linsly Institute in Wheeling. The organization made at the extra session in the preceding July was continued. Daniel Polsley, Lieutenant-Governor, and ex officio President of the Senate, presided over that body; William Lewis was clerk; Jesse S. Wheat, Sergeant-at-Arms; D. V. Thorp, Doorkeeper; and Alexander Campbell, Page. In the House of Delegates, Daniel Frost, of Jackson county, was Speaker; Gibson Lamb Cranmer, Clerk; Evans D. Fogle, Sergeant-at-Arms; James O. Hawley, First Doorkeeper; and James Musgrave, Second Doorkeeper. The session closed February 13, 1862,[5]

Feb. 18 The Constitutional Convention adjourned having framed a Constitution for the proposed new State of West Virginia, the name having been changed from that of "Kanawha," by the Convention on the 3d of the preceding December. A SCHEDULE attached to this Constitution, designated John Hall, of Mason county; James W. Paxton, of Ohio county; Peter G. Van Winkle, of Wood county; Elbert H. Caldwell, of Marshall county; and Ephraim B. Hall, of Marion county, Commissioners, whose duty it was to cause the Constitution and Schedule to be published in such newspapers printed within the proposed State as they deemed proper.

Poll-books were to be prepared by them for use at the precincts in the forty-four counties proposed to be included therein. These were to have two separate columns; one to be headed "For the Constitution," and the other, "Against the Constitution."—The same persons to superintend this election as conducted that of the preceding October. Election was to be held on the first Thursday (the 3d.) in April, ensuing. All qualified voters under the proposed Constitution were entitled to vote upon the question of its adoption or rejection; and the Commissioners were required to provide for taking the vote at the time of said election, of such voters as were in the Army of the United States either in or beyond the boundaries of the proposed State. Poll-books were to be returned to the clerks of the several counties, and the Commissioners were required to ascertain the result and certify the same to the Governor. If the election insured the adoption of the Constitution by the voters of the forty-four counties first mentioned in the second section of the first article of the Schedule, they, the Commissioners, were to request the said Governor to convene the General Assembly in extra session and request it to give, by act, its consent, according to the Constitution of the United States, to the formation and erection of the State of West Virginia and forward to the Congress of the United States, such consent together with an official copy of the Constitution, with the request that the State of West Virginia may at once be admitted into the Union. Section Eleven of the Schedule, provided that the Commissioners "have power if deemed necessary, to reconvene the members of the Constitutional Convention on such day as they may prescribe"—See Schedule attached to Constitution, pp. 28, 29, 30. Appendix to Journal of the Convention.

5. See Journals of the Senate and House of Delegates, pp. 34, 35, 36.

April 3 This was the date fixed for the vote on the question of the adoption of the Constitution for the new State of West Virginia. The full vote cast by counties is not available but the following exhibits the unanimity of sentiment existing at the time:

NAMES OF COUNTIES.	For Adoption.	For Rejection	NAMES OF COUNTIES.	For Adoption	For Rejection
Barbour	450	7	Nicholas	184
Boone	71	1	Ohio	954	23
Brooke	292	45	Pleasants	322	2
Clay	88		Preston	1,466	11
Doddridge	510	15	Raleigh	177
Gilmer	168	16	Ritchie	601	6
Hancock	225	73	Roane	232
Jackson	459	2	Tucker	513	15
Kanawha	909	4	Tyler	695	10
Lewis	443	12	Upshur	489	9
Marshall	1,053	34	Wetzel	491	14
Mason	639	23	Wirt	314	3
Monongalia	1,148	17	Wood	1,290	26

Other counties together with these brought the total vote up to 19,376, of which 18,862, were for adoption and 514 for rejection. At this time there were from twelve to fifteen thousand men from the new State in the Federal Army and from three to five thousand in the Confederate Army.[6]

April 18 The Commissioners named in the Schedule having certified the result of the election to Governor Pierpont, he this day in compliance with the requirement of said Schedule, issued a Proclamation convening the General Assembly at the city of Wheeling at eleven o'clock A. M., on the 6th of May ensuing, that he might lay before it a certified original of the Constitution, and ask for its consent, according to the Constitution of the United States, to the formation and erection, as proposed, of the State of West Virginia.[7]

April 30 As is well known, the Second Convention of the People of Northwestern Virginia, at its first session, June 20, 1861, elected Francis H. Pierpont, chief executive of Virginia as the head of the Restored Government, as the successor of Governor John Letcher of Virginia. The fourth Tuesday in May 1862, was the date of the General State election under the laws of the Commonwealth which were being observed and executed by the Restored Government. Now a successor to Governor Pierpont was to be elected. As early as the 7th of April, this year, a convention in Marion County endorsed Governor Pierpont for re-election. On the same day a convention in Mason county endorsed the re-election of Governor Pierpont; of Daniel Polsley, the Lieutenant-Governor; and of James S. Wheat, the Attorney-General. Similar action was taken in other counties and on April 30th a Delegate Convention representing a number of these, assembled at Clarksburg and unanimously renominated Pierpont, Polsley and Wheat for the respective offices held by them.[8]

May 6 The General Assembly convened in its second extra session, at Wheeling, in pursuance of Governor Pierpont's Proclamation of the 18th of April. Daniel Polsley, Lieutenant-Governor, presided in the Senate and Daniel Frost in the House of Delegates. The message of the Governor was received. It was a remarkable State Paper. In it he said:

"I have convened you in extra session, the principal object of which is, to take final action in the proposed division of the State of Virginia as far as the Legislature is concerned." He reviewed the history of the Convention which framed the Constitution, and added: "The Constitution of the United States provides that no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, without the consent of the Legislature of the State concerned, as well as of the Congress. Therefore to complete the work which has been commenced, of the division of the State, it requires the consent of the Legislature of Virginia and the assent of Congress. Of course your honorable body will take such action in the premises as shall seem meet to you.

Perhaps, I have performed my duty in submitting the matter to you without saying more. But I am not willing to leave the question here. It is urged by some that the movement is revolutionary. Those who urge this objection, do not understand the history, and geography and social relations of our State. Geographically, the East is separated from the West by mountains which form an almost impassable barrier, as far as trade is concerned. The barrier is so great that no artificial means of intercourse has ever been made beyond a mud turnpike road. All the trade and commerce of the West is with other States, and not with Eastern Virgina. The two sections are entirely dissimilar in their social relation and institutions. While the East is largely interested in slaves, the West has none and all the labor is performed by free men. The mode and subjects of taxation in the State have been a source of irritation and indeed of strife and vexation, between the two sections for many years past, as well as that of representation in the Legislature. The subject of the division of the State has been agitated at one time and another ever since I can remember."[9]

May 13 The General Assembly passed "An Act giving the assent of the Legislature of Virginia to the Formation and Erection of a new State within the jurisdiction of this State." Section 1, reads as follows:

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That the consent of the Legislature of Virginia be, and the same is hereby given to the formation and erection of the State of West Virginia, within the jurisdiction of this State, to include the counties of Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marshall, Wetzel, Marion, Monongalia, Preston, Taylor, Tyler, Pleasants, Ritchie, Doddridge, Harrison, Wood, Jackson, Wirt, Roane, Calhoun, Gilmer, Barbour, Tucker, Lewis, Braxton, Upshur, Randolph, Mason, Putnam, Kanawha, Clay, Nicholas, Cabell, Wayne, Boone, Logan, Wyoming, Mercer, McDowell, Webster, Pocahontas, Fayette, Raleigh, Greenbrier, Monroe, Pendleton, Hardy, Hampshire, and Morgan, according to the boundaries and under the povisions set foth in the Constitution for the said State of West Virgina and the Schedule thereto annexed, proposed by the Convention which assembled at Wheeling, on the twenty-sixth day of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-one."

It was further provided that the counties of Berkeley, Jefferson and Frederick, might form a part of the State of West Virginia whenever the voters thereof should ratify the Constitution. Also, that copies of this Act, with a certified original of the Constitution and Schedule should be transmitted to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the Restored Government of Virginia, with the request that they use their endeavors to obtain the consent of Congress to the admission of the State of West Virginia into the union.[10]

May 14 Governor Pierpont, acting in pursuance of an ordinance adopted June 19, 1861, and of an Act of the General Assembly passed July 26, 1861, issued a Proclamation, requiring all officials, before entering upon their duties, to take the oath or affirmation prescribed in said Ordinance and Act; this being as follows:

"I solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, as the supreme law of the land, anything in the Constitution and laws of the State of Virginia, or in the ordinaces of the convention which assembled at Richmond on the 13th of February 1861, to the contrary notwithstanding; and that I will uphold and defend the government of Virginia as vindicated and restored by the Convention which assembled at Wheeling on the 11th day of June, 1861."[11]

May 22 All eyes were now turned towards Washington City, where were centered the fondest hopes of the friends of the new State. It was the Second Session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, and the Virginia members, under the Restored Government, were Waitman T. Willey and John S. Carlile in the Senate; and Kellian V. Whaley, William G. Brown and Jacob B. Blair, members of the House of Representatives. The Commissioners named in the Schedule of the Constitution, viz: John Hall, James W. Paxton, Peter G. Van Winkle, Elbert H. Caldwell and Ephraim B. Hall proceeded to Washington. They were accompanied by other prominent new State men; among whom were Harrison Hagans of Preston county, Granville Parker of Cabell county and Daniel Polsley of Mason county. On their arrival at the National Capital, all were introduced by Hon. Ralph Leete, of Lawrence county, Ohio, to the Senators and Representatives of that State.[12]

May 28 Waitman T. Willey gave notice to the Senate that, with the permission of that body he would, on the next day, present documents relating to the admission of the new State of West Virginia into the Union.[13]

May 29 Hon. Waitman T. Willey, in the Senate, presented a certified original of the Constitution, together with a copy of the Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, under the Restored Government, giving its permission to the formation of a new State within the Commonwealth of Virginia, and the Memorial of that body requesting the Congress to admit the said State of West Virginia into the Union.[14]

June 3 William G. Brown presented in the House of Representatives duplicates of the same documents that Mr. Willey had presented in the Senate on May 29th. His object was to hasten action by having the subject considered in both branches of Congress at the same time.[15]

June 23 At the time that Senator Willey submitted the Constitution of the new State with the Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, giving its permission for the formation of West Virginia, these documents were referred to the Committee on Territories, of which Benjamin F. Wade, of Ohio, was Chairman. He, on this date, reported "Senate Bill No. 365, providing for the admission of West Virginia into the Union and for other purposes." This was as follows:

CHAP. VI.—AN ACT FOR THE ADMISSION OF THE STATE OF "WEST VIRGINIA" INTO THE UNION, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

WHEREAS, the people inhabiting that portion of Virginia, known as West Virginia did, by Convention in the city of Wheeling on the 26th of November, 1861, frame for themselves a Constitution with a view of becoming a separate and independent State; and

WHEREAS, at a general election held in the counties composing the territory aforesaid on the third day of May last, the said Constitution was approved and adopted by the qualified voters of the proposed State; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature of Virginia by an act passed on the thirteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, did give its consent to the formation of a new State within the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia, to be known by the name of West Virginia, and to embrace the following named counties, to-wit: Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marshall, Wetzel, Marion, Monongalia, Preston, Taylor, Tyler, Pleasants, Ritchie, Doddridge, Harrison, Wood, Jackson, Wirt, Roane, Calhoun, Gilmer, Barbour, Tucker, Lewis, Braxton, Upshur, Randolph, Mason, Putnam, Kanawha, Clay, Nicholas, Cabell, Wayne, Boone, Logan, Wyoming, Mercer, McDowell, Webster, Pocahontas, Fayette, Raleigh, Greenbrier, Monroe, Pendleton, Hardy, Hampshire, and Morgan; and

WHEREAS, both the Convention and the Legislature aforesaid have requested that the new State should be admitted into the Union, and the Constitution aforesaid being republican in form, Congress does hereby consent that the said forty-eight counties may be formed into a separate and independent State. Therefore—

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the State of West Virginia be, and is hereby, declared to be one of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, and until the next general census, shall be entitled to three members in the House of Representatives of the United States; Provided, always, That this act shall not take effect until after the proclamation of the President of the United States hereinafter provided for.

It being represented to Congress that since the Convention of the twenty-sixth of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, that framed and proposed the Constitution for the said State of West Virginia, the people thereof have expressed a wish to change the seventh section of the eleventh article of said Constitution by striking out the same and inserting the following in its place, viz: "The children of slaves born within the limits of this State after the fourth day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, shall be free; and that all slaves within the said State who shall, at the time aforesaid, be under the age of ten years, shall be free when they arrive at the age of twenty-one years; and all slaves over ten and under twenty-one years shall be free when they arrive at the age of twenty-five years; and no slave shall be permitted to come into the State for permanent residence therein:" Therefore—

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That whenever the people of West Virginia shall, through their said Convention, and by a vote to be taken at an election to be held within the limits of the said State, at such time as the Convention may provide, make and ratify the change aforesaid, and properly certify the same under the hand of the president of the Convention, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to issue his proclamation stating the fact, and thereupon this act shall take effect and be in force from and after sixty days from the date of said proclamation.[16]

This Bill was read the first time and ordered to a second reading.[17]

June 26 Senator Wade moved to take up "Senate Bill No. 365," and this was done. It was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. There was extended discussion, but the Bill was passed to its third reading.[18]

July 14 Again Senator Wade moved to take up "Senate Bill No. 365," The motion prevailed and the report of the discussion which ensued, covers twelve quarto pages in the "Globe". That day Lafayette S. Foster of Connecticut, occupied the chair pro tem in the absence of Vice-President Hamlin. At length a vote was reached; Lazarus W. Powell of Kentucky, demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered. John W. Forney called the roll:

Those voting yea were—

Henry B. Anthony and James F. Simmons of Rhode Island; Daniel Clark and John P. Hale of New Hampshire; Jacob Collamer and Solomon Foot of Vermont; William Pitt Fessenden and Lot M. Morrill of Maine; Lafayette S. Foster of Connecticut; Henry Wilson of Massachusetts; Ira Davis of New York; John C. Ten Eyck of New Jersey; John Sherman and Benjamin F. Wade of Ohio; James W. Grimes and James Harlan of Iowa; Timothy O. Howe of Wisconsin; Henry S. Lane of Indiana; James H. Lane and Samuel C. Pomeroy of Kansas; Henry M. Rice and Morton S. Wilkinson of Minnesota; Waitman T. Willey of Virginia.

A total of 23 votes.

Those voting nay were—

James A. Bayard and William Saulsbury, of Delaware; Orville H. Browning and Lyman Trumbull of Illinois; John S. Carlile of Virginia; Zachariah Chandler and Jacob M. Howard of Michigan; Anthony Kennedy of Maryland; Preston King of New York; Edgar Cowan of Pennsylvania; Garrett Davis and Lazarus W. Powell of Kentucky; James A. McDougall of California; Benjamin Stark of Oregon; Charles Sumner of Massachusetts; Robert Wilson of Missouri; Joseph A. Wright of Indiana.

A total of 17 votes.

Those not voting were—

James Dixon of Connecticut; John R. Thompson of New Jersey; David Wilmot of Pennsylvania; James A. Pearce of Maryland; James W. Nesmith of Oregon; Milton S. Latham of California; John B. Henderson of Missouri; James R. Doolittle of Wisconsin.

A total of 8 votes.[19]

Thus it is seen that the Senators from Rhode Island, Vermont, Maine, Ohio, Kansas, Iowa, and Minnesota voted for the Bill; while those from Keutucky, Illinois, and Michigan voted against; and those from New York, Massachusetts, Indiana and Virginia were divided. The most earnest friends of the Bill in the Senate were Willey, Wade, Collamer, Hale, Fessenden, Ten Eyck, Pomeroy, Lane of Kansas, and Wilkinson. The most active in their opposition were Carlile, Bayard, Trumbull, Wilson and Sumner.

July 15 On this date, William Hickey, chief clerk of the Senate, appeared at the bar of the House of Representatives, and informed that body that the Senate had passed Senate Bill No. 365, entitled "An Act for the Admission of West Virginia into the Union and for other Purposes;" and he requested the concurrence of the House therein.[20]

July 16 Senate Bill No. 365 came up for consideration and was read a first and second time. John A. Bingham, of Ohio, moved to put the Bill on its passage; Joseph E. Segar, of Virginia, objected to its third reading and moved to lay it on the table. This the House refused to do, by a vote of seventy nays to forty-four yeas. Then, on motion of Roscoe Conkling, of New York, the further consideration of the Bill was postponed until the second Tuesday in the following December.[21]

Dec. 10 The Thirty-seventh Congress reassembled in its Third Session December 1st. At noon on Tuesday, the 9th, ensuing, John A. Bingham obtained the floor and demanded the regular order of business. "The regular order of business," said the Speaker, "is the consideration of Senate Bill No. 365, pending for the Admission of West Virginia into the Union." Bingham asked that it be put upon passage. Then ensued a discussion, the report of which covers eighteen quarto pages of the "Globe." Debate closed on the 10th; the Bill was read a third time; Charles A. Wickliffe, of Kentucky, demanded the yeas and nays; the demand was sustained.

Those who voted yea were—

Cyrus Aldrich and William Windom of Minnesota; Isaac N. Arnold, William Kellogg, Owen Lovejoy and Elihu B. Washburn of Illinois; Elijah Babbitt, Samuel S. Blair, James H. Campbell, John Covode, William M. Davis, James T. Hale, John Hickman, William D. Kelley, John W. Killinger, William E. Lehman, Robert McKnight, Edward McPherson, James K. Moorehead, John Patton, Thaddeus Stevens and John P. Verree of Pennsylvania; William P. Sheffield of Rhode Island; Stephen Baker, Jacob P. Chamberlain, Ambrose W. Clark, Frederick A. Conkling, R. lian, William Mitchell, Albert G. Porter, John P. C. Shanks and Albert S. White of Indiana; Thomas M. Edwards and Edward H. Rollins of New Hampshire; Thomas D. Elliott, Samuel Hooper and Amasa Walker of Massachusetts; Samuel L. Casey of Kentucky; Samuel C. Fessenden, Thomas A. D. Fessenden, John N. Goodwin, Anson P. Morrill, Frederick A. Pike and John H. Rice of Maine; Frederick F. Low, Timothy G. Phelps and Aaron A. Sargent of California; John T. Nixon and John L. N. Stratten of New Jersey; John W. Noell of Missouri; John F. Potter and A. Scott Sloan of Wisconsin; James F. Wilson of Iowa—in all ninety-six votes.

Those who voted nay were—

William Allen, James M. Ashbey, Samuel S. Cox, James R. Morris, Warren P. Noble, George H. Pendleton, Clement L. Vallandigham and Chilton A. White of Ohio; John B. Alley, Charles Delano, Daniel W. Gooch, Alexander H. Rice, Benjamin F. Thomas and Charles R. Train of Massachusetts; Sydenham E. Ancona, Joseph Bailey, Charles J. Biddle, Philip Johnson, John D. Stiles and Hendrick B. Wright of Pennsylvania; George T. Cobb and William G. Steele of New Jersey; Roscoe Conkling, Isaac C. Delaplain, Alexander S. Diven, James E. Kerrigan, Moses F. Odell, Edward H. Smith, John B. Rollins of Missouri; Anthony L. Knapp, William A. Richardson and James C. Robinson of Illinois; Joseph E. Segar of Virginia; George K. Shell of Oregon,—in all fifty-five votes.[22]

The analysis of this vote presents some interesting facts. The representatives from Maine, six in number, voted solidly to admit West Virginia into the Union; in Illinois there were four votes for it and three against it; Pennsylvania cast sixteen for and six against; New York, twenty for and eight against; Ohio, twelve for and eight against; Indiana, seven for and five against; Massachusetts, five for and six against; Missouri, one for and four against; while New Jersey divided equally—two yeas and two nays.

Dec. 11 Emerson Ethridge, of Tennessee, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared at the bar of the Senate, and informed that body that the House had passed Senate Bill No. 365, providing for the Admission of the State of West Virginia into the Union.[23]

Dec. 15 George T. Cobb, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that it had found truly enrolled an act (Senate No. 365) for the Admission of West Virginia into the Union.[24]

Dec. 16 Emerson Ethridge Clerk of the House, informed the Senate that the Speaker of the House had signed Senate Bill No. 365, providing for the Admission of West Virginia into the Union, and that he was directed to present it to the Senate for the signature of its President. Thereupon, the Vice-President signed the Bill, and it was delivered to the proper committee, to be presented to the President of the United States.[25]

Dec. 31 President Lincoln signed the Bill (Senate No. 365) for the Admission of the State of West Virginia into the Union, and for other Purposes.

Jan. 5 John G. Nicolay informed the Senate of the fact that the President had approved and signed Senate Bill No. 365, for the Admission of the State of West Virginia into the Union, and for other purposes.[26]

Jan. 14 The President had signed the Bill providing for the admission of West Virginia, but the State was not yet a member of the Federal Union. In the certified original of the Constitution presented to Congress for the proposed State, the Seventh Section of Article XI, read as follows:

"7. No slave shall be brought, or free person of color be permitted to come into this State for permanent residence."

This was the only reference to the "peculiar institution" contained in it. Congress was not satisfied with this, and required the said Seventh Section to be so changed as to provide for the gradual extinction of slavery as follows:

"The children of slaves born within the limits of this State after the fourth day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, shall be free and that all slaves within the said State who shall, at the time aforesaid, be under the age of ten years, shall be free when they arrive at the age of twenty-one years; and all slaves over ten, and under twenty-one years, shall be free when they arrive at the age of twenty-one years: and no slave shall be permitted to come into the State for permanent residence therein."

Section two, of the act providing for the admission of the state into the Union read as follows:

"That, whenever the people of West Virginia shall, through their said Convention, and by a vote to be taken at an election to be held within the limits of said State, at such time as the Convention may provide, make and notify the change aforesaid, and properly certify the same under the hand of the President of the Convention, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to issue his proclamation stating the fact and therefore this act shall be to effect and be in force from and after sixty days from the date of the said proclamation."

It will be remembered that in the Schedule attached to the Constitution, it was provided that the Commissioners named therein were given power to reconvene the Convention that framed it, if it became necessary to do this. The necessity had arisen, and these Commissioners, on this date, issued a proclamation requiring the members of the Convention to re-assemble in the Custom House in the city of Wheeling, on the 12th day of February, 1862, to take into consideration the act of Congress entitled "An Act for the admission of the State of West Virginia into the Union, and for other Purposes."[27]

Jan. 30 The members of the General Assembly held a meeting in the Hall of the House of Delegates on Friday evening for the purpose of adopting a plan of organization for the approaching election on the amended Constitution of West Virginia. Daniel Polsley, the Lieutenant-Governor, presided, and Leroy Kramer, of Monongalia county, was Secretary. A State Central Committee was appointed. Its members were Chester D. Hubbard, Daniel Lamb, Elbert H. Caldwell, Campbell Tarr, Alfred B. Caldwell, James W. Paxton, George McC. Porter, Jacob Berger, James S. Wheat, and George B. Martin. Then three prominent men in each county were named to compos a County Central Committee.[28]

Feb. 5 The proclamation of the Commissioners provided for special elections to be held on this date for members of the Constitutional Convention in the counties of Greenbrier, Monroe, Morgan, Pendleton and Pocahontas, not previously represented; and in Ohio county to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Gordon Battelle; one in Marion county caused by the removal of Hiram Haymond from the State; and another in Mason county, to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of John Hall, the President of the Convention.[29]

Feb. 12 The Constitutional Convention re-assembled for the purpurpose of making the change in the Constitution of the new State, required by Congress. A. F. Ross had been elected a member of the Convention from Ohio county, to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Gordon Battelle; David S. Pinnell of Upshur county, elected to fill vacancy resulting from the resignation of R. L. Brooks; Joseph S. Wheat, a member from Morgan county, hitherto unrepresented; John L. Boggs, of Pendleton county, not previously represented; J. Robinson, of Calhoun county, it having no representative heretofore; Andrew Mann appeared and took his seat as a representative from Greenbrier county; Rev. Moses Tichenel, of Marion county, to fill vacancy caused by the removal of Hiram Haymond from that county, who thereby vacated his seat; James H. Brown of Kanawha county, re-elected to fill vacancy resulting from his own resignation; Dr. Samuel T. Griffith, of Mason county, appeared as the successor of John Hall, President of the Convention, whose resignation was read and Abraham D. Soper, of Tyler county, elected to the Presidency.[30]

Feb. 19 It was evident to all that the inauguration of the Government of West Virginia was near at hand, and on Thursday evening—this date—promient men from all over the State held a meeting in Wheeling for the purpose of taking the initiative in having a general Convention of delegates from all the counties to nominate candidates for State officers at the election soon to be held under the new Constitution. Judge Abraham D. Soper, of Tyler county, presided. All present were united in the opinion that such a Convention should be held, and it was resolved to recommend to the people of each of the forty-eight counties composing the new State of West Virginia, that as soon as practicable after the adoption of the amended Constitution, they appoint delegates to meet in Convention at Parkersburg, on the first Wednesday after the expiration of ten days from the date of the proclamation of the President declaring West Virginia a State in the Union.[31]

Feb. 20 The Constitutional Convention which had re-assembled February 12th preceding, for the purpose of making the change in the Constitution as required by Congress, completed its work and adjourned sine die.[32]

Mar. 26 The people voted upon the adoption of the amended Constitution. The total vote cast was 28,321, of which 27,749 were for ratification, and 572 for rejection.[33]

April 17 On this date Abraham D. Soper, President, and Daniel Lamb, Peter G. Van Winkle, Elbert H. Caldwell. Ephraim B. Hall, and James W. Paxton, the Executive Committee of the Constitutional Convention certified the result of the election on March 26th, on the amended Constitution to Governor Pierpont, by whom it was immediately certified to the President of the United States.[31]

PROCLAMATION RELATING TO THE ADMISSION OF WEST VIRGINIA INTO THE UNION, BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

April 20 WHEREAS, by the act of Congress approved the 31st day of December last the State of West Virginia was declared to be one of the United States of America, and was admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever, upon the condition that certain changes should be duly made in the proposed constitution for that State: and

WHEREAS, proof of a compliance with that condition, as required by the second section of the act aforesaid has been submitted to me:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do hereby, in pursuance of

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

May 6 AN UNCONDITIONAL UNION CONVENTION.

The people acting upon the suggestion of the meeting at Wheeling on the evening of the 19th of February, 1863, appointed delegates from the various counties to assemble in Convention at Parkersburg; there to nominate the first State officials of West Virginia. Wednesday, May the 6th, this old town was thronged with people. The Convention assembled at 3:00 P. M. in the Court House. Judge Chapman J. Stuart of Doddridge county, called the body to order, and nominated James G. West of Wetzel county, for temporary President; and Thomas Cather of Taylor county nominated Ellery R. Hall of Taylor county, temporary Secretary. Rev. Mr. Campbell of the Presbyterian church offered prayer in an impressive manner. A Committee on Permanent Organization was appointed, consisting of Chapman J. Stuart, of Doddridge county; Benjamin H. Smith, of Kanawha; Abraham D. Soper, of Tyler; Leroy Kramer, of Monongalia; James R. Carskadon, of Hampshire; Daniel Lamb, of Ohio; Joseph B. Nay, of Marion; and John J. Brown, of Preston.

A Committee on Credentials was appointed as follows: Thomas Cather, of Taylor; George McC. Porter, of Hancock; William Swearingen, of Marion; Chapman J. Stuart, of Doddridge; Robert Irvine, of Lewis; Spicer Patrick, of Kanawha; Robert Hager, of Boone, and T. C. McCann, of Greenbrier.

Judge Stuart of the Committee on Permanent Organization reported the following:

For President—Dr. Spicer Patrick, of Kanawha county.

For Secretary—Ellery R. Hall, of Taylor county.

For Assistant Secretary—Jacob Edgar Boyers, of Tyler county.

The report of the Committee on Credentials showed that there were two hundred and thirty-five delegates present from forty counties. Nominations were declared to be in order. Names were presented for the various offices, with the result that Arthur I. Boreman, of Wood county, was nominated for Governor; Jacob E. Boyers, of Tyler county, for Secretary of State; Campbell Tarr, of Brooke county, for Treasurer of State; Samuel Crane, of Randolph county, for Auditor of State; Aquilla B. Caldwell, of Ohio county, for Attorney-General; and Ralph L. Berkshire, of Monongalia county; William A. Harrison, of Harrison county, and James H. Brown of Kanawha county, for Judges of the Court of Appeals.[34]

May 12 Daniel Lamb, James W. Paxton, Peter G. Van Winkle, Elbert H. Caldwell and E. B. Hall, the Executive Committee of the Constitutional Convention issued a Proclamation declaring May 28th, the day upon which the election of the new State officials would take place.[35]

May 28 The election of State and County officials generally throughout the new State. All State officials were elected without opposition, but in some of the counties the contests for local offices more particularly that of sheriff, were spirited and closely contested.[36]

June 12 Returns from thirty-three counties, of the vote on the 26th of May, had been received by the Executive Committee of the Constitutional Convention. These showed that in the said counties, Arthur I. Boreman, for the office of Governor, had received 25,797 votes; Jacob Edgar Boyers for Secretary of State, 24,996 votes; Campbell Tarr, for Treasurer of State, 25,513 votes; Samuel Crane, for Auditor of State, 24,857 votes; Aquilla B. Caldwell, for Attorney-General, 25,141 votes; and for

Judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals, Ralph L. Berkshire, received 24,537 votes, William A. Harrison 24,924 votes; and James H. Brown 24,225 votes. All were declared elected.[37]

June 20 This was Saturday. That day, the period of sixty days, mentioned in the proclamation of the President, April 20, 1863, expired and West Virginia entered upon her career as a member of the Federal Union.

THE BEGINNING OF THE NEW STATE GOVERNMENT.

It was a remarkable one in the History of the Virginias. In Wheeling a vast multitude thronged the streets; thousands of flags fluttered in the breeze; the display of bunting was the most attractive ever seen in the "Western Metropolis." It threatened rain—June showers; now all the beauties of a clear sunlight were shown, then a cloud chased all away. There were June showers—little ones—not enough to drive the people from the streets. A procession marched through the principal streets and then halted in front of the Linsly Institute. It was filled with people; the streets were filled with men, women and children, and the yards, windows and roofs were full of eager faces. A large platform had been erected in front of the Institute, and thither the officers—officials of two State Governments—were conducted as they arrived. Hon. Chester D. Hubbard called the multitude to order. Thirty-five tastefully attired and beautiful little girls, representing the American States—all of them—sang the "Star Spangled Banner." Rev. J. T. McClure addressed the Throne of Grace. Then came two Governors—Francis H. Pierpont, the head of the "Restored Government; and Arthur I. Boreman, chief Executive of a State just then beginning to be. The first delivered a Valedictory, the second an Inaugural Address. The sovereignty of the Restored Government of Virginia was terminated on the soil of West Virginia. Governor Pierpont retired with the Restored Government to Alexandria on the Potomac, nine miles below Washington City. Three

ORIGINAL, NO. 7.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

To the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States: 1

The Commonwealth of Virginia, by William A. Anderson, her attorney-general, brings this, her bill, against the State of West Virginia, and shows to the court that:

I.

On the first day of January, 1861, your Oratrix was indebted in about the sum of $33,000,000.00 upon obligations and contracts made in connection with the construction of works of internal improvement throughout her then territory. By far the greater part of this indebtedness was shown by her bonds and other evidences of debt, given for the large sums of money which she from time to time had borrowed and used for the above purpose, but a portion of her liabilities though arising under contracts made before that date, had not then been covered by bonds issued for their payment.

In addition to the above liability to the general public, there was a large indebtedness evidenced by her bonds and other liabilities held by and due to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund and the Literary Fund of the State, as created under her laws amounting, the former to $1,462,993.00, and the latter to $1,543,669.05 as of the same date.

The official reports and records showing the exact character and amounts of the public debt thus contracted and how the same was created, are referred to, and will be produced upon a hearing of the case.

That portion of the territory embraced in what constitutes the present territorial limits of Virginia was prior to that date devoted mainly to agriculture, and to some extent to grazing and manufacturing, which afforded its chief sources of revenue, while that portion included in what now constitutes the State of West Virginia had vast potentialities of wealth and revenue in the undeveloped stores of minerals and timber, which had been known for many years prior to the date named, and their prospective values, if made accessible to the markets of the country, were understood to be well nigh beyond computation. It was to hasten and facilitate the development of these sources of wealth and revenue by the construction of graded roads, bridges, canals and railways, extending through the State from tidewater towards the Ohio river, that the Commonwealth of Virginia, in the first quarter of the Nineteenth century, entered upon a system of public internal improvements, which it was contemplated should include the entire territory of the State, and embraced in its design the construction of public works adapted, not to the needs of any one portion of the State alone, but of the entire State, as a unit of interest. The larger part of these works were constructed East of the Appalachian range, as leading up to the undeveloped territory West thereof, but a very considerable portion of them were, at an expense of several millions of dollars, constructed West of said range within the territory now included in the State of West Virginia: and the completion of some of the main lines of improvement beyond the said range and through to the Ohio river, since the first day of January, 1861, has increased to very great and material extent the values of real estate, including coal and timber, in 3 the said territory now included in West Virginia, thus carrying into effect the original scheme of improvement, which could not have been done had not the lines East of said range been first constructed; and your Oratrix believes and avers that the property values within the limits of West Virginia have been enormously enhanced in a large measure by reason of these improvements. The money appropriated to the payment of the annually accruing interest on the said debt, prior to January 1st, 1861, and to the formation of the Sinking Fund for the ultimate redemption thereof, was derived from taxes imposed upon the property subject to taxation throughout the entire State. The first of this indebtedness to be contracted was a small amount borrowed by the State in the year 1820 and the debt was thereafter from time to time continued and increased by renewals and new loans until it reached the amount above stated in 1861.

III.

The Commonwealth of Virginia was induced to enter upon the construction of this general system of internal improvement, in a very large measure for the purpose of developing the aforesaid resources of the Western portion of the State, now constituting the State of West Virginia, thereby ameliorating the condition of her citizens residing therein; and it was with this view that she took upon herself the burden of the public debt for which her bonds were issued, without which debt such improvements could not have been undertaken. In corroboration of this view it will appear from an inspection of the legislative records of the State, 4 where the vote carrying the appropriations for such public improvements was recorded, that in nearly every instance a majority of those members of the House and Senate of the original State, who then represented the counties now composing West Virginia, voted for such appropriations. Indeed it appears from those records that a great majority of the Acts of the legislature of Virginia under which said indebtedness was created, would have failed of their passage, had the representatives from the counties embraced in what is now West Virginia opposed their enactment, and that a very large proportion of said indebtedness was actually contracted over the votes of a majority of the representatives from the counties and cities embraced in the limits of the present State of Virginia. This will be found to be true, not only in the legislature for one single session, but in the legislatures for many successive years, thus showing it to have been the fixed policy of the people in that portion of the State now constituting West Virginia to participate in, support and carry out this general plan of internal improvements in the State.

IV.

The development of this system of public improvements thus entered upon was, from its character and extent, necessarily progressive, and the same extended with the general growth and increasing needs of the State, and was incomplete, as above stated, in 1861, though a very considerable portion of such improvements had, prior to that time, been constructed as above stated, in the territory now constituting West Virginia, in order to meet the needs of the people of that portion of the State for their local purposes. As early as the year 1816 a Board of Public Works was created by law for the State, the members of which were elected by the voters of the State at large, and this Board had in charge the construction and supervision of all the works of public improvement in this State. The annual reports of this Board will be referred to for information as to the character, extent, cost and location of the public works and internal improvements constructed in the State prior to January 1st, 1861. The amounts expended upon the construction of these works in what is now West Virginia can only be accurately ascertained by an examination of the numerous entries in the records of this Board extending through a number of years and showing such expenditures as made from time to time.

V.

On the 17th of April, 1861, the people of Virginia, in general convention assembled, adopted an ordinance by which it was intended to withdraw Virginia from the Union of the States. From this action a considerable portion of the people of Virginia dissented, and organized a separate government which was known and recognized by the government of the United States as the "Restored State of Virginia," and will be hereafter referred to in this bill as the "Restored State."

VI.

On the 20th day of August, 1861, the Restored State of Virginia, in convention assembled, in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, adopted an ordinance to "provide for the formation of a new State out of the portion of the territory of this State;" Section 9 of which ordinance was as follows, to-wit:

"9. The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all the State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during said period. All private rights and interests in lands within the proposed State derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of Virginia."

VII.

On the 31st day of December, 1862, an Act was passed by the 37th Congress of the United States providing that the new State thus formed in pursuance of the ordinances of the Wheeling convention above referred to, should, upon certain conditions, be admitted into the Union by the name of West Virginia, with a constitution which had theretofore been adopted for the new State by the people thereof, such conditions being that a change should be made in such proposed constitution in regard to the liberation of slaves therein, and it was provided by this Act of Congress that whenever the President of the United States should issue his proclamation stating the fact that such change had been 7 made and ratified, thereupon the Act admitting the new State into the Union should take effect sixty days after the date of such proclamation. Such proclamation declaring these conditions to have been complied with was duly made by President Lincoln on April 20th, 1863, and West Virginia, in conformity therewith and by the operation of said Act of Congress, was admitted into the Union as a State on the 20th day of June, 1863; and thereupon the State of West Virginia became fully organized, and each of its departments of government commenced operation on the date last named.

VIII.

Pending the admission of the State of West Virginia to the Union the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia passed February 3, 1863, the following Act:

"That all property, real, personal and mixed, owned by, or appertaining to this State, and being within the boundaries of the proposed State of West Virginia, when the same becomes one of the United States, shall thereupon pass to, and become the property of the State of West Virginia, and without any other assignment, conveyance or transfer or delivery than is herein contained, and shall include among other things not herein specified all lands, buildings, roads, and other internal improvements or parts thereof, situated within said boundaries, and vested in this state, or in the president and directors of the literary fund, or the board of public works thereof, or in any person or persons for the use of this state, to the extent of the interest and estate of this state therein; and shall also include the interest of this state, or of the said president and directors, or of the said board of public 8 works, in any parent bank or branch doing business within said boundaries and all stocks of any other company or corporation, the principal office or place of business whereof is located within said boundaries, standing in the name of this state, or of the said president or directors, or of the said board of public works, or of any person or persons, for the use of this state.

5. That if the appropriations and transfers of property, stocks, and credits provided for by this act, take effect, the State of West Virginia shall duly account for the same in the settlement hereafter to be made with this state, provided that no such property, stocks and credits shall have been obtained since the reorganization of the state government."

Your oratrix is informed, believes, and so charges, that the property which was by the operation of this act appropriated and transferred from the State of Virginia to the State of West Virginia, and which was subsequently received and enjoyed by the State of West Virginia, consisted of a number of items, and the value of it amounted in the aggregate, to several millions of dollars, the exact amount your Oratrix is unable at this time more definitely to ascertain and state. That of the bank stocks alone, which were transferred under the operation of this Act, the State of West Virginia realized and received into her Treasury from the sale thereof about Six Hundred Thousand Dollars; and that no part of the property so received by West Virginia had been 9 obtained by Virginia since April, 1861.

IX.

And by a further Act of the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia passed on the next day, February 4th, 1863, it was enacted:

"1. That the sum of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars be, and is hereby appropriated to the State of West Virginia out of moneys not otherwise appropriated, when the same shall have been formed, organized and admitted as one of the States of the United States.

2. That there shall be, and hereby is appropriated to the said State of West Virginia when the same shall become one of the United States, all balances, not otherwise appropriated, that may remain in the treasury, and all moneys not otherwise appropriated, that may come into the treasury up to the time when the said State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States; provided, however, that when the said State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States, it shall be the duty of the auditor of this State, to make a statement of all the moneys that up to that time, have been paid into the treasury from counties located outside of the boundaries of the said State of West Virginia, and also of all moneys that up to the same time, have been expended in such counties, and the unexpended surplus of all such moneys shall remain in the treasury and continue to be the property 10 of this State."

And this last named sum of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars, together with other sums belonging to the State of Virginia, were turned over to and received or collected by the new State of West Virginia after its formation as aforesaid.

X.

The Constitution of the State of West Virginia, which became operative and was in force when she was admitted into the Union contained the following provisions:

By Section 5 of Article VIII. of said Constitution it was provided:

"5. No debt shall be contracted by this State except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State, to suppress insurrection, repel invasion, or defend the State in time of War."

And by Section 7 of Article VIII. it was provided:

"7. The legislature may, at any time, direct a sale of the stocks owned by the State, in banks and other corporations, but the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the liquidation of the public debt, and hereafter the State shall not become a stockholder in any bank."

And by Section 8 of Article VIII. it was provided:

"8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accru- 11 ing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

At the time the Constitution containing these provisions was adopted, West Virginia did not owe, and could not have owed, any "public debt" or "previous liability," except for her just, contributive proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia, and for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to and received by her under the Acts of the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia above set forth. By the provisions of Section 8 of Article VIII., above cited, she expressly assumed her equitable proportion of the debt of the original State as it existed prior to the first day of January, 1861. By section 5 of the same Article VIII., above set forth her Constitution forbade the creation of any debt "except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State," &c., and there was not and could not have been any such "previous liability," except her portion of the debt of the original State, and her liability for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to and received by her under the Acts of the General Assembly of the Restored State. And Section 7 of the same Article of her Constitution, above cited, authorized a sale of the stocks owned by the State, in banks and other corporations, the proceeds to be applied to the liquidation of the public debt; and she had no such stocks, except those acquired, as above stated, from the original State. This section of her constitution also expressly required the proceeds of such sale to be applied to her public debt, which public debt could only have been her proportion of that of the original State of Virginia, 12 and her liability for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to her.

XI.

After the year 1865 and prior to the year 1872 attempts were made at different times by the public authorities of both the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia, respectively, to ascertain their contributive proportions of the common liability resting upon them for the public debt of Virginia, contracted prior to January 1st, 1861; but all such attempts proved ineffectual and vain, and no accounting or settling of any kind was ever had between the two States in regard to this debt.

XII.

The efforts looking to a settlement by the concurrent action of the two States having proved abortive, and your Oratrix being anxious to adjust the portion of the common debt which it was right that she should assume and pay, upon terms just and equitable alike to the public creditors and to West Virginia, made several efforts to effect such a settlement.

The first of these was made by the General Assembly which was chosen at the close of the period of "destruction and reconstruction," which, following closely upon the period of disastrous war, had inflicted upon her people injuries and losses, the harmful effects of which were then by no means realized.

The purpose of the representatives of the Commonwealth, then just emerging from conditions which had impoverished her people and paralyzed their productive energies, to assume and pay to the uttermost every dollar which her most exacting creditor could demand of her, was expressed in the Act of her General Assembly, approved March 30, 1871. 13

By the terms of settlement embodied in this Act, your Oratrix undertook to give her obligations bearing 6% interest for two-thirds of the principal, and for two-thirds of the past due interest, and also for two-thirds of the interest on that accrued interest, which accrued interest to the extent of nearly $8,000,000, had been funded after the War in new bonds of Virginia, thus capitalizing at 6% not only the interest, but interest upon that interest.

It was soon apparent that Virginia had by this measure assumed a heavier burden than she was able to bear, and so other plans for the settlement of the State debt were attempted by the Acts of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth approved March 28, 1879, and February 14, 1882, until at length a final and satisfactory settlement of the portion of the debt of the original State which Virginia should assume and pay was definitely concluded by the Act of February 20, 1892. Your Oratrix will file copies of each of the Acts of her General Assembly herein mentioned as exhibits to this bill, and to be read as part hereof.

XIII.

As farther indicating the great burden which your Oratrix, notwithstanding the disaster and loss above referred to, has assumed and met on account of the common debt of the undivided State, she shows your Honors that, since January 1st, 1861, she has actually paid off, retired and discharged, or assumed and given her new outstanding obligations for the aggregate sum of over Seventy One Million Dollars, as will more particularly appear from a statement thereof filed as an exhibit herewith and hereinafter referred to Exhibit Number 7. 14

It is proper in this connection to call attention to the fact that, while your Oratrix has made this large contribution towards the settlement of the common debt, West Virginia has not paid one dollar thereof; and although in the early years of her history she repeatedly conceded that there was some portion of that debt which should equitably be borne by her, her properly constituted authorities have for a number of years refused to recognize that any liability whatever rested upon her, on that account, and have declined even to enter into an accounting or to treat with your Oratrix in reference thereto.

It would seem from the above statement that Virginia has already done as much under all the circumstances as she could be fairly expected to do towards paying off the common public debt of the old State. Such was the view and purpose of the General Assembly in the several Acts above recited.

A question may be raised as to whether such was the effect of the language used in the Act of March 30, 1871, with respect to the certificates issued thereunder; but the great mass of the creditors entitled to whatever may be due upon the unfunded obligations of the undivided State, have in effect agreed, as will be hereinafter shown, to waive any such question, and to accept the adjudication of this Court in this cause against West Virginia in full discharge of all their claims, thus giving that effect to the Act of March 30, 1871, which it was the purpose of your Oratrix that it should have.

By each of the Acts for the settlement of her debt above recited, it was provided that the bonds of undivided Virginia so far as not funded in the new obligations given by your Oratrix, should be surrendered to and held by your Oratrix, who either by the express terms of the settlement provided for by said Acts, or as a just and equitable consequence therefrom, received and holds said original bonds so far as unfunded, in trust for the creditor who deposited the same with her, or his assigns; and certificates to this effect were given by your Oratrix to each creditor whose old Virginia bond was so surrendered to her.

Having as an essential part of the contract for the adjustment of the common debt of the original State entered into this fiduciary relation in reference to these bonds, it became her obligation of duty to the creditors who had confided their securities to her keeping, as well as to her own people, whose credit and fair name required that these obligations of the old State should be fairly and honorably adjusted, to do all in her power to bring about a determination of West Virginia's just liability in respect thereto, and if possible the recognition and settlement of the same by that State.

Only after exhausting every means of amicable negotiation, and having her overtures to that end repeatedly refused, and as a last resort, has your Oratrix been constrained at length reluctantly to apply to this, the only tribunal which can afford relief, for an adjudication and determination of this question, of such vast importance to your Oratrix and to all of her people.

XV.

All of the bonds and obligations and other evidences of the indebtedness of the original State of Virginia outstanding and contracted on January 1, 1861, as stated in paragraph I of this bill, except a comparatively insignificant sum, not amounting to one per cent. of the aggregate of those liabilities, have been taken up and are now actually held by your Oratrix, and she has the right to call upon West Virginia for a settlement with respect thereto. They are too numerous and involve too great a number of transactions running through many years, for it to be practicable to exhibit them here in detail, but the original bonds and other evidences of indebtedness so paid off or retired and now held by your Oratrix, will, when it shall be proper to do so, be exhibited to the Master, who shall take the accounts hereinafter prayed for.

XVI.

Of the evidences of indebtedness representing principal and interest of the liabilities of Virginia contracted before her dismemberment, those so paid off or retired by your Oratrix and now held by her in her own right, exclusive of the amounts represented by the certificates issued under the funding Acts aforesaid, amount in the aggregate, including the interest to be fairly computed thereon to this date, to a very large sum, considerably in excess of $25,000,000, by far the greater part of it being now, of course, on account of the interest computed thereon, at the rate of 6% per annum, the then legal rate in both States.

For all of these obligations taken up and payments made on account of the common debt, your Oratrix has in her own right, a just claim against West Virginia for contribution 17 to the extent of West Virginia's equitable liability therefor.

XVII.

In addition to the above bonds there were outstanding on the 1st day of January, 1861, certain obligations of the State of Virginia as guarantor upon some of the securities issued by internal improvement companies, which your Oratrix was called upon to provide for and settle. They were not comparatively of very large amount, however, and the questions involved in connection therewith can be stated and settled in the account hereinafter prayed for to be taken between the two states; and in such accounts your Oratrix will also ask to have included all such items of debit against the State of West Virginia on account of the property and moneys of the original State which were received or appropriated by West Virginia which may not have been specifically or accurately stated herein. These items of accounting between the two States are so numerous and varied and extend throughout a period of so many years' duration that it is impossible from the nature of the case to state all of them in this bill; and the account between the two States can only be taken and settled, and the balance due your Oratrix thereon ascertained, under the supervision of a Court of Equity.

XVIII.

Your Oratrix charges that the liability of the State of West Virginia, for a just and equitable proportion of the public debt of Virginia, as of the time when the State of West Virginia 18 was created, rests upon the following among many grounds which might be indicated here:

First. The area of the territory now known as the State of West Virginia formed about one-third of the territory of the Commonwealth of Virginia when this public debt was created, and its population included about one-third of that of the original State at the time of its dismemberment. And the State of West Virginia did, by the acquisition and appropriation of such territory, with the population thereof, assume therewith liability for a just and equitable proportion of the public debt created prior to the partition of such territory.

Second. The liability of West Virginia for a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, as it existed prior to the creation and erection of the State of West Virginia, forms part of her very political existence, and is an essential constituent of her fundamental law as shown in the said ordinance adopted at Wheeling on the 20th day of August, 1861, in which the method of ascertaining her liability on account of said debt is prescribed. And this liability is embedded in the Constitution under which she was admitted as a State into the Federal Union, and was one of the conditions under which she was created a State and admitted into the Union.

Third. The State of West Virginia has further, by the repeated enactments and joint resolution of her legislature, recognized her liability for a just proportion of this debt.

Fourth. The State of West Virginia has, since her creation as a State, received from the State of Virginia real and personal property, amounting in value to many millions of dollars, and held and enjoyed the same, but upon expressed condition that she should duly account for the same in a settlement thereafter 19 to be had between her and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Fifth. While the transfer of this property, real and personal, and also of certain moneys of the Commonwealth of Virginia, purport to have been made to the State of West Virginia by the Act of "The Restored Government of Virginia," there were in fact repre sented in said "Restored Government" and in the legislature thereof no other people and no other territory than that which then, as now, constitute the State of West Virginia.

XIX.

The General Assembly of Virginia being anxious to effect a settlement of the portion of the common debt of the undivided State which remained unadjusted, and if possible to bring this about with the friendly co-operation and concurrence of West Virginia, adopted: "A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia, and for the application of whatever may be received from the State of West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same," approved March 6, 1894. A copy of this resolution will be hereinafter shown as an exhibit to this bill, to be read as a part thereof.

Under this resolution a commission of seven members was appointed for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects expressed therein.

The efforts made by this Commission, acting under the above resolution to bring about a settlement with West Virginia having proved ineffectual, and the overture which the Commission, with the active co-operation of the Honorable Charles T. O'Ferral, the then governor of the Commonwealth made to the authorities of West Virginia for the purpose of bringing about a friendly adjustment having been declined, the General Assembly of Virginia passed the Act approved March 6, 1900, entitled "An Act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises," the purpose of which Act is sufficiently set forth in its title, and a copy of the Act will also be hereinafter shown as one of the exhibits herewith filed.

XX.

The Commission acting under said last-mentioned Act made most earnest efforts to bring about an amicable adjustment of the matters hereinbefore set forth with West Virginia, but all of their efforts in that behalf proved ineffectual and unavailing. An application to this Honorable Court being thus left as the only alternative for Virginia this suit has been instituted at the request and direction of the said Commission, and in strict conformity with the provisions of the said Act of March 6, 1900, all of which will be more fully and completely shown by the Report of the said Commission dated January 6, 1906, made to the General Assembly of Virginia now in session, a copy of which Report and the documents accompanying the same, and referred to therein, will be exhibited as a part of this Bill.

XXI.

In order that the matters hereinbefore referred to may be more fully shown to the Court, your Oratrix files herewith certain exhibits (eight in number) which she prays may be read as a part of her bill, to-wit:

Exhibit Number 1. A copy of the said Act of the General 21
Assembly of Virginia, of March 30, 1871, entitled an Act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt.

Exhibit Number 2. A Copy of the Act of the same General Assembly of March 28, 1879, entitled an Act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt.

Exhibit Number 3. A copy of the Act of February 14, 1882, of the same General Assembly, entitled an Act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular payment of the interest thereon.

Exhibit Number 4. A copy of the said Act of the same General Assembly, approved February 20, 1892, entitled an Act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an Act entitled, etc.

Exhibit Number 5. A copy of the said Joint Resolution of the said General Assembly of March 6, 1894, providing for the appointment of a Commission.

Exhibit Number 6. A copy of the said Act of March 6, 1900, under which the powers of the said Commission were enlarged and the institution of this suit authorized.

Exhibit Number 7. Showing amounts paid off since January 1, 1861, or assumed and now carried by Virginia on account of the old debt of the undivided State.

Exhibit Number 8. A copy of the report of the said Virginia Commission made to the General Assembly of that State, dated January 6, 1906, together with the accompanying papers.

XXII. 22

Forasmuch, therefore, as your Oratrix is remediless save in this form and forum, and to the end that the State of West Virginia may be duly served, through her Governor and Attorney-General, with a copy of this bill, your Oratrix prays that the said State of West Virginia may be made a party defendant to this bill, and required to answer the same, that all proper accounts may be taken to determine and ascertain the balance due from the State of West Virginia to your Oratrix, in her own right and as trustee as aforesaid; that the principles upon which such accounting shall be had may be ascertained and declared, and a true and proper settlement made of the matters and things above recited and set forth; that such accounting be had and settlement made under the supervision and direction of this Court by such Auditor or Master as may by the Court be selected and empowered to that end, and that proper and full reports of such accounting and settlement may be made to this Court; that the State of West Virginia may be required to produce before such Auditor or Master, so to be appointed, all such official entries, documents, reports and proceedings as may be among her public records or official files and may tend to show the facts and the true and actual state of accounts growing out of the matters and things above recited and set forth, in order to a full and correct settlement and adjustment of the accounts between the two States; that this Court will adjudicate and determine the amount due to your Oratrix by the State of West Virginia in the premises; and that all such other and further and general relief be granted unto your Oratrix in the premises as the nature of her case may require or to equity may seem meet.

And your Oratrix will ever pray, &c.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Attorney General of Virginia.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 1. 24

CHAP. 282.—An Act to Provide for the Funding and Payment of the Public Debt.

Approved March 30, 1871.

(Acts G. A. of Va. 1870-1, p. 378.)

Whereas in the formation of the State of West Virginia, there were included within its boundaries about one-third of the territory and population of the State of Virginia; and whereas, in the ordinance authorizing the organization of said state, it was provided that the said state shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, which provision has not yet been fulfilled, although repeated and earnest efforts in that behalf have been made by this state, and will continue to be made as long as may be necessary; and whereas, the people of this commonwealth are anxious for the prompt liquidation of her portion of said debt, which is estimated to be two-thirds of the same; and whereas it has been suggested that the authorities of West Virginia may prefer to pay that state's portion of said debt to the holders thereof and not to this State, as the constitution of this state provides; now, therefore, to enable the State of West Virginia to settle her proportion of said debt with the holders thereof, and to prevent any complications or difficulties which might be interposed to any other matter of settlement, and for the purpose of promptly restoring the credit of Virginia by providing for the prompt and certain payment of the interest upon her proportion of said debt as the same shall become due; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That from and after the passage of this act, no bond, certificate, or other evidence of indebtedness, shall be issued for any portion of the debt of this state; nor shall any interest be paid upon any part or portion of said debt, except as hereinafter provided.

2. The owners of any of the bonds, stocks or interest certificates heretofore issued by this state, which are recognized by its constitution and laws as legal, except the five per centum dollar bonds, and what are known as sterling bonds, but including the stock of the old James river company, and the bonds of the James river and Kanawha company guaranteed by this state, may fund two-thirds of the amount of the same, together with two-thirds of the interest due or to become due thereon, to the first day of July, eighteen hundred seventy-one, in six per centum coupon or registered bonds of this state of the denominations of one hundred, and multiples thereof, dated that day and to become due and payable in thirty-four years after date, but redeemable at the pleasure of the state, after ten years, the interest to be payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year. The bonds shall be made payable to order or bearer, and the coupons to bearer, at the treasury of the state and bonds payable to order may be exchanged for bonds payable to bearer, and registered bonds may be exchanged for coupon bonds, or vice versa, at the option of the holder. The coupons shall be payable semi-annually, and be receivable at and after maturity for all taxes, debts dues, and demands due the state, which shall be so expressed on their face; and the bonds shall bear on their face a declaration to the effect that the redemption thereof is secured by a sinking fund provided for by the law under which they are issued. The holders of the five per centum dollar bonds may in like manner fund the same in like bonds, bearing, however, five instead of six per centum interest. In the funding herein authorized, for any fractional sums less than one hundred dollars, certificates shall be issued bearing the same date and rate of interest, and payable at the same time as the bonds issued under this section; which certificates, in sums of one hundred dollars or any multiple thereof, shall be exchangeable for bonds of the character herein authorized to be issued; and new 26 certificates of like character may be issued for any fractional sums less than one hundred dollars which may remain in making such exchange.

3. Upon the surrender of the old and the acceptance of the new bond for two-thirds of the amount due as provided in the last preceding section, there shall be issued to the owner or owners, for the other one-third of the amount due upon the old bond, stock, or certificate of indebtedness so surrendered, a certificate bearing the same date as the new bond, setting forth the amount of the bond which is not funded as provided in the last preceding section, and that payment of said amount with interest thereon at the rate prescribed in the bond surrendered, will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the states of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to the public debt of the state of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment, and that the state of Virginia holds said bonds, so far as unfunded, in trust for the holder or his assignees; and provided further, that until such final settlement with West Virginia, there shall be paid upon what are known as sterling bonds, in the manner now prescribed by law, two-thirds of the interest accruing on the principal of said bonds, after July first, eighteen hundred and seventy-one; and for the interest accrued to said date certificates dated on that day shall be issued, drawing the same rate of interest as the bonds, two-thirds of which shall be paid as provided to be paid on the bonds. The remaining one-third of unpaid interest, both on the bonds and certificates, shall be payable in money, and the principal of said certificates in new sterling bonds of the same character as the old, in accordance with such final settlement as shall be made with West Virginia.

The bonds and certificates shall be signed by the treasurer, and countersigned by the second auditor; the coupons shall be signed by the treasurer, or a fac simile of his signature shall be stamped or engraved thereon. Each denomination of bonds herein authorized to be issued, both registered and coupon, shall constitute a series, and the bonds of each series shall be numbered from one upwards, as they are issued; and the coupons in addition to the number of the bond to which they are attached, shall be numbered from one to sixty-seven. Each class of certificates authorized to be issued by this act shall be numbered, respectively, from one upwards, and in addition thereto, each certificate shall contain the number and date of the bond or certificate on account of which it is issued. Each bond, certificate of stock, and interest certificate, to be funded as herein provided, shall first be delivered to the second auditor, who shall calculate and determine the amount for which a bond shall be issued, and the amounts for which certificates shall be issued, under the second and third sections of this act; which calculations shall be endorsed, dated and signed by him on the back of such bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate, and he shall cause a proper registry thereof, together with the date and number of the bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate, to be made and kept in his office. After such endorsement and registration, the second auditor shall deliver the bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate, to the treasurer, who shall thereupon deliver to him a bond or bonds and certificates of the character named in the second and third sections of this act, duly signed and numbered, for the several amounts, respectively, according to said endorsement. The second auditor, after making a proper registry of said bond or bonds, and certificates to be kept in his office, shall deliver the same to the person entitled to them. The treasurer shall, by proper endorsement, written or stamped, upon each bond, certificate of stock, or interest certificate so surrendered and delivered to him, cancel the same, and endorse thereon the date of such cancellation, and shall preserve the same in his office until otherwise directed by law. The treasurer shall also have made and preserved in his office a proper registry of every bond and certificate delivered by him to the second auditor, and whenever a coupon bond shall be issued payable to the order of any person or firm, he shall secure and preserve the signature of such person or firm as a part of such registry whenever practicable. 28

5. Whatever sum may be realized from the claims of this state against Seldon, Withers and Company, and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal company, and from the sale and disposition of the stocks and bonds, and debts owned by the state in and against any and all railway or other improvement companies, and all sums which may be realized from the claims of this state against the United States, and from any sales of any real estate now belonging to the commonwealth, shall be paid into the treasury of the state to the credit of the sinking fund hereby authorized and created. In the year eighteen hundred and eighty, and annually thereafter, until all the bonds issued under and by authority of this act shall have been paid, there shall be levied and collected, the same as other taxes, a tax of two cents on the one hundred dollars of the assessed valuation of all the property, personal, real and mixed, in the state, which shall be paid into the treasury of the state to the credit of the sinking fund. The treasurer, the auditor of public accounts, and the second auditor are hereby appointed commissioners of the sinking fund, and shall have (a majority acting) the control and management thereof, and shall annually, or oftener, apply whatever sum or sums may be to the credit of the sinking fund, to the purchase and redemption of bonds issued by authority of this act.

6. All necessary expense incurred in the execution of this act shall be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the certificate of the correctness of the same, signed by the treasurer and second auditor, and approved by the governor.

7. This act shall be in force from and after its passage.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 2.

CHAP. 24.—An Act to Provide a Plan of Settlement of the Public Debt.

Approved March 28, 1879.

(Acts G. A. of Va. 1878-9, p. 264.)

Whereas it is believed by the general assembly that the rate of interest heretofore agreed to be paid by the state on the public debt is greater than can be borne without destroying the industrial interests of the state and whereas the council of foreign bondholders of London, England, and the funding association of the United States of America, limited, have, in view of this belief expressed their willingness to jointly endeavor to obtain the consent of the creditors to an abatement in the rate of interest; and whereas it is highly expedient, in the best interest of the state, to secure an amicable settlement with the creditors by which the credit of the state may be restored and enhanced, and the aggregate amount of interest payable by the state reduced within limits which will not be too onerous to the population; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That to provide for funding the debt of the state, the governor is hereby authorized to create bonds of the state, registered and coupon, dated the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, the principal payable forty years thereafter, bearing interest at the rate of three per centum per annum for ten years, and at the rate of four per centum per annum for twenty years, and at the rate of five per centum per annum for ten years, payable in the cities of Richmond, New York or London, as hereinafter provided, on the first days of July and January of each year, until the principal is redeemed. The state shall have the option of redeeming any or all of said bonds by the payment of principal and accrued interest at any time after the expiration of ten years from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, on public notice to the holders of its purpose to make such redemption. The coupons on said bonds shall be receivable at and after maturity for all taxes, debts, 31 dues and demands due the state, and this shall be expressed on their face. The holder of any registered bond shall be entitled to receive from the treasurer of the state a certificate for any interest thereon, due and unpaid, and such certificate shall be receivable for all taxes, dues and demands due the state, and this shall be expressed on the face of the registered bonds and on the face of such certificate All obligations created under this act shall be forever exempt from all taxation direct or indirect, by the state, or by any county or corporation therein, and this shall be expressed on the face of the bonds. The said bonds shall be of the denominations of one hundred dollars, five hundred dollars, and one thousand dollars, at the option of the creditors respectively, and the bonds as well as their coupons shall be payable at Richmond and New York, or if desired may be made payable in sterling at London, at the fixed rate of exchange of one pound sterling for five dollars. The bonds hereby authorized shall be issued only in exchange for the outstanding debt of the state, as hereinafter provided.

2. For purposes of designation, the outstanding indebtedness of the state is divided into two classes, as follows, to-wit:

Class I. which shall be taken to include all tax-receivable coupon bonds, and all registered bonds and fractional certificates which are convertible under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, into such tax-receivable coupon bonds.

Class II. which shall be taken to include all bonds funded under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one as amended by the act approved March seventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-two; and also two-thirds of the face value, with two-thirds of the unpaid accrued interest up to the first of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, on all unfunded bonds, including sterling bonds.

3. The outstanding indebtedness of the state shall be funded in the new bonds, to be issued under this act, as fol- 32 lows: Bonds shall be presented for exchange with all coupons attached maturing after the date of presentation, and shall be exchanged at the face value of said bonds, dollar for dollar, for the new bonds, with all coupons attached maturing after the date of such presentation: Provided that the proportion of Class II, refunded, shall never exceed in amount one-third (1-3) of the total amount refunded, until eighteen million dollars of Class I. have been retired. The new bonds to be issued may be coupon or registered, at the option of the holders, and at the like option coupon bonds may at any time be converted into registered bonds.

4. All due and unpaid interest may be funded under the provisions of this act at the rate of fifty cents on the dollar, and shall be fundable at that rate under the third section of this act, and taken under the provisions of said section, in lieu of bonds of Class II.

5. If on or before the first day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, the council of foreign bondholders and the funding association of the United States of America aforesaid, shall file with the governor their assent to and acceptance of the terms of this act, the same shall be taken to be a contract between the state and the said corporations, and the governor shall forthwith provide for the preparation of the bonds provided for by this act. The said corporations may present for funding, and in the proportions hereinbefore provided at least eight millions of dollars of the outstanding obligations of the state prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty; and during each period of six months, from and after the thirty-first — December, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine they may present an additional amount of at least five millions of dollars, until the whole debt is funded; but any excess over said amounts, which may be presented during any of said periods may be estimated in requirement for the succeeding six months. So long as the said corporations shall present for funding the obligations aforesaid, in the amounts and in the periods aforesaid, 33 they shall have the exclusive privilege of funding the outstanding debt under the provisions of this act: Provided that the said corporations shall arrange to receive the outstanding bonds at the city of Richmond, when the holders thereof shall so desire. But if the said corporations shall fail to file with the governor their assent and agreement as aforesaid by the first day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, or shall fail to present for funding the outstanding bonds in the proportions and amounts and during the periods hereinbefore specified, then the governor may, in his discretion, make a like contract with responsible parties for the funding of the debt of the state under this act.

6. The rules prescribed under the act approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, in respect to preparing, signing and issuing the new bonds and coupons, regulating the same, and in taking in, cancelling and registering the old bonds, shall be observed by the officers of the treasury in the execution of this act, except so far as the same be modified by the provisions of this act: Provided that all bonds and certificates which may be necessary to be printed, shall be printed from a plate which shall be the property of the commonwealth, and shall remain in the keeping or under the control of the second auditor. Whenever an obligation of the state shall be presented to the second auditor to be funded under this act, he shall note the fact and date on the proper register in his office, shall punch a hole through the name of the second auditor, signed or countersigned thereto, and shall issue his warrant upon the treasurer for the new obligations required. There shall be endorsed upon the said warrant a description of the old obligations, and the calculation of principal and interest for which the new obligations are to be issued. The said old obligations and warrant shall be carried by the second auditor to the treasurer, who shall note the fact and date of funding on the proper register in his office, and if he shall find the warrant correctly drawn, shall sign the proper obligations to be issued, register the same in his office, clip 34 therefrom the past-due coupons and punch the same, and deliver the said obligations to the second auditor, taking his receipt therefor upon his warrant. The second auditor shall countersign the obligation so delivered to him, register the same in his office, and deliver the same to the proper person, taking his receipt therefor. The treasurer shall jacket and file in his office the warrant upon which the new obligations were issued, with the surrendered obligations attached to said warrant, and shall number and date the jacket so as to make it easy for reference. But in cancelling and registering the bonds as above directed, in every bond and coupon surrendered under this act holes shall be punched in one or more places, and in such a manner as to render a new funding of the same impossible, and every bond and coupon so cancelled shall be filed for reference.

7. The owners of all classes of bonds mentioned in this act, who shall exchange their securities for the bonds created under this act and who shall not have yet received certificates representing the remaining one-third of their principal and interest, due and payable by the state of West Virginia, shall receive certificates of a like character to those issued under the act of March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, when they make such exchange; and the state of Virginia will negotiate or aid the creditors holding all of such certificates issued under this act, or previous acts, in negotiating with the state of West Virginia for an amicable settlement of the claims of such creditors against the state of West Virginia. The acceptance of the said certificates for West Virginia's one third, issued under this act, shall be taken and held as a full and absolute release of the state of Virginia from all liability on account of said certificates.

8. The general assembly will, by necessary and appropriate legislation, provide for the prompt payment of the interest on the bonds issued under this act.

9. In the year eighteen hundred and eighty-five, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under and by authority of this act are paid, there shall be levied and collected the 35 same as, and together with other taxes, a tax of two cents on the one hundred dollars of the assessed valuation of all the property, personal, real and mixed, in the state, which shall be paid into the treasury of the state to the credit of the sinking fund. The treasurer, the auditor of public accounts, and second auditor are hereby appointed commissioners of the sinking fund, and shall have (a majority acting) the control and management thereof, and shall annually, or oftener, apply whatever sum or sums may be to the credit of the sinking fund to the purchase and redemption of bonds issued under this act. All the certificates of debt which shall be funded, redeemed or purchased under this act shall be cancelled by the second auditor, and delivered by him to the treasurer of the commonwealth at the time of payment therefor, who shall carefully preserve the same in his office. All certificates of debt acquired under the operation of the sinking fund, created by the act of March thirty, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, shall also be cancelled and delivered.

10. Executors, administrators, and others acting as fiduciaries, may invest in the bonds issued under this act, and the same shall be considered a lawful investment.

11. The treasurer shall, upon the first days of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and January, eighteen hundred and eighty, and upon the same days in each year, pay or cause to be paid to the holders thereof the half-yearly interest then due upon each of the bonds of the commonwealth issued under this act.

12. Whenever there shall not be a sufficient amount of money in the treasury of the state to meet the accruing interest on the said bonds promptly, the auditor is hereby authorized and directed, by and with the advice of the governor of Virginia, to raise by temporary loan, to be returned out of the accruing revenues of the state, a sum sufficient to enable him to meet promptly the said interest as it accrues. And in case the auditor shall not be able to 36 raise a sufficient sum for the said purpose by loans, he is hereby authorized and directed to issue non-interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness of this state, to be signed by himself and countersigned by the treasurer, and properly registered in the offices of the auditor and treasurer, for the sum of one dollar and multiples thereof, the same to be printed from plates, which shall be the property of the state, and to sell the same at not less than a minimum price to be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund, which shall not be less than seventy-five cents upon the dollar. The said certificates shall be receivable for all taxes, debts, dues and demands due the state, and this shall be expressed on their face. The amount of such certificates which may be issued at any one time shall be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund, and the proceeds of the sale thereof shall be devoted exclusively to the payment of interest as aforesaid. The auditor shall report regularly to the general assembly the amount and character of certificates issued under this act, and the net proceeds thereof. In case the auditor shall not be able to borrow the sums needed as aforesaid without security, he shall be and is hereby authorized to hypothecate such amounts of the said certificates as may be fixed on by the commissioners of the sinking fund, at a value to be fixed as aforesaid, but in no case to be at a less value than seventy-five cents upon the dollar; and in case of a sale of said certificates, whether they may have been so hypothecated or not, they shall be offered for sale in suitable and proportionate amounts in the different counties, towns and cities of this state, so far as practicable, under regulations to be fixed by the commissioners of the sinking fund. The said certificates shall be received by the treasurer of the state, and be cancelled on receipt thereof, under the same regulations and prohibitions now existing in relation to coupons for interest on the public debt, except that no tax shall be deducted therefrom, and the fact of their cancellation shall be noted on the said registers.

13. The act approved March fourteenth, eighteen hun- 37
dred and seventy-eight, and all acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

14. This act shall be in force from its passage.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 3. 38

CHAP. 84.—An act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon.

Approved February 14, 1882.

Preamble.—Whereas to the end which this act comprehends, a full statement of the debt is essential; and whereas the following has been carefully made up from the records of the second auditor's office of the State, it is confidently submitted as presenting a true state of the account between the State and her creditors—the account is as follows:

		Interest.	Principal.
	Principal outstanding at this date:
1861, January 1st,	Sterling debt bearing 5 per cent. interest..... $ 1,973,000 00
	Dollar debt bearing 6 per cent. interest..... 29,533,582 90
	Debt guaranteed bearing 6 per cent. interest..... 294,130 00
	Total principal		$31,800,712 90
	Interest:
	Past due and uncalled for at this date..... 101,023 63
	Maturing at this date, January 1st, 1861..... 944,156 38
	Total interest	$1,045,183 01
1863, July 1st.	The State of West Virginia was formally admitted into the Union June 20th, 1863. The property and resources of Virginia, upon which the above debt has been founded, were by this partition of the old State, reduced, one-third of her territory and one-fifth of her population going to form West Virginia. This and the consequences of war to her and her people made a loss of full $500,000,000 of property, and her taxable values were reduced from $723,000,000 to $336,000,000, and her annual revenues from over $4,000,000 to $2,500,000.

1863, July 1st.	Two-thirds of the above debt, principal and interest, to this date is assumed as Virginia's equitable portion, in consideration of the partition of her territory, population, and resources, upon the well established principle that debt in such cases follows territory. Upon that basis, Virginia's portion of the debt of the entire State is—

Total debt	21,035,377 15

And whereas by this account it appears that Virginia owes 41 her creditors, as of the first — July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, including the bonds held by the Literary fund and arrears of interest thereon cast to such date, twenty-one million, thirty-five thousand, three hundred and seventy-seven dollars and fifteen cents; and that she may cause to be issued her own bonds for the same, and provide for the certain payment of interest thereon; that is for her equitable share of the bonds known as consols, and here designated as class A, and whereof there are outstanding fourteen million three hundred and sixty-nine thousand nine hundred and seventy-four dollars and eighty-one cents; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as ten-forties, and here designated as class B, and whereof there are outstanding eight million five hundred and seventeen thousand six hundred dollars; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as peeler, and here designated as class C, and whereof there are outstanding two million three hundred and ninety-four thousand three hundred and five dollars and twelve cents; and for her equitable share of the interest thereon, designated as class D, and whereof there is now in arrears nine hundred and twenty-eight thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven dollars and forty-five cents, and counted to the first of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, makes the amount of such interest then to be in arrears, one million seventy-two thousand five hundred and forty-five dollars and seventy-five cents; and for her equitable share of the bonds known as unfunded bonds—dollar and sterling—here designated as class E, and whereof there are now outstanding, computed at two-thirds, three million seven hundred and seventy-three thousand four hundred and ninety-three dollars and sixty-eight cents; and for her equitable share of the interest thereon now in arrears, two million six hundred and thirty-six thousand four hundred and forty-four dollars and thirty-four cents, and counted to the first of July, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, making as of that date (two hundred and twenty-six thousand four hundred and nine dollars and sixty-two cents more) the sum of two million eight hundred and sixty-two thousand eight hundred and fifty-three dollars and ninety-six cents, and here designated as class F; and for her equitable share of the bonds held by the commissioners of the Literary fund, whereof there are one million four hundred and twenty-eight thousand two hundred and forty-five dollars and twenty-five cents; and whereas the rate of interest which any people can safely undertake to pay must be determined by the measure of their productive resources; and whereas these have long been burdened by a rate of taxation which is conceded to be as high as can be endured; and whereas the means of prompt and certain payment should be apparent to the creditor, while the people have assurance for the support of the government and the maintenance of their schools, as required by the constitution; and whereas the net revenues of the state remaining and so derived, after providing for the proper and gradual liquidation of the balance of the moneys heretofore diverted from the public free school fund, after liquidating gradually the ar- 42 rearages to the Literary fund, and leaving some small margin for the immediate and subsequent exigencies, which are, and are likely to be demanded by the public welfare—notably in respect of the humane institutions now inadequate to the proper accommodation of that unfortunate class of every population—do not warrant the assumption of a larger rate of interest than three per centum upon the full amount of Virginia's equitable share of the debt of the old and entire state, as the same is ascertained and now formally declared by the foregoing account; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the state, be, and they are hereby empowered and directed to create bonds, registered and coupon, to such extent as may necessary to comply with the provisions of this act.

2. The said bonds shall be dated July first, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and be payable at the office of the treasurer of the state on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and thirty-two; provided that the state may, at any time and from time to time, after July first, nineteen hundred, redeem any part of the same, principal and interest, at par. In case of such redemption before maturity, the bonds to be paid, shall be determined by lot by said board of commissioners, and notice of the bonds so selected to be paid, shall be given in a newspaper published in Richmond, New York, and London, England, when interest from and after ninety days from the date of such publication in London, shall cease upon the bonds so designated to be paid.

3. The form of the bond shall be as follows, to-wit:

The commonwealth of Virginia acknowledges herself indebted to —— —— (in the case of a coupon bond to the bearer, and in the case of a registered bond, inserting the name of the person or corporation) in the sum of —— dollars, which she promises to pay in lawful money of the United States at the office of the treasurer of the state, Richmond, Virginia, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and thirty-two, with the option of payment at par, principal, and interest, before maturity, at any time after July first, nineteen hundred; and interest at the office of the treasurer of the state, in such lawful money, on the first days of January and July, at the rate of three per centum per annum until paid (according to the tenor of the annexed coupons, in the case of coupon bonds).

In testimony whereof, witness the signature of the treasurer and the counter-signature of the second auditor, hereto affixed according to law.

—— ——, Treasurer,
—— ——, Second Auditor.

4. The form of coupon for coupon bonds shall be as follows, to-wit:

No. —— (of bond). 43

The commonwealth of Virginia will pay to bearer —— dollars, in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer, Richmond, Virginia, on the first day of January and July, alternately—the first coupon to be payable January first, eighteen hundred and eighty-three.

—— ——, Treasurer.

$——.

Each coupon to be impressed on the back with its number, in the order of maturity, from one forward.

5. The said board of commissioners are authorized to issue such bonds, in denominations of five hundred and one thousand dollars, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, each denomination to be of a different tint: Provided that registered bonds may be issued of any denomination, multiple of one hundred; all registered bonds to be of the same tint; and they are authorized and directed to issue such bonds, registered or coupon, in exchange for the outstanding evidences of debt hereinbefore numerated, including the bonds held by the literary fund, as follows, that is to say:

(a) For her equitable share of class A, at the rate of fifty-three per centum; that is to say, fifty-three dollars of the bonds authorized under this act (principal and accrued interest, at par, from the preceding period of maturity to the date of exchange,) are to be given for every one hundred dollars, face, principal and accrued interest from the preceding semi-annual period of maturity to the date of exchange of such evidences of debt, and for any interest which may be past due and unpaid upon the same, funded bonds issued under this act may be given dollar for dollar.

(b) For her equitable share of class B, at the rate of sixty per centum, reckoning and accounting for any interest, as provided in the case of class A.

(c) For her equitable share of class C, at the rate of sixty-nine per centum, reckoning any current interest, at the date of exchange, as in the cases of classes A and B, and accounting for the same as provided in class D.

(d) For her equitable share of class D, at the rate of eighty per centum.

(e) For her equitable share of class E, at the rate of sixty-nine per centum, reckoning any current interest, at the date of exchange, as in the cases of classes A, B, and C, and accounting for the same as provided in class F.

(f) For her equitable share of class F, at the rate of sixty-three per centum.

(g) For her equitable share of the bonds of the Literary fund, as in the case of class C; her equitable share of the arrearages of interest—three hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred seventy dollars—to be paid in money.

6. For all balances of such indebtedness, constituting West Virginia's share of the old debt, principal and interest, in the settlement of Virginia's equitable share as aforesaid, the said board of sinking fund commissioners shall issue a certificate as follows:

No. ——. 44

The commonwealth of Virginia has this day discharged her equitable share of the (registered or coupon, as the case may be) bond for —— dollars, held by ——, dated the —— day of ——, and numbered ——, leaving a balance of —— dollars, with interest from ——, to be accounted for by the state of West Virginia, without recourse upon this commonwealth.

Done at the capitol of the state of Virginia, this —— day of——, eighteen ——.

—— ——, Second Auditor.
—— ——, Treasurer.

7. The said board of commissioners are empowered to issue for any fractional part of one hundred dollars of the indebtedness funded under this act, the following certificate:

Fractional Certificate.

Register No. —. Transaction No. —.

This certificate entitles the holder hereof to the sum of —— dollars, fundable at its face in the bonds of the commonwealth of Virginia, authorized by an act approved —— day of ——, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, when presented with certificate of like tenor or in conjunction with other evidences of debt fundable under said act in amounts of one hundred dollars and multiples thereof.

Done at the capitol of Virginia, this——day of ——, eighteen hundred and eighty ——.

—— ——, Second Auditor.
—— ——, Treasurer.

The certificates so issued shall be registered by the second auditor in a register kept for that specific purpose, giving the date and number of the transaction to which it relates, the amount of the same, and the name of the person or corporation to whom it was issued; and as such certificates are refunded, the same shall be canceled and preserved as herein provided in respect to the evidences of debt refunded.

8. All the bonds and certificates of debt and evidences of past due and unpaid interest taken in under the provisions of this act, shall be canceled by the treasurer in the presence of the board of commissioners of the sinking fund as the same are required, and by the treasurer the same shall be carefully preserved until such time as the General Assembly may otherwise direct. A schedule of the bonds, certificates and other evidences of debt so canceled from time to time, shall be certified by said board and filed with the treasurer for preservation.

9. All the coupons and registered bonds and fractional certificates issued under this act, shall be separately registered by the second auditor in books kept for the specific purpose; and in each case giving the date, number and amount of the obligations issued, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued, and the date, number, amount and description of the bond, bonds or indebtedness surrendered. 45

10. The plates from which the bonds and fractional certificates authorized by this act, are printed, shall be the property of the commonwealth, and shall remain in the keeping of the said board of commissioners of the sinking fund.

11. In the year eighteen hundred and ninety, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under and by authority of this act are paid, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the state each year, two and one-quarter per centum upon the bonds at the time outstanding, which shall be paid into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund; and the commissioners of the said sinking fund shall, annually or oftener, apply the same to the redemption or purchase (at a rate not above par) of the bonds issued under this act, and the bonds so redeemed shall be canceled by the said board, and the same registered by the second auditor in a book to be kept for the purpose, giving the number, the date of the issue, the character, the amount, and the owner at the time of purchase of the bonds so redeemed and canceled; and in case no such purchase of bonds can be made, then the amount which can be redeemed shall be called in by lot as provided in section two of this act.

12. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries, may exchange any state bonds held by them as provided, for bonds issued under this act, when so authorized by the court having jurisdiction in the premises, and the same, when so made, shall be considered a lawful investment.

13. The treasurer of the commonwealth is authorized and directed to pay the interest on the bonds issued under this act, as the same shall become due and payable, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

14. All necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this act, shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the warrants of the auditor of public accounts drawn upon the treasurer, on the order of the board of sinking fund commissioners.

15. That from and after the passage of this act, no bonds, certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness, shall be issued for any portion of the debt of this state, nor shall any interest be paid upon any part or portion of said debt, except as hereinbefore provided.

16. This act shall be in force from its passage.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 4. 46

CHAP. 325. An act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled An act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February 14, 1882.

Approved February 20, 1892.
(Acts G. A. of Va. 1891-92, p. 533.)

Whereas by a joint resolution of the general assembly of the state of Virginia, adopted on the third day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety, a commission was appointed on the part of Virginia to receive propositions for funding the debt of the state not funded under the act known as the "Riddleberger bill," approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, from a properly constituted representative of her creditors; and

Whereas said Virginia debt commission has submitted a report to the general assembly, wherein it appears that under a certain agreement, dated May twelfth, eighteen hundred and ninety, lodged with the Central Trust Company of New York, Frederick P. Olcott, William L. Bull, Henry Budge, Charles D. Dickey, Junior, Hugh R. Garden, and John Gill, constituting a committee for certain of the creditors of Virginia, called the "Bondholders' committee," have proposed to said commission to surrender to the state in bulk not less than twenty-three million of dollars of the public debt, unfunded under said act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, in exchange for an issue of new bonds, as hereinafter specified, the same to be apportioned between the several classes of creditors by a tribunal which the said creditors have themselves appointed; and that, in pursuance of said proposal an 47 agreement has been entered into unanimously between the said commission and the said bondholders' committee, subject to approval by the general assembly, whereby in exchange for the said unsettled obligations of the state held by the public, which were issued prior to February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two (exclusive of evidences of debt held by the public institutions of the commonwealth pursuant to law and by the United States) together with the interest thereon to July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, inclusive, aggregating about twenty-eight million of dollars, there shall be issued nineteen million of dollars of new bonds, dated July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and maturing one hundred years from said date, with interest thereon at the rate of two per centum per annum for ten years from said first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and three per centum per annum for ninety years thereafter to the date of maturity, said interest to be payable semi-annually, of which aggregate debt of about twenty-eight million of dollars the said bondholders' committee represent that they now hold and agree to surrender not less than twenty-three million of dollars, and

Whereas said report and agreement contemplate the surrender of the obligations held by the bondholders' committee as an entirety, and do not contemplate an apportionment by the general assembly between the various classes of creditors so represented by said bondholders' committee, the same having been committed to a distributing tribunal, as hereinbefore recited; and

Whereas it is the desire and intention of the general assembly that a settlement of all the other outstanding obligations of the state (except those issued under the act of February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, the evidences of debt held by the public institutions of the state in pursuance of law and by the United States) as well as those controlled by the bondholders' committee, as aforesaid, shall be made under the provisions of this act; therefore

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That the commissioners of the sinking fund, a majority of whom 48 may act, be, and they are hereby, empowered and directed to create "listable" engraved bonds, registered and coupon, to such an extent as may be necessary to issue nineteen million of dollars of bonds in lieu of the twenty-eight million dollars of outstanding obligations, not funded under the act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, hereinbefore recited.

2. The said bonds shall be dated July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and be payable at the office of the treasury of the state, or at such agency in the city of New York, as may be designated by the state, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and ninety-one, and shall bear interest from date, payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July in each year, at the rate of two per centum per annum for the first ten years and three per centum per annum for the remaining ninety years; the said interest may be payable in Richmond, New York and London, or at either place, as may be designated by the state; provided that the state may at any time, and from time to time, after July first, nineteen hundred and six, redeem at par any part of the principal with accrued interest. In case of such redemption before maturity, the bonds to be paid shall be determined by lot by said commissioners of the sinking fund, and notice of the bonds so selected to be paid shall be given by publication beginning at least ninety days prior to an interest-due date, in a newspaper published in Richmond, Virginia, one in New York city, and one in London, England; and the interest from and after the next succeeding interest-due date shall cease upon the bonds so designated to be paid: provided that no registered bonds shall be so redeemed while there are any coupon bonds outstanding.

3. The form of the bonds shall be substantially as follows, to-wit:

Issued under act of assembly, approved —— day of ——, eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

The commonwealth of Virginia acknowledges herself to be indebted to —— —— (in case of a coupon bond to the bearer, 49 and in case of a registered bond inserting the name of a person or corporation, or assigns), in the sum of —— dollars, which she promises to pay in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer of the state, or at such agency in the city of New York as may be designated by the state, on the first day of July, nineteen hundred and ninety-one, with the option of payment at par with accrued interest, before maturity at any time after July first, nineteen hundred and six, and interest, at the office of the treasurer of the state, or at the agencies of the state in New York city and London, England, or at either place, as may from time to time be designated by the state, in such lawful money aforesaid, at the rate of two per centum per annum for ten years from the first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and at the rate of three per centum per annum thereafter until paid, payable semi-annually on January first and July first in each year (according to the tenor of the annexed coupon bearing the engraved signature of the treasurer of the commonwealth in case of coupon bonds). And this obligation is hereby made exempt from any taxation by the said commonwealth of Virginia, or any county or municipal corporation thereof.

In testimony whereof, witness the signature of the treasurer and the countersignature of the second auditor of the commonwealth of Virginia, hereto affixed according to law.

[SEAL.] —— ——, Treasurer.

—— ——, Second Auditor.

4. The form of coupon for coupon bonds shall be substantially as follows, to-wit:

Coupon No. —.

On the first day of —— the commonwealth of Virginia will pay to bearer —— dollars in lawful money of the United States, at the office of the treasurer of the state, or at the agencies of the state in New York city or London, England, or at either place, as may be designated by the state; the same being six months' interest on bond number ——, —— dollars.

—— ——, Treasurer.

Each coupon to be impressed on the back with its number, in order of maturity, from number one consecutively.

5. Said commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized to issue coupon bonds in denominations of five hundred and one thousand dollars each, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: provided that registered bonds may be issued of the denominations of one hundred dollars, five hundred dollars, one thousand dollars, five thousand dollars, ten thousand dollars; and they are authorized and directed to issue said bonds, registered or coupon, in exchange for the said outstanding obligations up to and including July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one (exclusive of evidences of debt held by public institutions of the commonwealth as aforesaid and by the United States) as follows:

A. Said bondholders' committee may at any time on or before the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present to said commissioners for verification bonds and other evidences of debt, and coupons or other evidences of interest thereon, obligations of the state of Virginia, held by said committee, for exchange as aforesaid; and said commissioners shall determine whether the obligations so presented are genuine obligations of the state and whether the coupons or other evidences of interest represent interest accrued on such obligations (exclusive of evidences of debt held by public institutions of the commonwealth as aforesaid and by the United States).

B. Such of the obligations so presented for verification as may be determined by said commissioners to conform to the requirements of paragraph A hereof, shall be sealed in convenient packages as the examination proceeds. Each of the packages shall be numbered, and upon each package shall be endorsed the amount and 51 character of the obligations therein contained. Such endorsement on each package shall be signed by said commissioners or a majority thereof, and the package shall then be delivered to said committee or its agent. Said commissioners shall keep in a book to be provided for the purpose a record of the numbers of all such packages and of the amount and character of the obligations contained in each. Such obligations presented by said bondholders' committee as do not conform to the requirements of paragraph A hereof shall be returned to said committee; but said commissioners shall keep a record thereof in the book aforesaid.

C. After said bondholders' committee shall have presented to said commissioners for verification bonds and other evidences of debt and coupons, or other evidence of interest thereon accrued on or before July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, obligations of the state of Virginia, all conforming to the requirements of paragraph A hereof, as determined by said commissioners, and amounting in the aggregate to not less than twenty-three million of dollars, after deducting one-third of the principal and interest of such obligations as were issued prior to the thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, and also deducting one-third of the principal and interest of such obligations as were issued under the act approved the thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and seventy-one, as do include West Virginia's proportion, said bondholders' committee may at any time on or prior to the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present the same in bulk to said commissioners for surrender and exchange as herein provided. All coupons matured or to mature on coupon bonds after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, or coupons of like class and amount, or the face value thereof in cash, shall be surrendered with such bonds, the said cash to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered. And when the said bondholders' committee shall have presented for exchange the obligations aforesaid to an amount of twenty-three million of dollars or more, if the engraved bonds 52
hereinbefore authorized are not ready for exchange, the said commissioners shall, upon application of said bondholders' committee, issue to said bondholders' committee a manuscript registered bond of the state of Virginia, substantially of the form of the bond hereinbefore specified, for the aggregate amount to which the said committee may be entitled for the obligations so presented under this act, the said bond to be exchangeable for the engraved bonds aforesaid of character and amount required by said committee, as prescribed in this act, and interest in the meantime on said manuscript bond shall be paid as herein provided for on the engraved bonds.

D. The said new bonds shall be issued to said bondholders' committee by the said commissioners in the following proportion, to-wit: nineteen thousand dollars of the new bonds to be created under this act shall be issued for every twenty-eight thousand of old outstanding obligations (principal and interest to July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one), as aforesaid, surrendered by said bondholders' committee to the said commissioners, after the deductions provided for in paragraph C of this section; and a proportionate amount of said new bonds shall be issued for smaller sums of said outstanding obligations so surrendered: provided that no certificates issued on account of the proportion of West Virginia of the obligations of the state shall be funded under this act. When said bondholders' committee shall have surrendered and exchanged such obligations as aforesaid to the amount of at least twenty-three million dollars, said committee may at any time thereafter up to and including the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, present to said commissioners for verification, surrender, and exchange additional obligations, principal and interest, as aforesaid; all coupons matured or to mature on coupon bonds after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, or coupons of like class and amount, or the face value thereof in cash, to be presented with such 53
bonds, the cash, if paid, to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered. After said commissioners shall have determined that said obligations conform to the requirements of paragraph A hereof, said commissioners shall accept the obligations so presented for surrender and exchange by said committee, and shall deliver to said committee in exchange therefor new bonds issued under the provisions of this act in the same proportion as is set out in this paragraph of this section, after making the deductions provided for in paragraph C of this section.

E. If on making the exchange provided for in this act said committee shall be found entitled to a fractional amount or amounts less than one hundred dollars in addition to the new bonds delivered to it, said commissioners of the sinking fund shall issue to the committee a certificate or certificates for such amount or amounts. Such fractional certificates shall be exchangeable for the bonds authorized by this act to be issued in sums of one hundred dollars, or any multiple thereof, and certificates of like character shall be issued for any fractional amount which may remain in making the exchange.

6. For all balances of the indebtedness, constituting West Virginia's share of the old debt, principal and interest, in the settlement of Virginia's equitable share of the bonds authorized to be exchanged under this act, the said share having been heretofore determined by the commonwealth of Virginia, the said commissioners shall issue certificates substantially in the following form, viz:

No. —. The commonwealth of Virginia has this day discharged her equitable share of the (registered or coupon, as the case may be), bond for —— dollars, dated —— day of ——, and No. —, leaving a balance of —— dollars, with interest from ——, to be accounted for to the holder of this certificate by the state of West Virginia, without recourse upon this commonwealth.

Done at the capitol of the state of Virginia, this —— day 54 of ——, eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

—— ——, Second Auditor.
—— ——, Treasurer.

The certificates so issued under sections five and six of this act shall be recorded by the second auditor in a book kept for that purpose, giving the date and number of the transaction to which it refers, the amount of certificates, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued and delivered; and as such certificates, authorized by paragraph E, section five of this act, are exchanged, the same shall be cancelled and preserved as herein provided in respect to the evidences of debt refunded.

7. The commissioners of the sinking fund are hereby authorized and required to receive on deposit for verification, classification and exchange such of the said obligations of the state as may be presented to said commissioners; provided, that said commissioners shall not receive on deposit for the purposes aforesaid any outstanding obligations of the state which have been once deposited with the bond-holders' committee, or may be hereafter deposited with them; the said verification and exchange for the new bonds of the obligations so deposited to be conducted in the same manner as hereinbefore provided with respect to the obligations deposited with the said bond-holders' committee, and the said commissioners of the sinking fund shall issue to and distribute amongst said depositing creditors after they have fully complied with the terms of this act, in exchange for the obligations so deposited, bonds authorized by this act as follows, namely: to each of the several classes of said depositing creditors the same proportions, as nearly as may be found in their judgment practicable by the commissioners of the sinking fund, as the same class shall receive under the distribution which shall be made by the commission for the creditors represented by the bondholders' committee: provided that no obligations shall be received for such deposit after the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two, nor shall any coupon bonds be 55 received which do not have attached thereto all the coupons maturing after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-one: but for any such coupons as may be missing, coupons of like class and amount, or the face value thereof in cash, may be received; the said cash, if paid, to be returned if proper coupons are subsequently tendered; and each depositor shall, when he receives his distributive share of the said new issue of bonds, pay to the commissioners of the sinking fund three and one-half per centum in cash of the par value of the bonds received by him, or a commission equal in amount to that which may at any time hereafter be fixed by the said committee of bondholders upon any bonds deposited with them, not, however, in any case to exceed three and one-half per centum; and said sinking fund commissioners shall cover the fund thus received into the treasury of the commonwealth.

8. All the coupon and registered bonds issued under this act shall be separately recorded by the second auditor in books provided for the specific purpose, in each case giving the date, number, amount of obligations issued, and the name of the person or corporation to whom issued, and the date, number, amount and description of the obligations surrendered.

9. All the bonds and certificates of debt, and evidences of past due and unpaid interest, taken in under the provisions of this act, shall be cancelled by the treasurer in the presence of the commissioners of the sinking fund, or a majority thereof, as the same are acquired, and by him carefully preserved, subject to disposition by the general assembly; a schedule of the bonds, certificates, and other evidences of debt so cancelled shall be certified by said commissioners and filed by the treasurer for preservation.

10. In the year nineteen hundred and ten, and annually thereafter, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the state each year up to and including the year nineteen hundred and twenty-nine, one half of one per cent. upon 56 the bonds issued under this act, as well as upon the outstanding bonds issued under act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and in the year nineteen hundred and thirty, and annually thereafter until all the bonds issued under this act and the said act approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, are paid, there shall be set apart of the revenue collected from the property of the state each year one per cent. upon the outstanding bonds issued under the aforesaid acts, which shall be paid into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund, and the commissioners of the sinking fund shall annually, or oftener, apply the same to the redemption or purchase (at a rate not above par and accrued interest), of the bonds issued under the aforesaid acts, and the bonds so redeemed shall be cancelled by the said commissioners and the same registered by the second auditor in a book to be kept for that purpose, giving the number and date of issue, the character, the amount, and the owner at the time of purchase, of the bonds so redeemed and cancelled; and in case no such purchase of bonds can be made, then the amount which can be redeemed shall be called in by lot, as provided in section two of this act. All bonds of the state issued under the provisions of the act aforesaid, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and now held by said commissioners of the sinking fund, shall, as soon as at least fifteen million of dollars of new bonds shall have been issued and delivered pursuant to the provisions of this act, be cancelled by said commissioners and preserved in the office of the treasurer of the commonwealth.

11. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries may participate in the settlement of the debt herein specified in the manner hereinbefore provided, and such action shall be deemed a lawful investment of their trust fund. Executors, administrators and others acting as fiduciaries may invest in the bonds issued under this act, and the same shall be considered a lawful investment.

12. All coupons heretofore tendered for taxes and held by 57 said tax-payers in pursuance of such tender, shall be received in payment of the taxes for which they were tendered, and upon their delivery to the proper collector or the amount thereof in money, the judgments obtained against the said tax-payers for such taxes shall be marked satisfied: Provided the said tax payers shall have paid in money and not in coupons the costs of said judgments. All coupons heretofore tendered for taxes and held by the officers of the commonwealth for verification, in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, shall be received in payment of the taxes for which they were tendered, and the money collected for such taxes returned to the parties from whom it was received: Provided the said tax-payers shall have paid in money, and not in coupons, all costs incurred in legal proceedings to verify said coupons.

13. The treasurer of the commonwealth is authorized and directed to pay the interest on the bonds issued under this act as the same shall become due and payable out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

14. The plates from which the bonds and fractional certificates authorized by this act are printed shall be the property of the commonwealth.

15. All necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this act shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated on the warrants of the auditor of public accounts, drawn upon the treasury on the order of the commissioners of the sinking fund.

16. The act entitled "an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon," approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and the amendments thereto to-wit: an act entitled "an act to declare the true in- 58 tent and meaning of, and to amend and re-enact section five of chapter eighty-four of acts eighteen hundred and eighty-one and eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two," approved August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and eighty-four; and the act entitled "an act to amend and re-enact an act approved August twenty-seventh eighteen hundred and eighty-four, entitled an act to declare the true intent and meaning of, and to amend and re-enact section five of chapter eighty-four of acts of eighteen hundred and eighty-one and eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February fourteenth eighteen hundred and eighty-two," approved November twenty-ninth, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, are hereby repealed.

17. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized, if it shall seem to them for the best interest of the commonwealth, to make one extension of the time for the funding of the said twenty-eight million of dollars of outstanding evidences of debt for a period not exceeding six months from the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

18. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized to exchange coupon bonds issued under this act into registered bonds in the denominations hereinbefore provided, and to arrange for the transfer of registered bonds. For every bond so issued in exchange a fee of fifty cents shall be charged by, and paid to the second auditor, and shall, upon his order, be covered into the treasury to the credit of the sinking fund; and bonds so taken in exchange shall be cancelled in the manner hereinbefore prescribed.

19. This act shall be in force from its passage.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 5. 59

CHAP. 747. A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same.

(Approved March 6, 1894.)

(Acts G. A. of Va., 1893-4, p. 867.)

Whereas the general assembly of Virginia is required by the constitution of Virginia to provide by law for adjusting with the state of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original state of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia; and

Whereas the general assembly has heretofore passed four several acts in relation to the funding and settlement of her public debt, as follows, to-wit:

First. An act entitled an act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt, approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one.

Second. An act entitled an act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt, approved March twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

Third. An act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and

Fourth. An act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, 60 eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two; and

Whereas in each of said acts provision is made for issuing to creditors of the original state of Virginia who should accept the new bonds provided for by said several acts, certificates for such proportion of the obligation surrendered by them as was deemed proper to be borne by the state of West Virginia, to-wit: one-third of the amount of said obligations, of which certificates this state holds a large amount, through the agency of the commissioners of its sinking fund and literary fund; and

Whereas the present state of Virginia has settled and adjusted, to the entire satisfaction of her people and the creditors, the liability assumed by her on account of two-thirds of the debt of the original state; now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of Virginia (the house of delegates concurring), That a commission of seven members is hereby created and provided for, of whom the present chairman of the committee on finance and banks of the senate shall be one, and the present chairman of the committee on finance of the house of delegates shall be another; of the other five, two shall be chosen by the senate from among the persons now members of that body; two by the house of delegates from among the persons now members of that body, and one, to be a resident of this state, shall be appointed by the governor. No member of said commission shall cease to be a member thereof by reason of ceasing to be a member of the general assembly.

Said commission shall choose its own chairman and secretary; vacancies therein occurring or existing during recess of the legislature shall be filled by the governor on notification thereof by the chairman; and a majority of said commission shall be competent to act.

Said commission is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate with the state of West Virginia a settlement and adjustment of the proportion of the public debt of the original state of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia 61

But said commission shall not proceed with said negotiation until assurances satisfactory to the commission shall have been received from the holders of a majority in amount of said certificates, exclusive of those held by the state through the agency of the board of education and sinking fund commissioners, that they desire the said commission to enter into and undertake such negotiation and will accept the amount so ascertained to be paid by the state of West Virginia in full settlement of the one-third of the debt of the original state of Virginia which has not been assumed by the present state of Virginia. But said commission shall in no event enter into any negotiation hereunder except upon the basis that Virginia is bound only for the two-thirds of the debt of the original state which she has already provided for as her equitable proportion thereof.

All expenses incurred by said commission and said board of arbitrators, including reasonable compensation of the members thereof shall be paid out of the proceeds of such settlement, or by the holders of said certificates who are the beneficiaries of such settlement, but without subjecting the state to any expense on this account.

And their action shall be subject to the approval or disapproval of the general assembly, and shall not be binding on the state until approved by the general assembly. The governor is requested to communicate this joint resolution to the governor and legislature of West Virginia.

This joint resolution shall be in force from its passage.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 6. 62

CHAP. 825. An act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises.

Approved March 6, 1900.

(Acts G. A. of Va., 1899-1900, p. 902.)

Whereas the general assembly of Virginia has heretofore passed certain acts with respect to the settlement of her public debt as follows, to-wit:

First. An act entitled an act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt, approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one.

Second. An act entitled an act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt, approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

Third. An act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and

Fourth. An act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two; and

Whereas in each of said acts provision is made for issuing to creditors of the original state of Virginia who should accept the new bonds provided for by said several acts, certificates 63 for such proportion of the obligation surrendered by them as was deemed proper to be borne by the state of West Virginia, to-wit: one-third of the amount of said obligations, of which certificates this state holds a large amount, through the agency of the commissioners of its sinking fund and literary fund; and

Whereas the general assembly is required by the constitution of Virginia to provide by law for adjusting with the state of West Virginia the proportion of the debt of the original state of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, but no such adjustment has ever been had; and

Whereas it appears that while Virginia has satisfactorily settled the two-thirds of the original debt which she assumed, yet it is possible that complications will arise with respect to said certificates which will render it desirable that she should endeavor to secure an adjustment thereof upon terms which will protect herself, but will work no injustice to West Virginia, and thus finally dispose of the only question remaining unsettled in connection with said debt: now, therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That the commission created and appointed under a joint resolution of this general assembly entitled a joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the state of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original state of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same, approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, be, and said commission hereby is, authorized to receive and take upon deposit the certificates aforesaid or have the same otherwise placed or held on deposit subject to their control upon an agreement and contract on the part of the holders of said certificates that if the said commission will secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates the said holders of said certificates so deposited will accept the amount realized on such settlement from West Virginia on said certificate as a full settlement of all their claims there- 64 under.

2. If at least two-thirds in amount of the said certificates issued under the act of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, exclusive of those held by the state through the agency of the board of education and the sinking fund commissioners, and at least a majority in amount of all the other certificates aforesaid shall be so deposited or placed subject to the control of the said commission upon the agreement and contract aforesaid, then the said commission shall be authorized and empowered by and with the advice and approval of the attorney general of Virginia to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the state as may in the judgment of said commission and attorney general be needful and proper to protect the interest of the state and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid. All the expenses involved in connection with any of the matters aforesaid shall be borne by the certificate holders, as provided in the joint resolution aforesaid, and the state shall not be subject to any expense on that account.

3. This act shall be in force from its passage.

These amounts can be ascertained from the records of the Board of Public Works, the First and Second Auditor's offices and the Acts of Assembly.

EXHIBIT NO. 8.

Report of the Commission appointed and acting under the 66 joint resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved March 6th, 1894, and the act of the said General Assembly approved March 6th, 1900, with respect to certain certificates issued by the State in connection with the debt of the original State of Virginia and known as Virginia Deferred Certificates.

RICHMOND, VA., January 9th, 1906.

To the General Assembly of Virginia:

Your Commission appointed and acting under the joint resolution of the General Assembly entitled "A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found entitled to the same," approved March 6th, 1894, and an Act of the General Assembly entitled "An Act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises," approved March 6th, 1900, beg leave to make a further report of their proceedings, as follows:

It will be noted that it appears from the first report of your Commission, dated January 28th, 1896, and printed as Senate Document No. 10 in the Senate Journal and Documents of 1896, and as House Document No. 4 in the House Journal and Documents of that session, that the conditions required by said joint resolution having been complied with, your Commission was ready and desirous to open negotiations with West Virginia for a settlement as provided for in said joint resolution, and this fact was communicated to the Governor of West Virginia by the Governor of this State with the request that such negotiations might accordingly be 67 opened, which communication was laid before the Legislature of West Virginia, but that body, by a joint resolution, declined to enter into negotiations on the subject.

By a subsequent report of your Commission to this General Assembly, dated February 7th, 1900, and to be found printed as Senate Document No. 6 in Senate Journal and Documents for the session of 1899-90, it was further shown that the control and disposal of a majority of said certificates had been again tendered your Commission by a Committee, of which John Crosby Brown of New York was chairman, acting under a depositing agreement of July 28th, 1898, and the said Committee offering to accept whatever might be realized from West Virginia on the certificates in full settlement of their claims. A copy of said depositing agreement of July 28th, 1898, under which said Committee was constituted, was filed with said last report, and the same is also now herewith filed showing who constituted said Depositing Committee and what their powers and functions were, and also that Brown Brothers & Company, Bankers of New York, N. Y., were the depository of the said Committee in whose hands the said certificates had been placed.

Upon the coming in of this last report, the Act of March 6th, 1900, was passed by the General Assembly, by which the powers and duties of your Commission were very materially enlarged, and it was provided that if at least two-thirds of the certificates of 1871 outstanding in the hands of the public, and a majority of all the other certificates so outstanding, were deposited and placed subject to the control of your Commission upon the agreement that the creditors would accept whatever might be realized thereon from West Virginia in full settlement of their claims, then your commission was authorized, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of the State, to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the State as might, in the 68 judgment of your Commission and the Attorney General, be needful and proper to protect the interests of the State and bring about and carry into effect a settlement in the premises, but all the expenses in connection with any of the matters involved were to be borne by the certificate holders. A copy of this Act is for convenience of reference herewith filed.

At the time of the passage of this Act the Depositing Committee did not hold the two-thirds in amount of the certificates of 1871 required by the Act as a basis for negotiations or action by your Commission, but having acquired them later, the Committee, on the 18th of September, 1902, submitted to your Commission a proposition in writing, bearing date on that day, by which they tendered and placed subject to the control of your Commission, in accordance with the terms of said Act, $8,565,095.70 of the certificates of 1871, being more than the requisite two-thirds of these certificates outstanding, and $1,782,475.13 of the other certificates outstanding, being a majority thereof, upon the agreement and arrangement on the part of your Commission acting for the State of Virginia that they would enter into negotiations with the State of West Virginia or the constituted authorities thereof, for the purpose of effecting a settlement with that State with respect to said certificates, and that your commission would, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General, take such action as they might deem needful in the premises, any amount realized on such settlement to be accepted in full of all claims on said certificates as in said Act provided.

This proposition was accompanied by the statement of Brown Bros. & Co., the depository, showing that the certificates referred to were held by them, and it was stated in the proposition that upon its acceptance by your Commission it should constitute a contract between the parties to continue in force for three years, but subject to renewal or extension by the parties, and to such 69 amendment or modification as might be agreed on. It was on the day of its date accepted in writing by the unanimous action of your Commission, and the acceptance thereof duly endorsed thereon, and the same was approved by the Attorney General on September 29th, 1902; and a copy of the same showing its acceptance and the endorsements thereon is herewith filed and is referred to as showing in detail the action taken by your Commission. This agreement constitutes an arrangement with Virginia under said Act of March 6th, 1900, for obtaining a settlement with West Virginia and thus precluded the right which any certificate holder might under the terms of the depositing agreement, otherwise have had to withdraw his certificate after October 1st, 1902.

On December 3rd, 1902, a plan of settlement as provided in the said depositing agreement of July 28th, 1898, was formulated, approved and recommended by the Depositing Committee and Advisory Board created under said agreement, by which the provisions of the foregoing contract of September 18th, 1902, were adopted as included in their plan of settlement, with the right to the Depositing Committee to make such further contracts with the Virginia Commission as might be deemed needful to bring about a settlement with West Virginia under said joint resolution and Act of the Virginia Assembly.

This plan of settlement provided for a full compliance on the part of the Depositing Committee with the terms of said joint resolution and Act, and clothed the Committee with ample powers to act in the premises, and notice of it was duly published in New York and London, as required in the agreement of July 28th, 1898, so as to afford opportunity to any dissenting depositor of certificates to give notice of his unwillingness to accept the proposed settlement, which notice the agreement provided was 70 to be given within thirty days from the completion of the publication, but no such notice appears to have been given at any time by any depositor. The depositing agreement also provided that in the absence of such notification from a majority of the depositors the proposed plan should become effective and final, and that the declaration in writing of this fact by the Committee to the depository should be conclusive on this point; and such declaration in writing by the Depositing Committee to Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co. the depository, was accordingly so made in writing on December 13th, 1904. A copy of this plan of settlement and the certificates of the publication thereof, together with the said declaration in writing of the Committee, are all herewith filed and are referred to as parts hereof.

On December 14th, 1904, the amount of said certificates deposited with Brown Brothers and Company, as aforesaid, had increased to $11,607,298.64, of which $9,360,062.96 were those of 1871, and your Commission proposing to again attempt to open negotiations for a settlement with the legislature of West Virginia (which was then about to convene) it was thought advisable to enter into a contract by way of amendment to that of September 18th, 1902, by which the complete control of all these certificates should be placed in the hands of your Commission, and such additional agreement, bearing date December 14th, 1904, was accordingly entered into between the said Depositing Committee and your Commission, and approved by the Attorney General; and cotemporaneously therewith by a receipt or certificate bearing date on the same day, the said Brown Brothers and Company acknowledged and certified that they held all the certificates last aforesaid to the amount of $11,607,298.64 on deposit for and subject to the control and disposition of your Commission without reservation or condition of any kind. A copy of this agreement and receipt of December 14th, 1904, together with the Attorney General's approval, will be found filed herewith. By a subsequent communication of January 23rd, 1905, from Brown Bros. & Company to your Commission, it was shown that said deposits, so placed under the control of your Commission, had increased to $12,910,555.89, of which $10,639,776.42 were those of 1871, and a copy of this communication will also be found herewith filed.

Desiring, as above stated, to open communication with West Virginia, your Commission, on December 14th, 1904, appointed a sub-committee consisting of Messrs. Randolph Harrison, Chairman, H D. Flood, H. H. Downing and John B. Moon, who, together with the Attorney General, should be authorized to open negotiations with the proper authorities of West Virginia looking to a settlement of the matters at issue. This sub-committee endeavored to do this by the presentation of a memorial to His Excellency, A. B. White, Governor of the State of West Virginia, signed by the sub-committee and approved by the Attorney General, bearing date January 25th, 1905, a copy of which is herewith filed. This memorial was presented to the Governor of West Virginia at Charleston, W. Va.

by the Attorney General and the chairman of the sub-committee and was by him, on the 27th day of January, 1905, transmitted to the Senate of West Virginia by a special message to that body, but without any recommendation on his part, a copy of which message is also herewith filed.

It was arranged, however, by the Senate and House Committees on Finance of the West Virginia Legislature to give to the sub-committee a hearing upon the subject at Charleston on February 1st, 1905, at which hearing the Attorney General of Virginia, the chairman of the sub-committee and the chairman of your Commission attended, and the memorial of your Commission above referred to was read, and a full presentation was made by Mr. Harrison, chairman of the sub-committee, of the reasons why West Virginia should, at least, enter into negotiations in regard to a settlement in an address made by him to the Senate and House Finance Committees aforesaid. It was considered by your Commis- 72 sion that Mr. Harrison's address dealt with the questions involved in so clear and able a manner and showed so conclusively that it was both the right and duty of Virginia to ask for a settlement, that they caused it to be printed, and a copy of it is herewith filed.

The Legislature of West Virginia, however, failed and declined to enter into any negotiations or to empower any committee or other official to do so, but on the contrary passed the following resolutions: "Resolved, by the Legislature of West Virginia: That it is the sense of this Legislature that the State of West Virginia does not owe any part of the so called debt of Virginia, and that this Legislature is opposed to any negotiations whatsoever on that subject." Indeed your Commission are advised that resolutions of a similar import have been passed by all, or nearly all, of the Legislatures of West Virginia which have met since your Commission first communicated with them on the subject in 1896, thus showing a persistent and determined refusal on the part of West Virginia to pay any portion of what they are bound for on account of the debt of the original State, or to enter into any accounting or negotiations whatsoever on the subject.

The deferred certificates of 1871 issued by the State of Virginia are in the following form:

"Copy of Certificate under Act of March 30, 1871.

"COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

"No. —.

"TREASURER'S OFFICE, RICHMOND, VA.

"This is to certify that there is due unto —— —— heirs, executors, administrators or assigns $—, being one-third of bond surrendered under the provisions of an Act approved March 30th,

1871, entitled, 'An Act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt,' namely, Bond No. —, with interest, amounting to $—. Payment of said one-third with interest thereon 73 at the rate of six per cent. per annum will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the States of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to the public debt of the State of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment, and the State of Virginia holds said bonds so far as unfunded in trust for the holder hereof or his assigns.

"In testimony whereof this certificate has been signed by the Treasurer and countersigned by the Second Auditor, as provided by law.

"——— ———.

"Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Virginia

"— — ———.

"Second Auditor of Virginia."

So it would appear that if the contention of West Virginia is correct, the responsibility that attaches to the issuing of these certificates must rest with Virginia alone and West Virginia be responsible for nothing in connection with the debt of the original State.

By a recent enactment of the State of South Dakota suit was authorized against any state whose over-due bonds might be donated or deposited in her treasury, and under this law a suit was brought by the South Dakota and judgment given against North Carolina in the Supreme Court of the United States upon some past due bonds of the latter state as see the case of South Dakota vs. North Carolina, 192 U. S. Reports, 286,—and a like statute has lately been enacted by the State of New York authorizing similar suits. Your Commission are informed that such suits have lately been proposed against the State of Virginia under these statutes upon the certificates of 1871 and have only been restrained and prevented by the prospect of some definite action on the part of Vir- 74 ginia.

So your Commission were confronted with the alternative of either a suit by Virginia as plaintiff on these certificates with indemnity to her against liability as proposed by the Depositing Committee, or a suit against her without any such indemnity, and your Commission had no doubt as to the safe and proper course to pursue, especially as Virginia herself holds through the agency of her Sinking and Literary funds $2,578,518.68 of the certificates of 1871 and $166,943.33 of the certificates of other classes which would be entitled to their distributive share in whatever may be realized from West Virginia.

dorsed thereon on September 9th, 1905, extended to December 1st, 1905; and on the 24th day of November, 1905, a final contract was drawn up and entered into between your Commission and the Depositing Committee. This last contract was annexed to that of December 14th, 1905, as an extension and enlargement thereof, it having been provided in all of said contracts that they might be extended, modified and changed by the act of the parties.

A copy of said last contract of November 24th, 1905, annexed to that of December 14th, 1904, together with the extensions aforesaid and the approval of the Attorney General thereon endorsed, are herewith filed. It will be seen from said last contract that the reasons are therein set forth which led the Commission to the conclusion that no alternative remained in the premises except a suit against West Virginia; and they accordingly by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General undertook to bring such suit and the Depositing Committee agreed as provided in said Act of March 6th, 1900, to accept the amount recovered in such 75 suit or the adjudication therein or any amount realized by your Commission on a compromise with West Virginia in full of all claims on the certificates deposited.

This contract also further provides that all certificates thereafter deposited with Brown Brothers and Company should be included thereunder, and that your Commission should have complete control of all certificates so deposited; and a further and additional receipt or statement was accordingly given your Commission by Brown Brothers and Company bearing date January 4th, 1906, showing that since their statement and receipt of December 4th, 1904, additional certificates to the amount of $1,566,136.77, of which $1,491,231.13 were those of 1871, had been deposited with them and were subject to the control and disposal of your Commission making total deposits to that date $13,173,435.31, of which $10,851,294.09 were those of 1871. This last statement was verified by the oath of William Gerard Vermilye, cashier of Brown Brothers and Company, attached thereto; and on January 5th, 1906, your Commission caused all of these certificates to be removed from the custody of Brown Brothers and Company and placed on deposit for your Commission and subject to their order with the Central Trust Company of New York, N. Y., whose acknowledgment of the receipt thereof stated that the certificates were held on deposit for and subject to the order, control and disposal of your Commission, and the keys to the boxes containing said certificates were delivered to the Secretary of your Commission—Copies of this last named statement of Brown Brothers and Company, with the affidavit of the said Vermilye attached, and of the receipt and acknowledgment of the Central Trust Company are herewith returned.

Your Commission caused these certificates to be removed from Brown Brothers and Company, not from any want of confidence in them, because your Commission have every reason to believe them to be entirely responsible, but because it was deemed 76 best to place the certificates in the hands of some custodian who never had any connection with the Depositing Committee, and who would be responsible to your Commission alone in connection therewith.

To recapitulate, your Commission will say that the whole amount of the deferred certificates outstanding is $18,227,153.60, as shown in the statement of the Second Auditor, John G. Dew, dated September 17, 1902, and herewith returned, which statement shows also the different classes of certificates.

Of the certificates of 1871, there are in all $15,281,970.47, of which $2,578,518.68 are held by the State through the Sinking and Literary funds, leaving outstanding in the hands of the public $12,703,451.79; and of this last amount there have been deposited with your Commission $10,851,294.09, as above stated.

Of the other certificates there are in all $2,845,183.13, of which the Literary Fund holds $166,943.33, leaving in the hands of the public $2,678,239.80, and of this last amount there have been deposited with your Commission $2,322,141.32 as above stated.

It thus appears that your Commission hold more than five-sixths of all the certificates of 1871 outstanding, and about six-sevenths of all the others outstanding.

It will be noted that since the first agreement of Sept. 18, 1902 was entered into the certificates deposited with Brown Brothers and Company have increased from $10,347,570.83 to $13,173,435.41, which are now in the hands of your Commission; and there is reason to believe that this amount will be still further increased upon the institution of the proposed suits.

AGREEMENT.

This agreement between John Crosby Brown, George Coppell, J. Kennedy Tod and Clarence Cary, herein styled "The 78 Committee," parties of the first part, and such holders of the certificates herein mentioned as deposit hereunder, parties of the second part.

Whereas, the present State of Virginia enacted laws providing for issuing certificates for one-third of the debt of the original State, and more than $12,000,000 of such certificates recite:

"That payment will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the States of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to the public debt of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment."

And Whereas, it is believed that West Virginia's proportion of said debt, if ascertained as provided by the Ordinance under which Virginia was divided, is less than the amount of the certificates which have been issued by Virginia; and it is considered that, under such circumstances, neither State should, or will, incur any obligations respecting said debt unless its legislature has an undoubted guarantee that substantially all of the certificates will be promptly surrendered in exchange for whatever amount West Virginia agrees to pay and the creditors of West Virginia may agree to accept.

Witnesseth:

1st. The following gentlemen shall constitute an Advisory Board in this behalf, to-wit: Thomas F. Bayard, W. Pinkney Whyte, Edward J. Phelps and George G. Williams.

The function of said Board is to examine such plan of settlement as may be proposed by the Committee, representing the holders of the certificates, and submitted to them in accordance with this agreement, and to state their recommendation thereof of the contrary.

Said board may add to their number, and any vacancy may be filled by the remaining members. 79

2d. The function of the Committee is:

(a.) To bring about the deposit, under this agreement, as far as may be practicable, of said certificates, or of the trust receipts heretofore issued to represent them.

(b.) To formulate a plan of settlement, and after it has been recommended by the Advisory Board, cause the same to be published and submitted to depositing creditors for their acceptance as herein provided.

(c.) To act as agent of the depositing creditors in carrying out the purposes of this agreement.

(d.) The Committee shall appoint one or more depositories to receive said certificates or trust receipts, and issue therefor its proper receipt.

Subject to the restrictions herein, the Committee shall have power to perform any act to accomplish a settlement, and this includes power to make arrangements with either Virginia or West Virginia to insure the prompt surrender of all or any of the certificates in exchange for such amount as West Virginia may pay and her creditors agree to accept, and also includes power to execute, in behalf of the depositing creditors, any release or acquittance which will exclude any demand on Virginia beyond the amount she may receive from West Virginia; provided that no settlement shall be concluded until it has been recommended by the Advisory Board, and has also been submitted to creditors and accepted as follows, to-wit:

(1.) As soon as a plan of settlement has been recommended by the Advisory Board, the Committee shall, before proposing it to the State, advertise for at least twice a week for three weeks in two of the newspapers published in New York City and London, that a plan of settlement has been formulated, and notifying parties in interest where said plan may be obtained in said cities without cost.

(2.) If, within thirty days after the first publication of said advertisement holders of a majority of the face value of the deposited certificates notify the Committee, in writing, either directly or through any depository, of their unwillingness to accept the proposed settlement, then said settlement shall not be consummated. If the Committee is not so notified within said thirty days, then it shall be assumed that the proposed plan, being satisfactory to a majority, is accepted by all the depositing creditors, and it shall be offered to said States or either of them to be carried into effect by appropriate legislation.

(3.) After a plan of settlement has become effective (of which fact the declaration in writing of the Committee to the several depositories shall be conclusive), each depository shall, in the manner directed by the Committee, surrender to either State, as may be necessary, any or all of the certificates deposited with it, and receive in exchange therefor the amount or kinds of securities called for by the plan of settlement.

The amount so received in settlement shall be immediately delivered to depositing creditors, in accordance with the terms of settlement.

The Committee may arrange for the purchase and sale of such fractional interests as may be necessary to equalize distribution.

(4.) Each depositor shall, when he receives his new bonds, in settlement, pay to the depository, for account of the Committee, such a commission as the Committee may assess for the charges and expenses of settlement, including the compensation of the Committee, Counsel and Advisory Board, but such assessment shall in no event exceed five per cent. in cash on the par of any certificate deposited under this agreement.

If the Committee decide at any time that a settlement satisfactory to holders cannot be promptly effected, they may publish a notice requiring holders to pay so much of twenty cents per $100 of certificates as may be necessary to reimburse the expenses actually incurred by the Committee. Any certificate, assessment on which is not paid within six months after such notice has been published twice a week for three consecutive weeks in two of the newspapers in New York and London, may be sold by the Depository and the proceeds, after paying its assessment, held for the holder of its corresponding receipt.

Any certificate may be withdrawn from deposit at any time after October 1, 1902, upon payment of its pro rata of expenses, not to exceed twenty cents per $100 of certificates, unless a settlement has been previously arranged, or unless an arrangement has been made with Virginia for obtaining a settlement with West Virginia.

(5.) The Committee may add to their number, and any vacancy may be filled by the remaining members. By unanimous consent of the members of the Committee any member may act by proxy.

In testimony whereof, the Committee have hereto set their hands this 28th day of July, 1898.

An act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the portion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia properly to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises. 82

Approved March 6th, 1900.

Whereas the General Assembly of Virginia has heretofore passed certain acts with respect to the settlement of her public debt as follows, to-wit:

First. An act entitled an act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt, approved March thirtieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one.

Second. An act entitled an act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt, approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

Third. An act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and

Fourth. An act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two; and

Whereas in each of said acts provision is made for issuing to creditors of the original State of Virginia who should accept the new bonds provided for by said several acts, certificates 83 for such proportion of the obligation—surrended by them as was deemed proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia—to-wit: one-third of the amount of said obligations, of which certificates this State holds a large amount, through the agency of the commissioners of its sinking fund and literary fund; and

Whereas the General Assembly is required by the constitution of Virginia to provide by law for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the debt of the original State of Virginia properly to be borne by West Virginia, but no such adjustment has ever been had; and

Whereas it appears that while Virginia has satisfactorily settled the two-thirds of the original debt which she assumed, yet it is possible that complications will arise with respect to said certificates which will render it desirable that she should endeavor to secure an adjustment thereof upon terms which will protect herself, but will work no injustice to West Virginia, and thus finally dispose of the only question remaining unsettled in connection with said debt; now, therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the commission created and appointed under a joint resolution of this General Assembly entitled a joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia properly to be borne by West Virginia, for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same, approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, be, and said commission hereby is, authorized to receive and take upon deposit the certificates aforesaid or have the same otherwise placed or held on deposit subject to their control upon an agreement and contract on the part of the holders of said certificates that if the said commission will secure a settlement with 84 West Virginia with respect to said certificates the said holders of said certificates so deposited will accept the amount realized on such settlement from West Virginia on said certificates as a full settlement of all their claims thereunder.

amount of all the other certificates aforesaid shall be so deposited or placed subject to the control of the said commission upon the agreement and contract aforesaid, then the said commission shall be authorized and empowered by and with the advice and approval of the attorney-general of Virginia to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the state as may in the judgment of said commission and attorney-general be needful and proper to protect the interests of the state and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid. All the expenses involved in connection with any of the matters aforesaid shall be borne by the certificate holders, as provided in the joint resolution aforesaid, and the state shall not be subjected to any expense on that account.

3. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Proposal. 85

To the Virginia Commission as constituted under a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia approved March 6, 1894, and the act of the said General Assembly approved March 6, 1900:

Whereas your Commission was constituted as set forth in said joint resolution and act of Assembly for the purpose of negotiating and bringing about a settlement with the State of West Virginia with respect to the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia and in connection with which the present State of Virginia has issued certain certificates under four acts of its General Assembly, approved, respectively March 30th, 1871, March 28th, 1879, February 14th, 1882, and February 20th, 1892.

And whereas your commission was, under the said act of March 6, 1900, further authorized to receive and take upon deposit the certificates aforesaid, or to have the same otherwise placed or held on deposit subject to your control, upon the agreement and contract on the part of the holders of said certificates that if your commission would secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates, the said holders of said certificates, so deposited, would accept the amount realized on such settlement from West Virginia as a full settlement of all their claims thereunder; and said act further provided that if at least two-thirds of the amount of the said certificates issued under said act of 1871, (exclusive of those held by the State through the agency of the Board of Education and the sinking fund commissioners) and at least a majority in amount of all the other certificates should be so deposited or placed subject to the control of your commission upon the agreement and contract aforesaid, then your commission should 86 be authorized, by and with the approval of the Attorney-

General of Virginia, to take action in the premises as might be needful to protect the interest of the State and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid.

And whereas by a certain agreement of July 28th, 1898, a committee on behalf of the holders of the said certificates was constituted to bring about the deposit, as far as practicable, of said certificates in such depository as the committee should appoint with powers in the committee to act as agent of the certificate holders so depositing in bringing about a settlement of their claims upon such plan, as might be recommended by the Advisory Board named in said agreement and as should become effective thereunder; it being further stated in said agreements that all the said certificates so deposited would be promptly surrendered in exchange for whatever amount West Virginia might agree to pay and the creditors of West Virginia might agree to accept as aforesaid.

And whereas more than two-thirds in amount of all the said certificates of 1871, outstanding as aforesaid, to-wit, $8,565.095.70 and a majority of all the other certificates aforesaid, to-wit, $1,782,-475.13, have been duly deposited with said committee and are in custody of Brown Brothers & Company, Bankers of New York City, N. Y., the depository named by said Committee, and are held subject to the control of the said committee under the said agreement, so that the same can be duly placed and held subject to the control of your commission in accordance with the said agreement and in pursuance of such plan of settlement as is now proposed or as may hereafter become effective.

In view of the premises the undersigned, the committee aforesaid do now hereby tender and place subject to the control of your commission all the aforesaid certificates, so held on deposit, upon the agreement and arrangement on the part of your commission, acting for the State of Virginia under the said joint resolu- 87
tion and act of Assemby aforesaid, that your commission will enter into negotiations with the State of West Virginia or the constituted authorities thereof for the purpose of effecting a settlement with West Virginia with respect—the said certificates in accordance with the said agreement of July 28th, 1898, and in accordance with such plan of settlement as is now proposed or as may hereafter become effective; and that your commission will by and with the advice and approval of the said Attorney General take such action as they may deem needful in the premises; and in event such a settlement is so made, then it is hereby agreed that the amount realized thereon shall be accepted in full satisfaction of all the claims of the certificate holders thereunder and the undersigned Committee will surrender to your commission, in exchange for such amount the certificates aforesaid so deposited.

If this proposal be accepted by your commission, the same shall constitute an arrangement and contract with the State of Virginia for obtaining a settlement with West Virginia and the same shall continue binding upon the undersigned committee and upon the holders of said certificates so deposited for the period of three years next ensuing from the date hereof for the purpose of allowing time for a settlement aforesaid; and the same shall be subject to renewal and extension for such further time as may be agreed upon and to such modification and amendment as may be agreed upon, and shall apply to and include any and all such certificates as aforesaid as may hereafter be deposited with and held by the said Committee under said agreement of July 28th, 1898.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN CROSBY BROWN, Chairman.

Richmond, Va. September 18th, 1902.

The undersigned, Brown Brothers & Company, Bankers of New York City, N. The above action of the Virginia Debt Commission is approved Sept. 29th, 1902.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,

Attorney General of Virginia

Plan for the Settlement of the West Virginia Debt.

Under an agreement of July, 1898, a Committee was constituted for the purpose of assembling the Virginia deferred certificates, with certain powers and functions as in the agreement specified, and by the same agreement an Advisory Board was constituted whose functions were also specified in the agreement.

In pursuance of this agreement, a certain plan of settlement was, on the 21st day of June, 1899, formulated and recommended by the Committee and Advisory Board, which among other things, contained the following provision:

"The Committee may surrender to either State (Virginia or West Virginia) any of the deposited certificates and receive in full satisfaction therefor their pro rata of such an amount in State Bonds or cash as may be agreed upon between the Committee and the representatives of Virginia or West Virginia, as the maximum amount which West Virginia will assume on account of her proportion of the debt of the original State."

Since the date last named the General Assembly of Virginia, on the 6th day of March, 1900, passed an Act authorizing a commission which had been appointed and constituted on her behalf in the premises, by and with the advice and approval of her Attorney General, to take such action and institute such proceedings as might, in the judgment of the Commission and Attorney General be needful and proper to bring about and carry into effect a settlement of said certificates; but it was further provided in this Act that such action should be taken only in the event that at least two-thirds of all the certificates of 1871 (exclusive of those held by the State) and a majority of all the other certificates, should be deposited with or placed subject to the control of the Commission upon an agreement on the part of the holders of such certificates that if the Commission would secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates, they would accept the amount realized from West Virginia on such settlement in full of all their claims thereunder. On the 18th of September, 1902, the Committee held 90 on deposit $8,565,095.70 of the certificates of 1871, being more than two-thirds thereof, (*) as above stated, and $1,782,457.13 of all the other certificates, being a majority thereof; and the Committee accordingly on that day entered into a contract with the Virginia Commission, by which it was stipulated that the said certificates should, for the period of three years, be held subject to the control of the Commission upon the agreement and arrangement on the part of the Commission that they would enter into negotiations with the state of West Virginia for the purpose of effecting a settlement with respect to said certificates, and would by and with the advice and approval of said Attorney General, take such action as they might deem needful in the premises; the amount realized on such settlement to be accepted in full of said certificates as above stated, which contract was duly approved by the Attorney General of Virginia on September 29th, 1902.

In view of this Act of the Virginia Assembly, and of the recent action taken thereunder, it is deemed desirable to make the plan of settlement heretofore recommended, more definite with respect to the matters now involved; and to this end the following is hereby formulated, approved and recommended by the Committee and the Advisory Board by way of supplement and addition to the original plan:

I. The above named committee shall pledge or deposit the certificates now or hereafter received under the agreement of July 28, 1898, with the Virginia Commission, in conformity with the Act of March 6, 1900, for the purpose of taking such action and instituting such proceedings, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney-General of Virginia as may be deemed needful to bring about and carry into effect a settlement as in said Act provided; such pledge or deposit to be for such length of time as may be agreed on; and the said agreement of September 18, 1902, shall continue in force for the period therein specified; and the Committee may enter into such further agreements with the said Commission as may be deemed needful to bring about a settlement in the premises.

II. In the event that no settlement shall be effected by the Virginia Commission either under the agreement of Sep- 91 tember 18, 1902, within the period therein specified, or under any other agreement which may be entered into between the Committee and the said Commission within such time as may be limited therein, the Committee may, after any and all such agreements with the said Commission shall have expired, take such other and further proceedings and make such other and further agreements and settlement in the premises as the Committee may deem judicious.

III. The Committee shall be authorized to make such disposition by pledge, sale or otherwise, of the certificates, now or hereafter deposited, under the agreement of July 28, 1898, as may be necessary to carry into effect any proceedings taken and any agreements or settlements made by them as above stated, with or through the said Commission or otherwise, or for the payment of expenses now or hereafter to be incurred, whether a settlement is effected or not, not to exceed, however, the limit fixed by said agreement, and may give such release and acquittance as may be necessary to that end.

IV. The amount realized on or the proceeds of any such settlement, after deducting proper charges under the agreement of July 28, 1898, shall be apportioned and distributed among the different certificate holders in such manner and according to such percentages as may be ascertained and established for the different classes of certificates by a tribunal to be constituted as follows as follows; one member thereof to be appointed by the Committee, one member by the Advisory Board, and the third by the two so appointed; and if it be impracticable in the judgment of such tribunal to distribute in kind any bonds or securities which may be received in any such settlement, then the same may be sold and converted into money for the purposes of such distribution. If a vacancy occur in such tribunal the same shall be filled by the remaining members.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA, January 27, 1905. 99

To the Honorable President and Members of the State Senate:

GENTLEMEN: The accompanying papers after oral statements had been made to me by a Committee representing the State of Virginia, consisting of Hon. Randolph Harrison, Chairman, Col. Joseph Button, Secretary, and Hon. William A. Anderson, Attorney-General of that State, were duly presented to me for transmission to the Legislature of West Virginia.

The papers consist of an address or statement of the Committee, representing the Commission appointed by the State of Virginia "to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia" and of a copy of the Act of March 6th, 1900, of the State of Virginia, enlarging the powers and duties of said Commission.

I deem it my duty to transmit these papers for your information.

Respectfully yours, ALBERT B. WHITE, Governor.

The papers accompanying the communication of the Governor are as follows:

To His Excellency A. B. White, Governor of the State of West Virginia:

SIR: Under and by virtue of a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, approved March 6th, 1894, a commission consisting of Hons. Taylor Berry, H. T. Wickham, H D. Flood, John B. Moon, Randolph Harrison, H. H. Downing and William F. Rhea was continued for the purpose of opening negotiations with the State of West Virginia looking to the 100 adjustment of the proportion of the debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and by a communication bearing date on the 7th day of January, 1895, from the Hon. Chas. T. O'Ferral, then Governor of Virginia, the Honorable William A. MacCorkle, then Governor of West Virginia, was informed of this fact.

Since the date last named the Honorable Taylor Berry has departed this life, and Honorable J. Thompson Brown has been made a member of the Commission in his stead. And by an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved March 6th, 1900, the powers and functions of the Commission have been materially changed and enlarged, as will be seen by an inspection of said act, a copy of which is herewith submitted.

It will be observed that under the provisions of this act the Commission acting by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, is authorized to make a final settlement and adjustment with West Virginia with respect to the debt of the original State, provided at least two-thirds in amount of the securities known as Virginia Deferred Certificates issued under the Virginia Act of 1871, and a majority of all the other certificates issued by Virginia with reference to said settlement, exclusive of those held by the Literary Fund and Sinking Fund of Virginia, were deposited with or placed subject to the control of the Commission.

On the 14th day of December, 1904, there were so placed on deposit in the name of the Commission, and subject to the control and disposal, $12,910,555.89 of such certificates, embracing much more than two-thirds of those of 1871, as aforesaid, and a very large majority of all the others, so that the Commission is now authorized and empowered by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General, to make a settlement and adjustment with 101

West Virginia as provided in said act of March 6th, 1900.
The evidence of the deposit of the said certificates with the Commission as above stated is of course subject to inspection by Your Excellency and the proper authorities of West Virginia on request.

Looking to opening negotiations with West Virginia, the Commission at a meeting thereof, held in Richmond, Virginia, December 14th, 1904, authorized the appointment of a sub-committee, consisting of the undersigned Randolph Harrison, Chairman, H. D. Flood, H. H. Dowaing and John B. Moon, who together with the Attorney General of Virginia should invite the attention of Your Excellency to the unsettled matters between the two States and endeavor to negotiate a settlement of the same on some equitable basis to be agreed upon by the authorities of the two States.

The undersigned, the sub-committee so constituted, acting by and with the advice of the undersigned Attorney General of Virginia, therefore beg leave to call to the attention of Your Excellency the unsettled matters between the two States above referred to, growing out of the debt of the original State, and so respectfully request that they may be laid before the legislature of your State, now in session for their consideration: and that some action may be taken by the Legislature of your State for the purpose of entering into negotiations with the undersigned for a settlement between the two States of the matters aforesaid on some equitable basis either by the appointment of a committee to conduct such negotiations on behalf of your State, or by such other action as the legislature of your State may deem appropriate.

And the undersigned further beg in this connection to call attention to the following facts:

1. That when the State of West Virginia was formed, the original State of Virginia was deprived of more than one-third of its white population and about one-third of its territory, em- 102 bracing that portion of its territory which by reason of its mineral wealth has since proven to be the most valuable and productive part of the original State.

2. The ordinance of the convention which met at Wheeling in 1861, in providing for the formation of the State of West Virginia, further provided that: "The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties within said new State during the same period." The obligation to assume an equitable proportion of the said debt was again recognized in the first constitution of West Virginia, which was ratified by a vote of her people in 1863, and in which article eight, section eight provided as follows: "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, 1961, shall be assumed by this state; and the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a Sinking Fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years." The Constitution of West Virginia of 1872, contains these provisions, article ten, section four: No debt shall be contracted by this State except to meet casual deficits in the revenue to redeem a previous liability of the State," etc., etc., and section five specifies that "The power of taxation of the Legislature shall extend to provisions for the payment of the State debt and interest thereon," etc.

3. The public debt of the original State of Virginia, at the time of the dismemberment, amounted to something more than $30,000,000 no part of which has ever been borne by West Virginia, nor has any settlement or adjustment been made by West Virginia, either with the present State of West Virginia, or with the creditors of the Original State, to ascertain what her liability might be with respect to said debt, but the whole of it has been left for adjustment to the people of the present State of Virginia. 10?

4. It has been understood that West Virginia was not willing to negotiate directly with the creditors of the original State, and for that reason, and also in order to comply with the requirements of said act of March 6th, 1900, the deposit of said certificates of December 14th, 1904, was made with the Virginia Commission; so that the Commission with the Attorney General of Virginia are now authorized both on behalf of the State of Virginia, and also on behalf of a large majority of all certificate holders interested, to make a final settlement and adjustment of the matters above referred to, and thus finally conclude and dispose of questions which have been long left unsettled to the detriment, it is believed, of both States.

The undersigned only seek to present these matters to Your Excellency and through you to the Legislature of your State, because they believe it to be their duty to their own State to do so; and while no accounting or adjustment in the premises has ever been had by West Virginia, either with Virginia or the creditors of the original State, yet inasmuch as the matters involved are now presented by the undersigned, with new and enlarged powers on their part to make and carry into effect a complete and final settlement between the States, it is hoped that the suggestions herein contained will receive favorable consideration and action on the part of your Excellency and the Legislature of your State.

Respectfully submitted.

ADDRESS 104

On Behalf of the Virginia Debt Commission

BEFORE

THE JOINT COMMITTEES ON FINANCE OF THE WEST VIRGINIA LEGISLATURE.

In Relation to West Virginia's Contributive Share of the Debt of Virginia.

BY RANDOLPH HARRISON.
Charleston, West Virginia, February 1, 1905.

Mr. Chairman, and Gentlemen of the Finance Committees of the two Houses of the Legislature of West Virginia:

We had the honor a few days ago to present to His Excellency, the governor of West Virginia, a communication in behalf of the State of Virginia in relation to the unsettled matters between the two states, growing out of the debt created before the dismemberment of Virginia. We were officially advised that that communication had been transmitted to the legislature, and by it referred to the appropriate committees for further consideration.

We appear before you tonight in response to an invitation from the two finance committees of this body for the purpose of more fully stating the reasons which impel Virginia to invite your attention to this subject.

It gives us pleasure to avail ourselves of this opportunity to make known to you the object of our mission here.

In considering the question as to West Virginia's obligation to bear a just proportion of the public debt of Virginia, it will be necessary for us to review the origin of that debt, the manner in which and the purposes for which it was created, and West Virginia's relation to the subject.

Beginning with the year 1825 Virginia entered upon an extensive system of internal improvements. She had in mind the development of her western territory. Her statesmen had known for many years prior to that time that the territory now composing the state of West Virginia contained immense resources of 105 wealth, but there had been no definite ascertainment of that fact. They realized that it was essential, in order to ameliorate the condition of her people, who resided in that territory, and in the interest of all the people of Virginia, to develop that section, and establish communication between it and the Virginia seaboard. It was for this purpose that Virginia assumed the burden of a public debt. The development of this system of public improvements was progressive. During the first twenty-five years the debt had grown to about ten millions of dollars; between 1850 and 1861 it was increased by twenty millions of dollars. It is a matter of interest in passing to refer to the fact that the members of the Virginia legislature representing the counties that now compose this State unanimously voted to increase the debt. It is a notable fact that on several occasions it would not have been increased but for the united support of the delegates representing this section of the state, for the eastern and tidewater counties generally opposed the system of internal improvements which Virginia had undertaken. I do not mention this in any critical spirit; it was natural that the residents of this part of the state should want to develop their territory, and I am sure that any one similarly situated at that time would have been governed by the same considerations. The great argument advanced for the increase of the public debt was that, by the development of this section of the state by the construction of turnpikes, canals, bridges, railroads, etc., the wealth of Virginia would be so materially increased that she could bear the burden of the debt without feeling it. And so it came to pass that on the 1st of January, 1861, the public debt of Virginia amounted to about thirty millions of dollars, every dollar of which had been expended in works of internal improvements, the primary object of which was the development of this section of Virginia's territory.

On the 17th of April, 1861, the state of Virginia passed the ordinance of secession, withdrawing from the Union. Shortly thereafter, in the month of May, a number of citizens residing in the town of Clarksburg, met together and called a convention 106 to meet in Wheeling on the 11th of June following. That convention assembled in Wheeling, and organized what was known as the "Restored Government of Virginia." They ignored the government at Richmond, denounced it as revolutionary, and declared that it did not represent the state of Virginia. On June the 20th this convention elected Francis H. Pierpont governor of Virginia, and called a legislature together at Wheeling on July the 1st, 1861, which it declared to be the only true and lawful legislature of the state. This legislature, on July the 9th, elected two United States senators, and provision was made for the election of three congressmen. Both Houses of Congress admitted these members as from the State of Virginia.

A second convention assembled at Wheeling on the 20th of August, 1861. "The Restored Government of Virginia," having been previously organized, this convention, claiming to represent the state of Virginia, met for the purpose of "creating a new state," and on the 20th of August, 1861, it adopted an ordinance declaring it to be the sense of that convention that a new state should be formed "out of a portion of the territory of Virginia," and to embrace the counties specified in the ordinance.

This ordinance contained the following provision as the condition upon which the new state should be created.

"The new state shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all state expenditures within the limits thereof and a just proportion of the expenses of the state government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties within said new state, during the same period."

This was the first step towards the formation of the state of West Virginia, and in taking this step it was expressly stipulated that the old state would consent to her dismemberment only 107 on condition that the State should assume a just proportion of her public debt.

This convention authorized delegates to be elected to another convention to assemble in Wheeling on the 26th day of November, 1961, for the purpose of forming a constitution for the new state in accordance with the terms of the ordinance of August the 20th. Accordingly a third convention, claiming to represent Virginia, assembled in Wheeling on November 26th, 1861, and prepared a constitution for the State of West Virginia, the eighth section of the eighth article thereof providing as follows:

"An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accrued interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

This provision was adopted in pursuance of the binding ordinance of the organic convention of August the 20th, 1861; it not only pledged the new State to bear a just proportion of the public debt of Virginia, but required her Legislature to ascertain the same and provide for its payment. Does not that seem fair to you? It seems so to me. West Virginia had helped to create the debt, and reaped a share of its benefit. Do you not think in fairness and justice she ought to bear a just proportion of it, as she agreed to do?

On the 3rd day of May, 1862, this constitution was submitted to the people of the counties composing the new State of West Virginia for ratification, and it was duly reported as ratified by a majority of the voters at the polls.

On the 13th of May, 1862, the legislature of the "Restored 108
Government of Virginia" passed an act giving Virginia's consent to the formation of the new state, "under the provisions set forth in the constitution for the state of West Virginia." By that act Virginia expressly stipulated that her consent was given "under the terms stated in the constitution of the state of West Virginia," and this constitution, as we have seen, expressly provided that the new state would bear "its just proportion of the debt of the old state."

The "Restored Government of Virginia" instructed her representatives and senators in Congress to use their influence in furtherance of the passage of an act to create the state of West Virginia.

On the 31st day of December, 1862, the act was passed creating the state of West Virginia. The debates in Congress show that West Virginia would not have been admitted as a state but for her promise to bear a just proportion of the debt of the old state. A brief extract from the debates, when the bill providing for the admission of West Virginia was under consideration, will serve my purpose tonight:

MR. OLIN: "I desire to ask what will become of the bonds and other obligations which Virginia has issued or incurred by the recognition of a new state?"

MR. HUTCHINS: "I will answer my friend from New York. Here is the provision of the Constitution of West Virginia in reference to that matter: 'An equitable portion of the debt of Virginia prior to January the first, 1861, shall be assumed by this state, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable.'"

MR. CRITTENDEN: "* * * There is another question; the state of Virginia owes a large debt. How is this debt to be divided?"

MR. BLAIR: "The constitution framed by the convention of the people of the proposed new state binds the new state to pay its just proportion of the debt owed by Virginia prior to the ordinance of secession."

MR. CRITTENDEN: "I only knew that in this bill there was no provision made for a division of the said debt. The gen- 109 tleman tells us there is a provision made for it in the constitution, and I am satisfied with that. As it has been attended to, I have no more to say about it." (Extract from Congressional Globe, 37th Congress, quoted by Hon. J. M. Mason in pamphlet published by him on the subject of the Virginia debt.)

No one can doubt, therefore, that West Virginia owes her existence to her promise to bear a just proportion of the debt of the old state.

The act admitting West Virginia into the Union was signed, as I have stated, on the 31st day of December, 1862, and on June 20, 1863, in pursuance of the proclamation of the president, she took her place in the family of states.

I have given this sketch of the origin of the state of West Virginia in order to show that she is solemnly pledged to bear a just proportion of the debt of Virginia.

The constitution of West Virginia adopted in 1872 contains the following provisions relating to the public debt:

Article X, Sec. 4, provides that no debt shall be contracted except * * * to redeem a previous liability of the state; and sec. 5 provides that the power of taxation shall extend to provisions for the payment of the state debt and interest thereon. There was no public debt for West Virginia to provide for except her obligation to bear her just proportion of the debt of the state of Virginia.

The legislature of the "Restored Government of Virginia" on the 4th of February, 1863, passed an act transferring to the state of West Virginia all the property of the state of Virginia in the territory of the proposed new state, but on condition that West Virginia "should account for it in the settlement to be had with Virginia."

It is hardly necessary for me at this time to refer to the value of the property so transferred. Suffice it to say that by that act several millions of dollars worth of property was transferred to West Virginia; but the transfer was made on the condition that West Virginia should account for it in the settlement to be had 110 with Virginia.

The stock owned by Virginia in banks alone situated within the territory of West Virginia amounted to several hundred thousand dollars, and in respect to this stock West Virginia, in her Constitution of 1863, authorized the legislature to dispose of the same, but expressly provided that the proceeds of such sale should be applied to the liquidation of the public debt; thereby again recognizing in her fundamental law her obligation to share with Virginia the burden of her public debt.

So, gentlemen, I think you must agree with me that West Virginia's obligation to pay a just proportion of the debt of Virginia is the foundation of her political existence. It is an essential part of the very Constitution under which Congress admitted her into the Union. West Virginia has not always been unmindful of her obligation and duty in this respect. After the war an effort was made by the two states to ascertain by negotiation the fair proportion of the old debt which each should bear. In February, 1870, Virginia sent delegates to Wheeling, West Virginia, then the capital of this state, for the purpose of inviting the governor and the legislature of West Virginia to unite with her in making a statement and settlement of this account. But the governor of West Virginia did not think the time opportune to deal with the subject because the suit between the two states involving the two counties of Jefferson and Berkeley had not then been decided. Soon thereafter the governor of West Virginia sent commissioners to Virginia with authority to state the account, but at that time Governor Walker of Virginia did not feel that he had authority to appoint commissioners, because the legislature of Virginia had in the meantime passed an act to submit the question to arbitration, and so nothing came of this effort to settle the controversy.

I am aware of the fact that at that time some feeling existed on the part of the commissioners of West Virginia as to the manner in which they had been received by the authorities in 111
Virginia; but it is, of course, difficult to determine at this distance the cause for any misunderstanding between those commissioners and Governor Walker. The records only show that the Governor of Virginia felt constrained to decline to appoint commissioners for the reason stated, and renewed his invitation to the State of West Virginia to submit the question to arbitration.

Again in recognition of West Virginia's obligation to Virginia in this matter, the Governor of West Virginia had this to say in a letter dated May 16, 1881:

"The people of this State are willing and anxious to adjust with the mother State the amount of their liability on account of the public debt. The liability can be readily ascertained when the mother state is willing to state the account with us. The convention of the State of Virginia held in Wheeling on the 20th of August 1861, in giving its consent to the formation of this state out of the territory of the mother state, provided by Section IX of the ordinance passed that day as follows:

"The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the debt of Virginia prior to January 1, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all state expenditures within the limits thereof and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the state government since any part of said debt was contracted and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury from the counties included within the new state during the same period."

"The validity of this ordinance and the convention which passed the same has received the sanction of every department of the national government.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in a suit in that court instituted by the state of Virginia against West Virginia to recover jurisdiction over the counties of Jefferson and Berk- 112

ley, now a part of this state, adjudged said ordinance valid and binding. This state was admitted in pursuance of this ordinance. We admit it is binding authority, and hold ourselves ready at all times to settle with our mother state on that basis. Our obligation is to the mother state, and not to creditors of that state." (Extract from letter published by Hon. J. M. Mason in a pamphlet by him on the subject of the Virginia debt.)

So, gentlemen, you perceive that the public authorities of West Virginia in the past fully acknowledged the binding obligation resting on your state to bear a just proportion of the debt. That obligation is none the less binding now than it was then.

Nothing having resulted from the efforts of the two states to ascertain and adjust their respective liabilities, Virginia felt obliged to make some arrangement for the funding of her debt. The war had intervened and left her prostrate and impoverished, but still she recognized her duty to make a fair adjustment with her creditors who had purchased her bonds when her credit was higher than that of any other state, and to that end, on the 30th of March, 1871, her Legislature enacted what is known as the Funding Bill.

By the terms of this act Virginia assumed responsibility for two-thirds of the Debt. The act provided that a new bond should be issued for two-thirds of each old bond, and that a certificate should be given to represent the other one-third, to bear interest at six per cent., and await payment until Virginia and West Virginia had come to a settlement; and Virginia agreed to hold the old bond, so far as unfunded, in trust for the holder of said certificate.

The debt of Virginia at that time, with interest added, amounted to about forty-five millions of dollars, of which Virginia assumed as her just proportion, two-thirds, or about thirty millions of dollars. The form of the certificate issued, as provided by the Funding Bill was as follows:

Copy of Certificate under Act of March 30, 1871.

"COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA. 113

No. ——. $ ——.

TREASURER'S OFFICE, RICHMOND, VA.

"This is to certify that there is due unto —— —— heirs executors, administrators or assigns $—, being one-third of bond surrendered under the provisions of an act approved March 30th, 1871, entitled 'An Act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt,' namely, Bond No. —, with interest amounting to $—. Payment of said one-third with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the state of Va. and W. Va in regard to the public debt of the state of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment, and the State of Va. holds said bonds so far as unfunded in trust for the holder hereof or his assigns.

"In testimony whereof this certificate has been signed by the Treasurer and countersigned by the Second Auditor, as provided by law.

"____ ____,

"Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

"____ ____,

"Second Auditor of Virginia."

Under the foregoing act about fifteeen million dollars of these certificates were issued, and the old bonds were delivered up and are now held by Va., so far as unfunded, in trust to secure the payment of said certificates. These certificates do not in terms release Va from liability for their payment; they clearly import that there would be a settlement between Va. and W. Va., and that they would be paid when such settlement was had. Va. undoubtedly intended that when a settlement was had the certificate holders must accept W. Va.'s share in full payment of the unsettled one-third of the debt; but under the form of the certificate it might be contended that Va. was liable for the difference between the face of the certificates and the amount ascertained to be due by W. Va. Hence you will observe that it is of the greatest importance to Virginia to bring about, if possible, a settlement of this controversy, not only because it is a duty she owes the creditor, but especially for 114 her own protection.

In 1879 the legislature of Virginia passed another act for the funding of her debt by which provision was made the issuance of new bonds to take the place of those outstanding. With the bonds so issued certificates were issued for the unsettled one-third of the debt similar in form to the certificates of 1871, with this important difference, namely, that it was expressly stipulated in the certificate that its acceptance should be a full and absolute release of Virginia from all liability on account of said certificates. While the certificates issued under the act of 1879 imposed no liability, therefore, on Virginia they nevertheless provided that Virginia would aid the creditors holding such certificates, or certificates issued under previous acts, in negotiating with West Virginia for a friendly settlement of the claims of such creditors against the State of West Virginia.

In 1882 a third act for the funding of Virginia's debt was passed and under that act the certificates issued to represent the unpaid one-third of the debt expressly provided that they should be accepted without recourse on Virginia for their payment. These certificates, therefore, like those issued under the act of 1879, impose no liability on Virginia.

By act approved on the 20th of February, 1892, Virginia made a full and final settlement with her creditors and the certificates issued under this act, like those issued under acts of 1879 and 1882, expressly provided that they should be accepted without recourse on Virginia and hence they impose no liability on Virginia.

In as much as the unsettled one-third of the debt of the original state of Virginia is represented by the foregoing four classes of certificates, it becomes important to know the amount of those certificates outstanding.

The office of the second auditor of Virginia shows as follows in respect to these certificates: 115

Under the act of March 30, 1871, there were issued of these certificates	$15,281,970.47
Of these certificates Virginia holds in her sinking fund and in her literary fund	2,578,518.68
Leaving outstanding in the hands of the public of the certificates of March 30, 1871	$12,703,451.79

The foregoing certificates do not in terms release Virginia from liability for their payment.

Under the act of March 28, 1879, there were issued and are outstanding in the hands of the public, certificates amounting to	$ 564,258.87
Under the act of February 14, 1882, there were issued of these certificates	1,775,603.48
Of these certificates Virginia holds in her sinking fund	166,943.33
Leaving outstanding in the hands of the public	$1,609,660.15
Under the act of February 20, 1892, there were issued certificates outstanding in the hands of the public	$605,320.78

The three last mentioned classes of certificates were issued and accepted without recourse on Virginia.

The total issue of certificates, therefore, representing the unpaid one-third of the debt of the original state of Virginia is	$18,227,153.60
Of that amount Virginia holds in her sinking fund and in her literary fund	2,745,465.01
Leaving outstanding in the hands of the public of all classes of certificates	$15,481,691.59

A debt or claim of that magnitude cannot be disposed of by ignoring it, or attempting to waive it aside. The only way to dispose finally of it is to settle it.

Realizing the importance to her own interests of bringing about a friendly settlement of the matter, and in fulfillment of her promise to the creditors to aid in bringing it about Virginia, by resolution of March 6, 1894, appointed commissioners for the 116 purpose of negotiating with West Va. for an adjustment of the proportion of the debt proper to be borne by her.

In January, 1895, Governor O'Ferrell of Virginia communicated a copy of that resolution to Governor McKorkle of W. Va. No response was ever made by W. Va., but we learned through the press that your legislature declined to negotiate with Va. on the basis stated in the resolution creating her commission. We think the purpose and intent of that resolution was misunderstood, but at all events, nothing was done.

Subsequently, by an act of the General Assembly of Va., approved March 6, 1900, the powers of this commission were materially enlarged and the commission was authorized under the terms stated in the act to conclude a settlement with W. Va. or to take such action to that end as might be approved by the attorney general of Va. Under the provisions of this act the commission acting by and with the advice and approval of the attorney general of Va., is fully empowered to make final settlement with W. Va., provided at least two-thirds of the certificates of 1871 and a majority of all the other certificates outstanding in the hands of the public were deposited with or placed subject to the control of the commission. The requirements of that act have been complied with in a manner which far exceeded our most sanguine expectations, for there have been deposited, subject to the control of the commission, more than five-sixths of the entire issue of the certificates. This unexpected and desirable result has been brought about through the instrumentality of Brown Brothers & Co., bankers of New York, the agents of the certificate holders' committee. The standing of this house is doubtless known to you, or certainly to many of you; it does not engage in "frenzied finance," but on the contrary it is known as one of the most reliable and responsible firms in the financial world.

Through the agency of Brown Bros. Co. more than five-sixths of all the certificates outstanding in the hands of the public have been assembled and are held on deposit subject to the control of the Virginia commission under an agreement with the owners 117 of those certificates to accept whatever may be received from West Virginia in full discharge of the unsettled one-third of the debt of Virginia.

Of the certificates of 1871 outstanding in the hands of the public (amounting to $12,703,451.79) Brown Bros. & Company now hold $10,639,776.42.

Of the certificates of 1879 outstanding in the hands of the public (amounting to $564,258.87) Brown Bros. & Company now hold $440,642.61.

Of the certificates of February 14, 1882, outstanding in the hands of the public (amounting to $1,608,660.15) Brown Bros. & Company now hold $1,285,680.55.

Of the certificates of February 20, 1892, outstanding in the hands of the public (amounting to $605,320.78) Brown Bros. & Company now hold $544,456.31.

The aggregate amount of all certificates held by Brown Bros. & Company is, therefore, $12,910,555.89.

The Virginia commission has full power and authority to deliver up those certificates as an entirety to be cancelled upon payment by West Virginia of whatever may be ascertained to be her just proportion of the debt of Virginia—be it much or little. We stand ready, of course, to exhibit the evidence of the deposit of those certificates with us to the proper authorities of West Virginia.

The contract under which these certificates are deposited subject to the control of the Virginia Commission, will expire in September 1905, unless, in the meantime, negotiations for a settlement, or some action looking to that end, have been undertaken.

At a meeting of the Virginia commission held in Richmond on December 14, 1904, a sub-committee was appointed who, together with the attorney general of Virginia, were requested to communicate these facts to the governor and legislature of West Virginia, and invite their co-operation in a friendly adjustment 118 and settlement of the account between the two states. Our visit here is in discharge of the duty assigned us. Do not imagine that Virginia has the slightest intention of meddling with the affairs of West Virginia, or of volunteering advice. She has ventured to bring the subject to your attention in compliance with her undertaking to the creditors, and especially because her own interests are involved. Virginia felt that she would be derelict in her duty to herself and in her duty to your state if she failed to bring to your notice the exceptional opportunity now presented to dispose finally of this vexatious question.

Is there any reason why West Virginia should not join Virginia in stating this account? I am sure, gentlemen, you cannot dissent from the proposition that your state is liable for some part of the debt, whatever the amount may be. As far as it is possible for a state to be committed by the solemn provisions of its organic law and by the repeated declaration of its public authorities, West Virginia is bound—bound in equity and good conscience—to bear whatever may be ascertained to be her fair proportion of the debt of Virginia. No account has ever been stated between the two states. How then can West Virginia declare that she owes no part of this debt until the account is stated? She is solemnly pledged to state this account. Ought she not to redeem this pledge? No state can refuse to do what is fair and right in respect to her public obligations and not suffer for it. We do not ask that West Virginia shall commit herself as liable in any specific amount. We make no claim against her for any definite sum. We do not know what a statement of the account will show; if it shows that West Virginia is not liable for any amount that will end the matter. We only ask that your state will through the proper authorities, unite with Virginia in stating the account between the two states in order that the question of her liability, if any, may be authoritatively ascertained. The 119 work of your commission will, of course, be subject to such action as West Virginia might deem proper in the premises.

Would any one of you, if a man thought he had an honest claim against you, be afraid to meet him and consider it with him? Then why should you hesitate to commit your state to the same course in this respect which you as an individual would not hesitate to take?

West Virginia has always taken the position that her liability on account of this debt was to Virginia and not to the creditors, and that her liability must be ascertained on the basis of the Wheeling ordinance. This ordinance not only committed West Virginia to bear her just proportion of the debt of Virginia, but states how the account shall be stated in order to ascertain the amount of the debt for which West Virginia is liable. We are ready to unite with you in stating the account on the basis of the Wheeling ordinance, or West Virginia may choose any other just and equitable basis, if she prefers, on which the account shall be stated, and we will abide by her choice. We have no interest whatever in this matter except to discharge our duty to our state by bringing about, if possible, a fair and final settlement of this controversy. Unless the two states can dispose of it we may confidently expect it to be referred to the courts for settlement, and in that event the decision of the court has already been plainly foreshadowed. In the case of Hartman v. Greenhow (decided October term, 1880), 102 U. S., page 672, the Supreme Court reviewed the legislation of Virginia in relation to her public debt, and in referring to West Virginia's liability for a portion of it the court, through Justice Field had this to say:

"It appears from the statutes to which we are referred—and we know the fact as a matter of public history—that prior to the late civil war Virginia had become largely indebted for moneys borrowed to construct public works in the state. The moneys were obtained upon her bonds, which were issued to an amount exceeding $30,000,000. Being the obligation of a state of large wealth, 120 which never allowed its fidelity to its promises to be questioned anywhere, the bonds found a ready sale in the markets of the country. Until the civil war the interest on them was regularly and promptly paid. Afterwards the payments ceased, and until 1871, with the exception of a few small sums remitted in coin during the war to London for foreign bondholders, or paid in Virginia in Confederate money, and a small amount paid in 1866 and 1867, no part of the interest or principal was paid. During the war a portion of her territory was separated from her, and by its people a new state, named West Virginia, was formed, and by the Congress of the United States was admitted into the Union. Nearly one-third of her territory and people were thus taken from her jurisdiction. But, as the whole state had created the indebtedness for which the bonds were issued, and participated in the benefits obtained by the moneys raised, it was but just that a portion of the indebtedness should be assumed by that part which was taken from her and made a new state. Writers on public law speak of the principle as well established that where a state is divided into two or more states, in the adjustment of liabilities between each other, the debts of the parent state should be ratably apportioned among them. On this subject Kent says: "If a state should be divided in respect to territory, its rights and obligations are not impaired; and if they have not been apportioned by special agreement, their rights are to be enjoyed and their obligations fulfilled by all the parts in common." (I Com., 26.) And Halleck, in speaking of a state divided into two or more distinct and independent sovereignties, says: In that case the obligations which have accrued to the whole before the division are, unless they have been the subject of a special agreement, ratably binding upon the different parts. This principle is established by the concurrent opinions of text writers, the decisions of the courts, and the practice of nations." (Internat. L., ch. 3, sec. 27.)

"In conformity with the doctrine thus stated by Halleck, both states—Virginia and West Virginia—have recognized in their constitutions their respective liability for an equitable proportion of the old debt of the state, and have provided that measures should be taken for its settlement. * * *

"The Constitution of West Virginia, which went into effect in 1863, declared that "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861," should "be assumed" by the state, and that the legislature should "ascertain the same as soon as practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years." (Art. 8, sec. 8.)

Virginia lost by the formation of the state of West Virginia one-third of her territory and more than one-third of her white population. To that extent she was deprived of possessions which belonged to her when the debt was contracted. Suppose fifty of the remaining counties of Virginia should decide to organize themselves into a new state to be called "Eastern Virginia;" would you say it was fair and right for them to do so and take the public property within their borders, and leave the remaining counties constituting the state of Virginia to bear the burden of a debt created for the benefit of the whole? The Supreme Court of the United States has, 121 as we have just seen, answered that question in the negative, and I am sure your sense of justice would impel you also to answer "No." In that event you could not justify West Virginia in declining to bear a just proportion of the debt of the mother state.

Another decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has an important bearing on the liability of the two states on account of this debt. I refer to the recent decision of South Dakota against North Carolina (decided February 1, 1904), 192 U. S., page 286.

North Carolina had issued certain bonds which were outstanding in the hands of purchasers. She declined to make provision for their payment, feeling that she was justified in that course. In order to test the liability of North Carolina a holder of a large amount of those bonds donated ten of them of the face value of $10,000.00 principal to the state of South Dakota, with the understanding that South Dakota, would institute suit against North Carolina to enforce payment. An individual cannot sue a state, but the right of one state to sue another is expressly preserved by the Constitution of the United States. South Dakota accepted the gift and instituted suit in the Supreme Court of the United States against North Carolina, and the court gave judgment against North Carolina for the amount of the bonds with accrued interest.

If when the contract under which we hold control of the certificates expires nothing has been done looking to a settlement, and those certificates should be released and restored to the owners, it may prove to be the opening of a veritable Pandora's box. Under the authority of the South Dakota-North Carolina case, the attempt might be made to enforce collection of this debt by donating some of the certificates of the issue of 1871 to a state on condition that a suit should be instituted against Virginia and West Virginia to compel the settlement of the account between them, and the payment of the liability apportioned to each one. We are reliably informed that the governor of one of the states has already 122 been approached with an offer to donate to his state $100,000.00 of those certificates on condition that he would cause such a suit to be instituted. He declined, but some other governor might not be influenced by as delicate sense of propriety.

We feel that these considerations should appeal strongly to you to unite with Virginia in the effort to make a friendly settlement of this matter. Surely the two states can make a far better settlement than the courts can make for them. If we do not take the matter in our own hands the only alternative is a settlement by compulsion.

Resolutions that we do not owe anything will not avail. The holders of a debt amounting to about fifty millions of dollars will not be satisfied with your statement or with ours that we do not owe it. Unless your state will join Virginia in the effort to dispose finally of this question, you may rest assured that, like Cæsar's ghost, it will meet you at Philippi. The unsettled one-third of this debt now amounts to about fifty millions of dollars. No one can say what the extent of West Virginia's liability will be if the controversy is settled in court, but I will venture the assertion that in a friendly adjustment, it is entirely probable that we can effect a settlement within one-tenth of that sum. In this connection I cannot forbear a reference to what Virginia has done towards bearing the burden of this debt. The records of the office of the second auditor of Virginia show the following amounts paid by Virginia on account of the public debt of the old state since January 1, 1861:

Amount of interest paid from January 1, 1861, to January, 1905		$34,551,642 85
Bonds now held in sinking fund	$1,111,500 00
Bonds paid off and cancelled	8,863,994 49
		9,975,441 49
Total of interest and bonds paid off		$45,527,134 34*
New bonds of Virginia issued for portion of debt funded and assumed by her		26,850,820 00
Total sum of principal and interest paid off and assumed and now carried by Virginia on account of the old debt		$72,377,954 34*

From the foregoing you will observe that the public debt of Virginia is now $26,850,820.00, and on this sum she pays an annual interest charge of $877,862.27. (Report of the second auditor of Virginia for 1904 in relation to the public debt.)

Do you not think that Virginia has borne her share of this common burden, especially in view of the trials and adversity through which she has passed? During four long years she withstood the shock of battle, and came out of that trying ordeal crushed, impoverished and dismembered. Then followed the night of reconstruction, when for five years she endured the bitterness and humiliation of military rule. But so soon as she regained control of her own affairs she met her creditors and, in spite of her poverty, endeavored to do her duty by them.

In adjusting her liability with her creditors and providing for its payment she has done all that she could do, and no more could be expected of her. The trials and sacrifices through which she has passed have left no trace of bitterness—least of all does she cherish any resentment against her youngest daughter. On the contrary, she rejoices in the wealth and power with which a benignant Providence has blessed you. She only appeals to you not to let pass the present golden opportunity to finally dispose of the only remaining question in connection with her public debt. She earnestly hopes that her suggestion will commend itself to your good judgment, and that your legislature will authorize the appointment of commissioners, with power to co-operate with us in stating the account between the two states. If, however, your action shall be 124 unfavorable, Virginia will feel that she has done her duty, and that responsibility for the consequences will not lie at her door.

In taking leave of you, gentlemen, I cannot refrain, on behalf of myself and associates, including the attorney general, an eminent citizen of my state, from expressing to you our sincere appreciation of the cordial reception accorded us here not only by His Excellency, your governor, but by your committees to-night. I can assure you that whatever may be the result of our mission we will recall with pleasure the considerate attention you have shown us.

Memorandum of agreement, made this 14th day of December, 1904, between the Depositing Committee of the securities known as the Virginia Deferred Certificates as constituted under the contract of July 28, 1898, and of which John Crosby Brown is Chairman, and Robert L. Harrison, Secretary, acting under the plan of settlement approved on December 3rd, 1902, by the Advisory Board referred to in the said contract, hereinafter referred to as the Depositing Committee, party of the first part, and the Commission constituted on behalf of the State of Virginia for the purpose of bringing about a settlement with the State of West Virginia with respect to said certificates as constituted and acting under the joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, approved March 6, 1894, and the act of said General Assembly, approved March 6, 1900, and of which John B. Moon is Chairman, and Joseph Button is Secretary, hereinafter referred to as the Virginia Commission, party of the second part: 125

Whereas, by an agreement entered into between the above parties on the 18th day of September, 1902, certain of the certificates aforesaid amounting in the aggregate to $10,347,570.85 were tendered by the Depositing Committee Aforesaid to the said Virginia Commission, and were placed subject to the control of the said Commission upon the agreement and arrangement on the part of the said Commission acting for the State of Virginia under the said joint resolution and Act of Assembly aforesaid, that the said Commission should enter into negotiations with the State of West Virginia or the constituted authorities thereof for the purpose of effecting with West Virginia a settlement with respect to the said certificates, in accordance with the said contract of July 28th, 1898, and in accordance with such plan of settlement as was then proposed or might thereafter become effective, and that the said Commission would, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, take such action as they might deem needful in the premises; and that in the event such a settlement was so made, then it was agreed that the amount realized thereon should be ac- 126

cepted in full satisfaction of all the claims of the certificate-holders thereunder, and that the said Committee would surrender to the said Commission, in exchange for such amount, the certificates so placed subject to the control of said Commission. And it was further specified in the said agreement of September 18, 1902, that the same should apply to and include all such certificates as might thereafter be deposited with and held by the said Committee under the said contract of July 28, 1898, and that the said agreement should constitute an arrangement and contract between the said Committee acting for the said certificate-holders with the State of Virginia for obtaining a settlement with West Virginia, and that the same should continue binding upon the parties and upon the holders of the certificates so deposited for the three years next ensuing from the date of the said agreement; that is to say, until the 18th day of September, 1905. And the said agreement further provided that the same should be subject to renewal and extension for such further time as might be agreed upon between the parties and to such modification and amendment as might thereafter be agreed upon; and,

Whereas, the said agreement of September 18, 1902, was approved by the Hon. William A. Anderson, Attorney General of Virginia, by his endorsement at the foot thereof on the 29th day of September, 1902; and

Whereas, the provisions of the said agreement last named were fully approved and recommended on the 3rd day of December, 1902, by the Advisory Board referred to in the said contract of July 28, 1898, as appears by the plan of settlement made and approved by the said Committee and the Advisory Board and bearing date December 3rd, 1902, of which plan of settlement publication was duly made as provided in the said contract of July 28, 1898, and no notification whatsoever was given to the said Committee, either directly or through any depository, by any of the holders of the deposited certificates, of their unwillingness to accept the proposed settlement as set forth in the said plan so published and more 127 than thirty days having elapsed after the said publication was completed, and the said plan of settlement having therefore become complete; and of this fact the declaration in writing of the Committee having been duly made to the only depository under the said contract, to wit Messrs. Brown Brothers & Company, of 59 Wall Street, New York, the said plan of settlement thereupon became effective and final; and

Whereas, it is now proposed under the terms of the said agreement of September 18, 1902, and by way of modification thereof as therein provided, to place more fully and completely under the control of the said Virginia Commission all the certificates aforesaid which had up to that date been deposited, and also all thereafter deposited so that the said Virginia Commission may be given full and complete control of all the said certificates in their proposed negotiations with the State of West Virginia, and also in any action and proceeding which may be taken or instituted by the said Virginia Commission by and with the advice and approval of the said Attorney General under the said Act of the General Assembly of Virginia March 6, 1900:

Now therefore this agreement witnesseth: that the aforesaid Depositing Committee does hereby authorize and direct their said Depository Messrs. Brown Brothers & Company to issue to the Virginia Debt Commission a certificate that all the aforesaid Virginia Deferred Certificates which have up to this time been deposited with the said Brown Brothers and Company under the said depositing agreement of July 28, 1898, and all which may hereafter and before the 18th day of September, 1905, be so deposited with the said depository are held by the said depository on deposit for and subject in all respects to the control and disposition of the said Virginia Commission in pursuance on the said joint resolution and Act of the General Assembly of Virginia; and to this end the said Messrs. Brown Brothers & Company are authorized and instructed to issue such certificate to the said Virginia Commission in such 128 form as to show that all of the certificates aforesaid have been received and are held by them on deposit for the said Virginia Commission and subject to the control and disposal of the said Commission:

But this agreement shall continue in force only until the said 18 day of September, 1905, when the said certificate issued by the said Brown Brothers and Company to the said Virginia Commission for the purpose of making a settlement with West Virginia as aforesaid shall be returned to the said Depositing Committee, unless a settlement shall have been before that time negotiated with West Virginia in pursuance of said contract of September 18th, 1902, or unless negotiations be then pending with the properly constituted authorities of West Virginia for such settlement upon some equitable basis which has been agreed to by said Commission and the authorities of West Virginia aforesaid. Provided, however, that it is fully understood and agreed that the time for continuing in force this agreement may be extended by the consent and agreement of the parties hereto indorsed hereon at the foot hereof, for such length of time and upon such conditions as the parties may hereafter specify; and this agreement may be changed, modified and amended with respect to the action and proceedings to be taken or instituted by the said Commission in the premises, as may hereafter be agreed upon by the parties and the indorsed as aforesaid, or as may be specified in a further and supplemental agreement between the parties.

In testimony whereof the signatures of the Chairman of the said Depositing Committee and of the Virginia Commission, attested by the respective Secretaries thereof, are hereunto affixed on the day and year first above written.

JOHN CROSBY BROWN, Chairman.
ROBERT L. HARRISON, Secretary.
JOHN B. MOON,
Chairman of Virginia Commission.
JOSEPH BUTTON, Secretary.

The foregoing agreement is hereby approved as having 129 been entered into by my advice and approval.
Dated December 14, 1904.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Attorney General of Virginia.

The foregoing agreement of December 14th, 1904, together 130 with the contract of September 18th, 1902, therein referred to, are hereby extended in all their provisions until December 1st, 1905, and they shall remain in full force until that date just as if December 1st, 1905, instead of Sept. 18th, 1905, had been the date originally named therein for their limitation, with the right of extension, enlargement and modification on or before Dec. 1st, 1905, in all respects as therein specified.

Given under our hands this 9th day of Sept. 1905.

JOHN CROSBY BROWN,
Chairman Depositing Committee.
ROBT. L. HARRISON, Secretary.
JOHN B. MOON,
Chairman Virginia Commission.
JOS. BUTTON, Secretary.

The above extension of the contracts above referred to is hereby approved this 9th day of September, 1905.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Attorney General of Virginia.

Upon the execution of the foregoing contract of December 131
14, 1904, hereto annexed, Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co., Bankers of New York, N. Y., the depository referred to in said contract, issued to the Virginia Commission therein named the certificate provided for in said contract, which was also in the form of a receipt and showed that Virginia deferred certificates of 1871 to the amount of $10,639,776.42 and certificates of other dates to the amount of $2,270,779.47 were held by said Brown Bros. & Co. on deposit for and subject to the control and disposal of said Commission; thus placing subject to the complete control and disposal of the Commission considerably more than two-thirds of the total of $12,703,451.79 of the certificates of 1871 outstanding and in the hands of the public, and a large majority of the total of $2,778,239.80 of the other certificates so outstanding.

Thereafter, in January and February, 1905, the Virginia Commission, through its properly constituted sub-committee acting with the Attorney General of Virginia, made to the Governor and Attorney General of West Virginia, and to the Finance Committees of the Legislature of that State, which was then in session, a full statement and presentation of the matters outstanding and unsettled between the two States in connection with the deferred certificates aforesaid, accompanied by an urgent plea on behalf of the State of Virginia that the Legislature of West Virginia would, at least, appoint a Committee or other public functionery with authority to take up the questions involved for the purposes of discussion and negotiation, but the Commission was again met, as it had been in a previous attempt to open negotiations on the subject, by an absolute refusal on the part of the authorities of West Virginia to treat on the subject at all thus leaving to the Virginia Commission and Attorney General of that State no possible means of 132 bringing about the settlement, which they are charged with the responsibility of making, except by a resort to the Court having jurisdiction of controversies between States.

Now, therefore, it is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the Depositing Committee, named as the party of the first part in the said foregoing contract of December 14th, 1904, and the Virginia Commission therein named as the party of the second part, the said Commission acting in this behalf by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, that in accordance with the provisions contained in the said foregoing contract and addendum thereto of September 9th, 1905, the same is hereby amended, modified and extended as follows, to wit:

1st. Neither the said foregoing contract of December 14th, 1904, nor the contract therein referred to between the same parties, bearing date September 18th, 1902, shall expire on the first day of December, 1905, but the same shall continue in force in all respects just as if no time limit had been named in either of said contracts, and this agreement shall be taken as a continuation, modification and extension of said contracts.

2nd. The certificate or certificates heretofore given by Brown Bros. & Co., the depository of the said Committee, to the said Virginia Commission, covering the deferred certificates aforesaid, shall be retained by the said Commission and shall remain in full force and effect without regard to time limit and the said Brown Bros. & Co. shall issue and give to the said Commission such other and further certificates and receipts in the premises, by way of amendment or in lieu of those already given or otherwise, as may be deemed needful or desirable in order to place said deferred certificates more completely and finally under the control and at the disposal of the said Commission for the purpose of carrying out this 133 agreement; and especially shall they give such certificates or receipts to cover all such Virginia deferred certificates as have been or may be deposited with them and not covered by certificates or receipts previously given to the Commission; and the said Virginia Commission are hereby given and invested with the full and complete control and right to dispose of all deferred certificates now or hereafter covered by or embraced in the receipts and certificates of Brown Bros. & Co., as aforesaid.

3rd. The said Virginia Commission hereby stipulate and agree, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, that, in their judgment, it is needful and proper, in order to protect the interest of the State and bring about and carry into effect a settlement in the premises, that a suit should be instituted in the name of the State of Virginia against the State of West Virginia in the Supreme Court of the United States asking for an adjudication and settlement by that Court of the matters aforesaid unsettled and undetermined between the two States, arising or growing out of the debt of the original State of Virginia before its dismemberment and on account of which said deferred certificates were issued, the same to be brought and instituted as provided in the Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, of March 6th, 1900, referred to in said contract of December 14th, 1904; and the said Virginia Commission acting by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of that State, do hereby undertake and agree that such a suit shall be brought against the State of West Virginia for the purpose of obtaining a settlement as aforesaid, as soon as the pleadings, papers and documents relating thereto can be conveniently and properly drawn up and prepared for presentation to the said 134

Court, which said suit shall be instituted, conducted and proceeded with in all respects in accordance with the provisions of the said Act of the General Assembly of Virginia and the Joint Resolution of the said General Assembly of March 6th, 1894, also referred to in said contract of December 14th, 1904; but the power to make and carry into effect a settlement and adjustment in the premises by agreement with West Virginia as to the deferred certificates placed subject to the control of the Commission as aforesaid, as provided in the previous contracts aforesaid, shall remain vested in the said Commission, notwithstanding the institution and pendency of such suit.

4th. And the Virginia Commission do further undertake and agree that, in accordance with the terms and conditions of the said Joint Resolution and Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, they will account for, pay over and deliver such amount, either in cash or securities, as may be realized from West Virginia through any settlement made by the said Commission with that State, either by means of an adjudication or recovery in said suit or otherwise, for or on account of the deferred certificates now or hereafter deposited and placed subject to their control as aforesaid, to the said Depositing Committee in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims under said certificates; and the said Depositing Committee agrees on behalf of the depositors of said deferred certificates so placed subject to the control of the said Commission and on behalf of those entitled to the benefit of said certificates as assignees of said depositors or otherwise to accept as aforesaid such amount, either in cash or securities, as may be determined or ascertained in any such suit to be due by, or as may be realized through any adjustment or settlement as aforesaid from the State of West Virginia on ac- 135 count of the said certificates and on account of the bonds represented by and mentioned in the said certificates respectively, in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims on account of said certificates and on account of the bonds therein mentioned, and to accept and take such adjudication against the State of West Virginia in full discharge and acquittance of all claims in the premises against the State of Virginia.

5th. It is further understood and agreed that if from any cause the said Commission shall fail or be unable to bring about such adjustment or settlement or to obtain a determination or ascertainment of the liability of West Virginia as hereinbefore provided for, then it shall be the duty of the said Commission to restore to the control of the said Depositing Committee all such deferred certificates as may have been placed subject to the control and disposal of said Commission as aforesaid.

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Your petitioner, the State of West Virginia, one of the United States of America, by William M. O. Dawson, Governor, and Clarke W. May, Attorney General, humbly prays leave to file the sworn demurrer herewith presented, to the bill of complaint in the above entitled cause.

It is humbly submitted that, by an examination of the bill of complaint in this cause, it will be observed that there is nothing in said bill contained showing a controversy between said Commonwealth of Virginia and said State of West Virginia justifiable in this court.

Wherefore, your petitioner humbly prays leave to file her said demurrer, and that a day may be fixed by your Honors for the hearing of the same.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The demurrer of the State of West Virginia, defendant above named, by William M. O. Dawson, Governor, and Clarke W. May, Attorney General of said State of West Virginia, to the bill of complaint of the Commonwealth of Virginia, complainant, by William A. Anderson, Attorney General of said Commonwealth of Virginia.

The defendant the State of West Virginia, above named, not confessing or acknowledging all or any of the matters and things in the said complainant's bill to be true in such manner and form as the same are set forth and alleged, or in any way or manner, demurs thereto, and for the cause of demurrer shows:

First: The jurisdiction of this Court does not extend to the character of demands, alleged in the bill in this cause, being in substance simple demands for money, and this Court could not enforce a judgment for money against one of the sovereign states of the Union of the United States in any way or manner.

Second: The bill on its face shows that the said Commonwealth of Virginia has no suable interest in the demands for money set out therein which would entitle her to the relief prayed for therein and that the said demands if recovered would be only for the benefit of certain individuals, who are the holders of the alleged evidences of debt mentioned in said bill.

Third: The bill on its face shows that so far as said Commonwealth of Virginia may have any ownership of any of such alleged evidences of debt, the acts of the Legislature of said Commonwealth, claimed by the said Attorney General thereof as authority to institute this cause, do not in fact authorize any suit therefor to be instituted, but only authorizes, if any authority at all is given, action on the part of the Commission in said bill mentioned and said Attorney General for the benefit and at the expense of the individuals in the bill and exhibits called "Certificate holders," which is in effect giving the use of the name of said Commonwealth to such "Certificate holders," for the purpose of attempting to collect their alleged private money demands against said State of West Virginia.

Fourth: The said bill does not sufficiently and definitely set out therein the alleged demands for money claimed therein, so that a complete and proper answer can be made thereto.

Wherefore, and for divers other good causes of demurrer in the said bill, this defendant demurs thereto and humbly demands the judgment of this Court whether she shall be compelled to make any further or other answer to the said bill, and prays to be hence dismissed with her costs and charges in the matter most wrongfully sustained.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

AMENDED DEMURRER.

The defendant, The State of West Virginia, by William M. O. Dawson, Governor, and Clarke W. May, Attorney General, of said State, not confessing or acknowledging all or any of the matters and things in the said complainant's bill to be true in manner and form as the same are set forth and alleged, or in any way or manner, presents this amended demurrer thereto, and for cause of demurrer shows:

First. That it appears by said bill that there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff and a misjoinder of causes of action. The said bill is brought by the Commonwealth of Virginia to recover debts alleged to be due to her in her own right from the defendant for property and money alleged to have been transferred and delivered to the defendant under certain acts of the legislature passed in 1863, and also, as trustee for the owners of certain certificates mentioned and described in said bill, to have an accounting to ascertain and declare the amount claimed to be due from the defendant as her just proportion of the public debt of the plaintiff prior to the first day of January, 1861.

Second. That this court has no jurisdiction of either the parties to or the subject-matter of this action, because it appears by the said bill, that the matters therein set forth do not constitute, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, such a controversy, or such controversies, between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia as can be heard and determined in this court, and this court has no power to render or enforce any final judgment or decree thereon.

Third. That it appears by said bill that the plaintiff herein sues as trustee for the benefit of a number of individuals who are the alleged owners of certain certificates in the said bill set forth and considered.

Fourth. That the said bill does not state facts sufficient to entitle the Commonwealth of Virginia to the relief prayed for, or to any relief, either in her own right or as trustee for the owners of the certificates therein set forth and described.

Fifth. That it does not appear by said bill that the Attorney General has ever been authorized to institute and prosecute this suit in the name of the Commonwealth of Virginia, in her own right, but only as trustee for the use and benefit of the owners of certain certificates mentioned in the act of March 6, 1900, which is referred to and made part of said bill.

Sixth. That the said bill does not sufficiently and definitely set forth the claims and demands relied upon, but the allegations thereof are so indefinite and uncertain that no proper answer can be made thereto.

Seventh. That the allegations in the said bill are not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff therein, either in her own right or as trustee to an account or to a discovery from this defendant.

Eighth. That the said bill does not contain any prayer for a judgment or decree or any other final relief against this defendant.

Wherefore, and for divers other good causes, of demurrer in the said bill, this defendant demurs thereto and humbly demands the judgment of this court whether she shall be compelled to make any further or other answer to the said bill, and prays to be hence dismissed with her costs and charges in the matter most wrongfully sustained.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIGRINIA.

IN EQUITY.

OPINION OF THE COURT.

Delivered By Mr. Chief Justice Fuller.

May 27th, 1907.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1906.

ORIGINAL No. 7.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA
vs.) In Equity.
STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

[May 27, 1907.]

This is a bill filed, on leave, February 26, 1906, by the Commonwealth of Virginia against the State of West Virginia.

The bill averred that—

"On the first day of January, 1861, complainant was indebted in about the sum of $33,000,000 upon obligations and contracts made in connection with the construction of works of internal improvement throughout her then territory. By far the greater part of this indebtedness was shown by her bonds and other evidences of debt, given for the large sums of money which she from time to time had borrowed and used for the above purpose; but a portion of her liabilities though arising under contracts made before that date, had not then been covered by bonds issued for their payment.

"In addition to the above liability to the general public, there was a large indebtedness evidenced by her bonds and other liabilities held by and due to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund and the Literary Fund of the State, as created under her laws amounting, the former to $1,462,993.00, and the latter to $1,543,669.05 as of the same date.

"The official reports and records showing the exact character and amounts of the public debt thus contracted and how the same was created, are referred to, and will be produced upon a hearing of the case.

"(2) That portion of the territory embraced in what constitutes the present territorial limits of Virginia was prior to that date devoted mainly to agriculture, and to some extent to grazing and manufacturing, which afforded its chief sources of revenue, while that portion included in what now constitutes the State of West Virginia had vast potentalities of wealth and revenue in the undeveloped stores of minerals and timber, which had been known for many years prior to the date named, and their prospective values, if made accessible to the markets of the country, were understood to be well nigh beyond computation. It was to hasten and facilitate the development of these sources of wealth and revenue by the construction of graded roads, bridges, canals and railways, extending through the State from tidewater towards the Ohio River, that the Commonwealth of Virginia, in the first quarter of the Nineteenth Century, entered upon a system of public internal improvements, which it was contemplated should include the entire territory of the State and embraced in its design the construction of public works adapted, not to the needs of any one portion of the State alone, but of the entire State, as a unit of interest. The larger part of these works were constructed East of the Appalachian range, as leading up to the undeveloped territory West thereof, but a very considerable portion of them were, at an expense of several millions of dollars, constructed West of said range within the territory now included in the State of West Virginia; and the completion of some of the main lines of improvement beyond the said range and through to the Ohio River, since the first day of January, 1861, has increased to a very great and material extent the values of real estate, including coal and timber, in the said territory now included in West Virginia, thus carrying into effect the original scheme of improvement, which could not have been done had not the lines East of said range been first constructed; and your Oratrix believes and avers that the property values within the limits of West Virginia have been enormously enhanced in a large measure by reason of these improvments. The money appropriated to the payment of the annually accruing interest on the said debt, prior to January 1, 1861, and to the formation of the Sinking Fund for the ultimate redemption thereof, was derived from taxes imposed upon the property subject to taxation throughout the entire State. The first of this indebtedness to be contracted was a small amount borrowed by the State in the year 1820 and the debt was thereafter from time to time continued and increased by renewals and new loans until it reached the amount above stated in 1861.

"(3) The Commonwealth of Virginia was induced to enter upon the construction of this general system of internal improvements, in a very large measure for the purpose of developing the aforesaid resources of the western portion of the State, now constituting the State of West Virginia, thereby ameliorating the condition of her citizens residing therein; and it was with this view that she took upon herself the burden of the public debt for which her bonds were issued, without which debt such improvements could not have been undertaken. In corroboration of this view it will appear from an inspection of the legislative records of the State, where the vote carrying the appropriations for such public improvements was recorded, that in nearly every instance a majority of those members of the House and Senate of the original State, who then represented the counties now composing West Virginia, voted for such appropriations. Indeed it appears from those records that a great majority of the Acts of the legislature of Virginia under which said indebtedness was created, would have failed of their passage, had the representatives from the counties embraced in what is now West Virginia opposed their enactment. and that a very large proportion of said indebtedness was actually contracted over the votes of a majority of the representatives from the counties and cities embraced in the limits of the present State of Virginia. This will be found to be true, not only in the legislature for one single session, but in the legislatures for many successive years, thus showing it to have been a fixed policy of the people in that portion of the State now constituting West Virginia to participate in, support and carry out this general plan of internal improvements in the State.

"4. The development of this system of public improvements thus entered upon was, from its character and extent, necessarily progressive, and the same extended with the general growth and increasing needs of the State, and was incomplete, as above stated, in 1861, though a very considerable portion of such improvements had, prior to that time, been constructed as above stated, in the territory now constituting West Virginia, in order to meet the needs of the people of that portion of the State for their local purposes. As early as the year 1816 a Board of Public Works was created by law for the State, the members of which were elected by the voters of the State at large, and this Board had in charge the construction and supervision of all the works of public improvement in this State. The annual reports of this Board will be referred to for information as to the character, extent, cost and location of the public works and internal improvements constructed in the State prior to January 1st, 1861. The amounts expended upon the construction of these works in what is now West Virginia can only be accurately ascertained by an examination of the numerous entries in the records of this Board extending through a number of years and showing such expenditures as made from time to time.

"5. On the 17th of April, 1861, the people of Virginia, in general convention assembled, adopted an ordinance by which it was intended to withdraw Virginia from the Union of the States. From this action a considerable portion of the people of Virginia dissented, and organized a separate government which was known and recognized by the government of the United States as the 'Restored State of Virginia,' and will be hereafter referred to in this bill as the 'Restored State.'

"6. On the 20th day of August, 1861, the Restored State of Virginia, in convention assembled, in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, adopted an ordinance to 'provide for the formation of a new State out of the portion of the territory of this State;' Section 9 of which ordinance was as follows, to-wit:

'9. The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all the state expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during said period. All private rights and interests in lands within the proposed State, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of Virginia.'

"7. On the 31st day of December, 1862, an Act was passed by the 37th Congress of the United States providing that the new State thus formed in pursuance of the ordinances of the Wheeling convention above referred to, should, upon certain conditions, be admitted into the Union by the name of West Virginia, with a constitution which had theretofore been adopted for the new State by the people thereof, such conditions being that a change should be made in such proposed constitution in regard to the liberation of slaves therein; and it was provided by this Act of Congress that whenever the President of the United States should issue his proclamation stating the fact that such change had been made and ratified, thereupon the Act admitting the new State into the Union should take effect sixty days after the date of such proclamation. Such proclamation declaring these conditions to have been complied with was duly made by President Lincoln on April 20th, 1863, and West Virginia, in conformity therewith and by the operation of said Act of Congress, was admitted into the Union as a State on the 20th day of June, 1863; and thereupon the State of West Virginia became fully organized, and each of its departments of government commenced operation on the date last named.

"8. Pending the admission of the State of West Virginia to the Union the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia passed February 3, 1863, the following Act:

'That all property, real, personal and mixed, owned by, or appertaining to the state, and being within the boundaries of the proposed State of West Virginia, when the same becomes one of the United States, shall thereupon pass to, and become the property of the State of West Virginia, and without any other assignment, conveyance or transfer or delivery than is herein contained, and shall include among other things not herein specified all lands, buildings, roads, and other internal improvements or parts thereof, situated within said boundaries, and vested in this state, or in the president and directors of the literary fund, or the board of public works thereof, or in any person or persons for the use of this state, to the extent of the interest and estate of this state therein; and shall also include the interest of this state, or of the said president and directors, or of the said board of public works, in any parent bank or branch doing business within said boundaries and all stocks of any other company or corporation, the principal office or place of business whereof is located within said boundaries, standing in the name of this state, or of the said president or directors, or of the said board of public works, or of any person or persons, for the use of this state.'

'That if the appropriations and transfers of property, stocks, and credits provided for by this act, take effect, the State of West Virginia shall duly account for the same in the settlement hereafter to be made with this state, provided that no such property, stocks and credits shall have been obtained since the reorganization of the state government.' ''

Complainant charged "that the property which was by the operation of this Act appropriated and transferred from the State of Virginia to the State of West Virginia, and which was subsequently received and enjoyed by the State of West Virginia, consisted of a number of items, and the value of it amounted in the aggregate, to several millions of dollars, the exact amount your Oratrix is unable at this time more definitely to ascertain and state. That of the bank stocks alone, which were transferred under the operation of this Act, the State of West Virginia realized and received into her Treasury from the sale thereof about Six Hundred Thousand Dollars; and that no part of the property so received by West Virginia had been obtained by Virginia since April, 1861."

"9. And by a further act of the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia passed on the next day, February 4th, 1863, it was enacted:

'1. That the sum of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars be, and is hereby appropriated to the State of West Virginia out of moneys not otherwise appropriated, when the same shall have been formed, organized and admitted as one of the States of the United States.

'2. That there shall be, and hereby is appropriated to the said State of West Virginia when the same shall become one of the United States, all balances, not otherwise appropriated, that may remain in the treasury, and all moneys not otherwise appropriated, that may come into the treasury up to the time when the said State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States: provided, however, that when the said State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States, it shall be the duty of the auditor of this State, to make a statement of all the moneys that up to that time, have been paid into the treasury from counties located outside of the boundaries of the said State of West Virginia, and also of all moneys that up to the same time, have been expended in such counties, and the unexpended surplus of all such moneys shall remain in the treasury and continue to be the property of this State.'

"And this last named sum of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars, together with other sums belonging to the State of Virginia, were turned over to and received or collected by the new State of West Virginia after its formation as aforesaid.

"10. The Constitution of the State of West Virginia, which became operative and was in force when she was admitted into the Union, contained the following provisions:

"By Section 5 of Article VIII. of said Constitution it was provided:

'5. No debt shall be contracted by this State except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability to the State, to suppress insurrection, repel invasion, or defend the State in time of War.'

"And by section 7 of Article VIII. it was provided:

'7. The legislature may, at any time, direct a sale of the stocks owned by the State, in banks and other corporations, but the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the liquidation of the public debt, and hereafter the State shall not become a stockholder in any bank.'

"And by section 8 of Article VIII. it was provided:

'8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years.'

"At the time the Constitution containing these provisions was adopted, West Virginia did not owe, and could not have owed, any 'public debt' or 'previous liability,' except for her just, contributive proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia, and for money and property of the original State which had been transferred to and received by her under the Acts of the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia above set forth. By the provisions of Section 8 of Article VIII., above cited, she expressly assumed her equitable proportion of the debt of the original State as it existed prior to the first day of January, 1861. By Section 5 of the same Article VIII., above set forth, her Constitution forbade the creation of any debt 'except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State,' &c., and there was not and could not have been any such 'previous liability,' except her portion of the debt of the original State, and her liability for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to and received by her under Acts of the General Assembly of the Restored State. And Section 7 of the same Article of her Constitution, above cited, authorized the sale of the stocks owned by the State, in banks and other corporations, the proceeds to be applied to the liquidation of the public debt; and she had no such stocks, except those acquired, as above stated, from the original State. This section of her constitution also expressly required the proceeds of such sale to be applied to her public debt, which public debt could only have been her proportion of that of the original State of Virginia, and her liability for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to her.

"11. After the year 1865 and prior to the year 1872 attempts were made at different times by the public authorities of both the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia, respectively, to ascertain their contributive proportions of the common liability resting upon them for the public debt of Virginia, contracted prior to January 1st, 1861; but all such attempts proved ineffectual and vain, and no accounting or settlement of any kind was ever had between the two States in regard to this debt.

"12. The efforts looking to a settlement by the concurrent action of the two States having proved abortive and your Oratrix being anxious to adjust the portion of the common debt which it was right that she should assume and pay, upon terms just and equitable alike to the public creditors and to West Virginia, made several efforts to effect such a settlement.

"The first of these was made by the General Assembly which was chosen at the close of the period of 'destruction and reconstruction,' which, following closely upon the period of disastrous war, had inflicted upon her people injuries and losses, the harmful effects of which were then by no means realized.

"The purpose of the representatives of the Commonwealth, then just emerging from conditions which had improverished her people and paralyzed their productive energies, to assume and pay to the utmost every dollar which her most exacting creditor could demand of her, was expressed in the Act of her General Assembly, approved March 30, 1871.

"By the terms of settlement embodied in this Act, your Oratrix undertook to give her obligations bearing 6% interest for two-thirds of the principal, and for two-thirds of the past due interest, and also for two-thirds of the interest on that accrued interest, which accrued interest to the extent of nearly $8,000,0000, had been funded after the War in new bonds of Virginia, thus capitalizing at 6% not only the interest, but interest upon that interest.

"It was soon apparent that Virginia had by this measure assumed a heavier burden than she was able to bear, and so other plans for the settlement of the State debt were attempted by the Acts of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth approved March 28, 1879, and February 14, 1882, until at length a final and satisfactory settlement of the portion of the debt of the original State which Virginia should assume and pay was definitely concluded by the Act of February 20, 1892. Your Oratrix will file copies of each of the Acts of her General Assembly herein mentioned as exhibits to this bill, and to be read as part hereof.

"13. As farther indicating the great burden which your Oratrix, notwithstanding the disaster and loss above referred to, has assumed and met on account of the common debt of the undivided State, she shows your Honors that, since January 1st, 1861, she has actually paid off, retired and discharged, or assumed and given her new outstanding obligations for the aggregate sum of over Seventy-one Million Dollars, as will more particularly appear from a statement thereof filed as an exhibit herewith and hereinafter referred to as Exhibit Number 7.

"It is proper in this connection to call attention to the fact that, while your Oratrix has made this large contribution toward the settlement of the common debt, West Virginia has not paid one dollar thereof; and although in the early years of her history she repeatedly conceded that there was some portion of that debt which should equitably be borne by her, her properly constituted authorities have for a number of years refused to recognize that any liability whatever rested upon her, on that account, and have declined even to enter into an accounting or to treat with your Oratrix in reference thereto.

"It would seem from the above statement that Virginia has already done as much under all the circumstances as she could be fairly expected to do towards paying off the common public debt of the old State. Such was the view and purpose of the General Assembly in the several Acts above recited.

"A question may be raised as to whether such was the effect of the language used in the Act of March 30, 1871, with respect to the certificates issued thereunder; but the great mass of the creditors entitled to whatever may be due upon the unfunded obligations of the undivided State, have in effect agreed, as will be hereinafter shown, to waive any such question, and to accept the adjudication of this Court in this cause against West Virginia in full discharge of all their claims, thus giving that effect to the Act of March 30, 1871, which it was the purpose of your Oratrix that it should have.

"14. By each of the Acts for the settlement of her debt above recited, it was provided that the bonds of undivided Virginia so far as not funded in the new obligations given by your Oratrix, should be surrendered to and held by your Oratrix, who either by the express terms of the settlement provided for by said Acts, or as a just and equitable consequence therefrom, received and holds said original bonds so far as unfunded, in trust for the creditor who deposited the some with her, or his assigns; and certificates to this effect were given by your Oratrix to each creditor whose old Virginia bond was so surrendered to her.

"Having as an essential part of the contract for the adjustment of the common debt of the original State entered into this fiduciary relation in reference to these bonds, it became her obligation of duty to the creditors who had confided their securities to her keeping, as well as to her own people, whose credit and fair name required that these obligations of the old State should be fairly and honorably adjusted, to do all in her power to bring about a determination of West Virginia's just liability in respect thereto, and if possible the recognition and settlement of the same by that State.

"Only after exhausting every means of amicable negotiation, and having her overtures to that end repeatedly refused, and as a last resort, has your Oratrix been constrained at length reluctantly to apply to this, the only tribunal which can afford relief, for an adjudication and determination of this question, of such vast importance to your Oratrix and to all of her people.

"15. All of the bonds and obligations and other evidences of the indebtedness of the original State of Virginia outstanding and contracted on January 1, 1861, as stated in paragraph 1 of this bill, except a comparatively insignificant sum, not amounting to one per cent. of the aggregate of those liabilities, have been taken up and are now actually held by your Oratrix, and she has the right to call upon West Virginia for a settlement with respect thereto. They are too numerous and involve too great a number of transactions running through many years, for it to be practicable to exhibit them here in detail, but the original bonds and other evidences of indebtedness so paid off or retired and now held by your Oratrix, will, when it shall be proper to do so, be exhibited to the Master, who shall take the accounts hereinafter prayed for.

"16. Of the evidences of indebtedness representing principal and interest of the liabilities of Virginia contracted before her dismemberment, those so paid off or retired by your Oratrix and now held by her in her own right, exclusive of the amounts represented by the certificates issued under the funding Acts aforesaid, amount in the aggregate, including the interest to be fairly computed thereon to this date, to a very large sum, considerably in excess of $25,000,000, by far the greater part of it being now, of course, on account of the interest computed thereon, at the rate of 6% per annum, the then legal rate in both States.

"For all of these obligations taken up and payments made on account of the common debt, your Oratrix has in her own right, a just claim against West Virginia for contribution to the extent of West Virginia's equitable liability therefor.

"17. In addition to the above bonds there were outstanding on the 1st day of January, 1861, certain obligations of the State of Virginia as guarantor upon some of the securities issued by internal improvement companies, which your Oratrix was called upon to provide for and settle. They were not comparatively of very large amount, however, and the questions involved in connection therewith can be stated and settled in the account hereafter prayed for to be taken between the two States; and in such accounts your Oratrix will also ask to have included all such items of debit against the State of West Virginia on account of the property and moneys of the original State which were received or appropriated by West Virginia which may not have been specifically or accurately stated herein. These items of accounting between the two States are so numerous and varied and extend throughout a period of so many years' duration that it is impossible from the nature of the case to state all of them in this bill; and the account between the two States can only be taken and settled, and the balance due your Oratrix thereon ascertained, under the supervision of a Court of Equity.

"18. Your Oratrix charges that the liability of the State of West Virginia, for a just and equitable proportion of the public debt of Virginia, as of the time when the State of West Virginia was created, rests upon the following among many grounds which might be indicated here:

'First. The area of the territory now known as the State of West Virginia formed about one-third of the territory of the Commonwealth of Virginia when this public debt was created, and its population included about one-third of that of the original State at the time of its dismemberment. And the State of West Virginia did, by the acquisition and appropriation of such territory, with the population thereof, assume therewith liability for a just and equitable proportion of the public debt created prior to the partition of such territory.

'Second. The liability of West Virginia for a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, as it existed prior to the creation and erection of the State of West Virginia forms part of her very political existence, and is an essential constituent of her fundamental law as shown in the said ordinance adopted at Wheeling on the 20th day of August, 1861, in which the method of ascertaining her liability on account of said debt is prescribed. And this liability is imbedded in the Constitution under which she was admitted as a State into the Federal Union, and was one of the conditions under which she was created a State and admitted into the Union.

'Third. The State of West Virginia has further, by the repeated enactments and joint resolutions of her legislature, recognized her liability for a just proportion of this debt.

'Fourth. The State of West Virginia has, since her creation as a State, received from the State of Virginia real and personal property amounting in value to many millions of dollars, and held and enjoyed the same, but upon express condition that she should duly account for the same in a settlement thereafter to be had between her and the Commonwealth of Virginia.

'Fifth. While the transfer of this property, real and personal, and also certain moneys of the Commonwealth of Virginia, purport to have been made to the State of West Virginia by the Act of 'The Restored Government of Virginia,' there were in fact represented in said 'Restored Government' and in the legislature thereof no other people and no other territory than that which then, as now, constitute the State of West Virginia.'

"19. The General Assembly of Virginia being anxious to effect a settlement of the portion of the common debt of the undivided State which remained unadjusted, and if possible to bring this about with the friendly co-operation and concurrence of West Virginia, adopted: 'A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia, and for the application of whatever may be received from the State of West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same,' approved March 6, 1894. A copy of this resolution will be hereinafter shown as an exhibit to this bill, to be read as a part thereof.

"Under this resolution a commission of seven members was appointed for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects expressed therein.

"The efforts made by this Commission, acting under the above resolution to bring about a settlement with West Virginia having proved ineffectual, and the overture which the Commission, with the active co-operation of the Honorable Charles T. O'Ferral, the then governor of the Commonwealth made to the authorities of West Virginia for the purpose of bringing about a friendly adjustment having been declined, the General Assembly of Virginia passed the Act approved March 6, 1900, entitled 'An Act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises,' the purpose of which Act is sufficiently set forth in its title, and a copy of the act will also be hereinafter shown as one of the exhibits herewith filed.

"20. The Commission acting under said last mentioned act made most earnest efforts to bring about an amicable adjustment of the matters hereinbefore set forth with West Virginia, but all of their efforts in that behalf proved ineffectual and unavailing. An application to this Honorable Court being thus left as the only alternative for Virginia, this suit has been instituted at the request and direction of the said Commission, and in strict conformity with the provisions of the said Act of March 6, 1900, all of which will be more fully and completely shown by the Report of the said Commission dated January 6, 1906, made to the General Assembly of Virginia now in session, a copy of which Report and the documents accompanying the same, and referred to therein, will be exhibited as a part of this Bill."

21. Enumerates exhibits attached to the bill and prayed to be regarded as part thereof.

22. The bill prayed: "Forasmuch, therefore, as your Oratrix is remediless save in this form and forum, and to the end that the State of West Virginia may be duly served, through her Governor and Attorney-General, with a copy of this bill, your Oratrix prays that the said State of West Virginia may be made a party defendant to this bill, and required to answer the same, that all proper accounts may be taken to determine and ascertain the balance due from the State of West Virginia to your Oratrix, in her own right and as trustee as aforesaid; that the principles upon which such accounting shall be had may be ascertained and declared, and a true and proper settlement made of the matters and things above recited and set forth; that such accounting be had and settlement made under the supervision and direction of this Court by such Auditor or Master as may by the Court be selected and empowered to that end, and that proper and full reports of such accounting and settlement may be made to this Court; that the State of West Virginia may be required to produce before such Auditor or Master, so to be appointed, all such official entries, documents, reports and proceedings as may be among her public records or official files and may tend to show the facts and the true and actual state of accounts growing out of the matters and things above recited and set forth, in order to a full and correct settlement and adjustment of the accounts between the two States; that this Court will adjudicate and determine the amount due your Oratrix by the State of West Virginia in the premises; and that all such other and further and general relief be granted unto your Oratrix in the premises as the nature of her case may require or to equity may seem meet."

Attached to the bill were the numerous exhibits referred to.

The State of West Virginia demurrred and assigned special causes as follows:

"First. That it appears by said bill that there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff and a misjoinder of causes of action. The said bill is brought by the Commonwealth of Virginia to recover debts alleged to be due to her in her own right from the defendant for property and money alleged to have been transferred and delivered to the defendant under certain acts of the legislature passed in 1863, and also, as trustee for the owners of certain certificates mentioned and described in said bill, to have an accounting to ascertain and declare the amount claimed to be due from the defendant as her just proportion of the public debt of the plaintiff prior to the first day of January, 1861.

"Second. That this court has no jurisdiction of either the parties to or the subject-matter of this action, because it appears by the said bill that the matters therein set forth do not constitute, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, such a controversy, or such controversies, between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia as can be heard and determined in this court, and this court has no power to render or enforce any final judgment or decree thereon.

"Third. That it appears by said bill that the plaintiff herein sues as trustee for the benefit of a number of individuals who are the alleged owners of certain certificates in the said bill set forth and described.

"Fourth. That the said bill does not state facts sufficient to entitle the Commonwealth of Virginia to the relief prayed for, or to any relief, either in her own right or as trustee for the owners of the certificates therein set forth and described.

"Fifth. That it does not appear by said bill that the Attorney General has ever been authorized to institute and prosecute this suit in the name of the Commonwealth of Virginia in her own right, but only as trustee for the use and benefit of the owners of certain certificates mentioned in the act of March 6, 1900, which is referred to and made part of said bill.

"Sixth. That the said bill does not sufficiently and definitely set forth the claims and demands relied upon, but the allegations thereof are so indefinite and uncertain that no proper answer can be made thereto.

"Seventh. That the allegations in the said bill are not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff therein, either in her own right or as trustee, to an account or to a discovery from this defendant.

'Eighth. That the said bill does not contain any prayer for a judgment or decree or any other final relief against this defendant."

Hearing on the demurrer was had March 11, 12, 1907.

Mr. Chief Justice FULLER delivered the opinion of the Court:

The State of West Virginia was admitted into the Union June 20, 1863, under the proclamation of the President of the United States of April 20, 1863, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved December 31, 1862, upon the terms and conditions prescribed by the Commonwealth of Virginia in ordinances adopted in convention and in acts passed by the General Assembly of the Restored Government of the Commonwealth, giving her consent to the formation of a new State out of her territory, with a constitution adopted for the new State by the people thereof. The ninth section of the ordinance adopted by the people of the Restored State of Virginia in convention assembled in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, on August 20, 1861, entitled "An ordinance to provide for the formation of a new State out of a portion of the territory of this State," provided as follows:

"9. The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government, since any part of said debt was contracted; and deducting therefrom the monies paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during the same period. All private rights and interests in lands within the proposed State, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of Virginia. . ."

The consent of the Commonwealth of Virginia was given to the formation of a new State on this condition. February 3 and 4, 1863, the General Assembly of the Restored State of Virginia enacted two statutes in pursuance of the provisions of which money and property amounting to and of the value of several millions of dollars were, after the admission of the new State, paid over and transferred to West Virginia. The Constitution of the State of West Virginia when admitted contained these provisions, being sections 5, 7 and 8 of Article VIII thereof, as follows:

"5. No debt shall be contracted by this State, except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State, to suppress insurrection, repel invasion, or defend the State in time of war."

"7. The legislature may at any time direct a sale of the stocks owned by the State in banks and other corporations, but the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the liquidation of the public debt and hereafter the State shall not become a stockholder in any bank."

"8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, shall be assumed by this State; and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof, by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest, and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

The "public debt" and the "previous liability" manifestly referred to a portion of the original debt of the original State of Virginia and liability for the money and property of the original State, which had been received by West Virginia under the acts of the General Assembly above cited, enacted while the territory and people afterwards forming the State of West Virginia constituted a part of the Commonwealth of Virginia, though one may be involved in the other; while the provisions of sections 7 and 8 were obviously framed in compliance with the conditions on which the consent of Virginia was given to the creation of the State of West Virginia, and the money and property were transferred. From 1865 to 1905 various efforts were made by Virginia through its constituted authorities to effect an adjustment and settlement with West Virginia for an equitable proportion of the public debt of the undivided State, proper to be borne and paid by West Virginia, but all these efforts proved unavailing, and it is charged that West Virginia refused or failed to take any action or do anything for the purpose of bringing about a settlement or adjustment with Virginia.

The original jurisdiction of this court was, therefore, invoked by Virginia to procure a decree for an accounting as between the two States, and, in order to a full and correct adjustment of the accounts, the adjudication and determination of the amount due Virginia by West Virginia in the premises.

But it is objected that this court has no jurisdiction because the matters set forth in the bill do not constitute such a controversy or such controversies as can be heard and determined in this court, and because the court has no power to enforce and therefore none to render any final judgment or decree therein. We think these objections are disposed of by many decisions of this court. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 378, 406; Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125; Kansas v. Colorado, May 13, 1907, 206 U. S. p. ; Missouri v. Illinois, 180 U. S. 208; Same case, 200 U. S. 496; Georgia v. Copper Company, May 13, 1907, 206 U. S. p ; United States v. Texas, 143 U. S. 621; United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 211; United States v. Michigan, 190 U. S. 379.

In Cohens v. Virginia, the Chief Justice said: "In the second class, the jurisdiction depends entirely on the character of the parties. In this are comprehended 'controversies between two or more States, between a State and the citizens of another State,' 'and between a State and foreign States, citizens or subjects.' If these be the parties, it is entirely unimportant what may be the subject of controversy. Be it what it may, these parties have a constitutional right to come into the courts of the Union."

And, referring to the Eleventh Amendment, it was further said:

"It is a part of our history, that, at the adoption of the Constitution, all the States were greatly indebted; and the apprehension that these debts might be prosecuted in the Federal courts formed a very serious objection to that instrument. Suits were instituted; and the court maintained its jurisdiction. The alarm was general; and, to quiet the apprehensions that were so extensively entertained, this amendment was proposed in Congress, and adopted by the State legislatures. That its motive was not to maintain the sovereignty of a State from the degradation supposed to attend a compulsory appearance before the tribunal of the nation, may be inferred from the terms of amendment. It does not comprehend controversies between two or more States, or between a State and a foreign State. The jurisdiction of the court still extends to these cases and in these a State may still be sued. We must ascribe the amendment, then, to some other cause than the dignity of a State. There is no difficulty in finding this cause. Those who were inhibited from commencing a suit against a State, or from prosecuting one which might be commenced before the adoption of the amendment were persons who might probably be its creditors. There was not much reason to fear that foreign or sister States would be creditors to any considerable amount, and there was no reason to retain the jurisdiction of the court in those cases, because it might be essential to the preservation of peace. The amendment, therefore, extended to suits commenced or prosecuted by individuals, but not to those brought by States."

By the cases cited and there are many more, it is established that, in the exercise of original jurisdiction as between States, this court necessarily in such a case as this has jurisdiction.

United States v. North Carolina and United States v. Michigan, supra, were controversies arising upon pecuniary demands, and jurisdiction was exercised in those cases just as in those for the prevention of the flow of polluted water from one State along the borders of another State, or of the diminution in the natural flow of rivers by the State in which they have their sources through and across another State or States, or of the discharge of noxious gases from works in one State over the territory of another.

The object of the suit is a settlement with West Virginia, and to that end a determination and adjudication of the amount due by that State to Virginia, and when this court has ascertained and adjudged the proportion of the debt of the original State which it would be equitable for West Virginia to pay, it is not to be presumed on demurrer that West Virginia would refuse to carry out the decree of this court. If such repudiation should be absolutely asserted we can then consider by what means the decree may be enforced. Consent to be sued was given when West Virginia was admitted into the Union, and it must be assumed that the Legislature of West Virginia would in the natural course make provision for the satisfaction of any decree that may be rendered.

It is, however, further insisted that this court cannot proceed to judgment because of an alleged compact entered into between Virginia and West Virginia, with the consent of Congress, by which the question of the liability of Virginia to West Virginia was submitted to the arbitrament and award of the Legislature of West Virginia as the sole tribunal which could pass upon it. As we have seen, the Constitution of West Virginia when admitted into the Union contained the provision: "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, shall be assumed by the State, and the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquidation of the same by a sinking fund and redeem the principal within thirty-four years." And it is said that, on May 13, 1862, the Legislature of Virginia passed an act entitled "An act giving the consent of the Legislature of Virginia to the formation and erection of a new State within the jurisdiction of this State," by which consent was given to the creation of the proposed new State, "according to the boundaries and under the provisions set forth in the Constitution for the said State of West Virginia, and the schedule thereto an-nexed, proposed by the convention which assembled at Wheeling on the twenty-sixth day of November, 1861;" and that by the act of Congress the consent of that body was given to all those provisions which thus became a constitutional and legal compact between the two States. The act of May 13, 1862, was not made a part of the case stated in the bill, and its validity is denied by counsel for Virginia, but it is unnecessary to go into that, for when Virginia, on August 20, 1861, by ordinance provided "for the formation of a new State out of the territory of this State," and declared therein that "the new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861," to be ascertained as provided, it is to be supposed that the new State had this in mind when it framed its own constitution, and that when that instrument provided that its Legislature should "ascertain the same as soon as practicable," it referred to the method of ascertainment prescribed by the Virginia convention. Reading the Virginia ordinance and the West Virginia constitutional provision in pari materia, it follows that what was meant by the expression that the "Legislature shall ascertain" was that the Legislature should ascertain as soon as practicable the result of the pursuit of the method prescribed, and provide for the liquidation of the amount so ascertained. And it may well be inquired why, in the forty-three years that have elapsed since the alleged compact was entered into, West Virginia has never indicated that she stood upon such a compact, and, if so, why no step has ever been taken by West Virginia to enter upon the performance of the duty which such "compact" imposed, and to notify Virginia that she was ready and willing to discharge such duty.

It is also urged that Virginia had no interest in the subject-matter of the controversy because she had been released from all liability on account of the public debt of the old Commonwealth, evidenced by her bonds outstanding on the first day of January, 1861. This relates to the acts of the General Assembly of Virginia of March 30, 1871, March 28, 1879, February 14, 1882, February 20, 1892, March 6, 1894, and March 6, 1900. According to the bill, Virginia by the act of March 30, 1871, and subsequent acts, in an attempt to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt, having estimated that the liability of West Virginia was for one-third of the amount of the old bonds, provided for the issue of new bonds to the amount of two-thirds of the total, and for the issue of certificates for the other third, which showed that Virginia held the old bonds so far as unfunded in trust for the holders or their assignees to be paid by the funds expected to be obtained from West Virginia as her "just and equitable proportion of the public debt." The legislation resulted in the surrender of most of the old bonds to Virginia, satisfied as to two-thirds, and held as security for the creditors as to one-third. We do not care to take up and discuss this legislation. We are satisfied that as we have jurisdiction, these questions ought not to be passed upon on demurrer. Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125, 144, 145. And this also furnishes sufficient ground for not considering at length the objection of multifariousness. The observations of Lord Cottenham, in Campbell v. Mackey, 1 Mylne & Craig, 603, that it is impracticable to lay down any rule as to what constitutes multifariousness, as an abstract proposition; that each case must depend upon its own circumstances; and much must be left where the authorities leave it, to the sound discretion of the court, have been often affirmed in this court. Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. 333, 411; Gaines v. Relf, 2 How. 619, 642. But we do not mean to rule that the bill is multifarious. It is true that the prayer contains, among other things, the request "that all proper accounts may be taken to determine and ascertain the balance due from the State of West Virginia to your Oratrix in her own right and as trustee aforesaid," but it also prays that the court "will adjudicate and determine the amount due to your Oratrix by the State of West Virginia in the premises." And we understand the reference to holding in trust to be in the inest of mere convenience, and that the bill cannot properly be regarded as seeking in chief anything more than a decree for "an equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia on the first day of January, 1861." The objections of misjoinder of parties and misjoinder of causes of action may be treated as resting on matter of surplusage merely, and at all events further consideration thereof may wisely be postponed to final hearing. Florida v. Georgia, 17 How, 491, 492; California v. Southern Pacific Company, 157 U. S. 249.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

ANSWER OF WEST VIRGINIA.

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

The answer of the State of West Virginia, by William M. O. Dawson, Governor, and Clarke W May, Attorney General, by leave of this Honorable Court, to the bill of complaint exhibited against said State of West Virginia by William A. Anderson, Attorney General, for and on behalf of the State of Virginia.

This defendant, now and at all times hereafter saving to herself all and all manner of benefit of exception or otherwise that can or may be had or taken to the many errors, uncertainties, and imperfections in the said bill contained, for answer thereto, or so much thereof as this defendant is advised is material or necessary for her to make answer to, answering, says:

I.

That believes it is true as alleged that on the first day of 1861, plaintiff was indebted in "about" the sum of upon obligations and contracts made in connection with ion of works of internal improvement within her then territory; and it may be true that the greater part of said indebtedness was shown by her bonds and other evidences of debt, given for the large sums of money which she from time to time had borrowed and used for said purpose; and it may also be true that all her liabilities, though arising under contracts made before that date, had not then been covered by bonds issued for their payment; but as to this allegation respondent has no knowledge or information except what is derived from said bill. This respondent denies that there was in addition to the above mentioned liability to the general public any other indebtedness evidenced by bonds held by and due to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund and Literary Fund of the said State of Virginia as created under her laws, amounting the former to $1,462.993, and the latter to $1,543,669.05, or to any other sums, as of the same date, as in the said bill is alleged, because this defendant avers that the commissioners of these two funds were and are mere State agencies, and public officials of the State, created by said State of Virginia to have the custody of and to preserve certain of her financial resources and obligations to be made available for specific purposes when necessary, and which now belong exclusively to Virginia and are held for her sole and exclusive use and benefit. Respondent denies that any of the bonds or certificates so alleged to be held by the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund and the Literary Fund were ever negotiated or sold by the State of Virginia, or that the same constituted a part of the public debt of that State on the first day of January, 1861, and denies that the certificates representing one-third of such bonds are now a part of the said public debt; and respondent avers that the State of Virginia has long since voluntarily canceled all of said bonds and the same are no longer of any force or validity.

II.

It is true as alleged that said portion of the territory which now constitutes the present State of Virginia was, prior to January 1, 1861, devoted mainly to agriculture, and, to some extent, to grazing and manufacture, which afforded its chief source of revenue at that time; but this defendant avers that the territory which now composes the State of Virginia was largely underlaid with rich and valuable minerals only awaiting the opportunity and means of development to make the said State exceedingly wealthy in varied mineral resources such as coal, iron, manganese and other valuable and marketable products, and the said State abounded at that time in large forests of valuable timber which have since dev[illegible]d into a great source of revenue to the said State and its cit[illegible] It true that the portion included in what now constitute[illegible] West Virginia had vast potentialities of wealth and r[illegible] developed stores of mineral and timber, and respondent avers that the same was inaccessible and of very little value on the first day of January, 1861, and during all the years prior thereto, and that it has been only within recent years that the development of said resources has been begun in the said State of West Virginia, and this required the outlay of many millions of dollars, since January 1, 1861, in the construction of railroads and other public works and the appropriation by the Congress of the United States of many more millions of dollars for the improvement of her waterways in order to afford an outlet for her mineral and other products. This respondent denies that the prime object of the State of Virginia in entering upon a system of internal improvement was to hasten and facilitate the development of the resources of wealth and revenue in West Virginia by the construction of graded roads, bridges, canals and railways extending through the then State of Virginia from tidewater toward the Ohio river, and avers that the main object of said system of internal improvements was to afford the eastern part of the State an outlet for its own products to the Ohio river on the west and to the seaboard on the east, and to afford convenient communication with those points so as to create a market for such products at points on the eastern coast of Virginia at tidewater, and thus open up and develop the resources of the territory now constituting the State of Virginia, and not, as alleged in said bill, for the purposes of developing the resources of the western part of her territory, now constituting the State of West Virginia. This respondent further says that it is true as alleged in said bill that the larger portion of these public works was constructed east of the Appalachian range of mountains and within the present territorial limits of Virginia, and respondent avers that nearly all of the money derived from the sale of the bonds was in fact expended in the development and improvement of what now constitutes Virginia, and only a comparatively small sum was expended in developing, and improving the portion now composing West Virginia; that these expenditures in Virginia were of very little practical benefit to the people living in the western part of the State up to and including the first day of January, 1861. This respondent further says that it is true that property values within the limits of West Virginia have been largely increased since 1861, but denies that such increase was caused by the improvements made within her present territory prior to 1861, but nearly all of the improvements and developments of resources in said State have been made within the last twenty-five years and are due to railroads and other public works constructed by her own people and by private capital brought within her territory and by appropriations made by Congress, and are almost entirely disconnected and independent of any expenditures made by Virginia prior to January 1, 1861, either by the proceeds of bonds issued and sold by her or from any other means derived from the creation of any debt by her. Respondent admits that the money appropriated and the payment of the annually accruing interest on said debt prior to January 1, 1861, and to the formation of the Sinking Fund for the ultimate redemption thereof was derived from taxes imposed upon property subject to taxation throughout the entire state, but respondent avers that the large amount thus derived from taxation to which the present State of West Virginia, then a part of Virginia, contributed her full share, was not kept intact by the State of Virginia after her ordinance of secession from the union in the year 1861, but was used by her in the administration of the so-called State Government at Richmond and for many other purposes while she claimed to be a part of the Confederate States of America, and that the part of the Sinking Fund so expended should be accounted for to this State and constitute a credit to her in the settlement of her equitable proportion of said debt; this respondent calls upon the State of Virginia to show what the aggregate amount of said Sinking Fund was on the first day of January, 1861, and of what it consisted, together with the interest thereon since accruing, and that she shall be required to give credit to this respondent for the amount contributed thereto by her prior to January 1, 1861, in case this court shall determine that an accounting shall be had between the said States in this action.

III.

This respondent denies that the Commonwealth of Virginia was induced to enter upon the construction of her general system of improvement, in a very large measure, for the purpose of developing the aforesaid resources of the western portion of the State, now constituting the State of West Virginia, and thereby as alleged in said bill, ameliorating the condition of her citizens residing therein, and denies that it was with this view that she took upon herself the alleged burden of her public debt, for which her bonds were issued, without which debt, it is alleged, said improvements could not have been undertaken. The respondent avers that Virginia appropriated to her own use, within the territory now constituting the present state of Virginia, about nine-tenths of all the money derived from the proceeds of said bonds, and that this large part of said proceeds enured to the sole benefit of the people living in what now constitutes the State of Virginia, while the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia received but a small proportional part thereof, and that all the money appropriated was expended under and by direction of the officers of the State of Virginia who were elected and controlled by the voters then living within the present limits of that State.

It may be true that a majority of the representatives residing in that part of Virginia now composing the State of West Virginia voted for the appropriations for the said public improvements, but if so, it was with the expectation and belief that an equitable proportion thereof would be expended in their section of the State which, as hereinbefore averred, was not done; and at the times when said debt was created the Legislature was in the absolute control of the very large majority of members chosen by the people living within what now constitutes the State of Virginia and they could, and actually did, control the legislation of the State.

IV.

It may be true that the development of this system of public improvements was, from its character and extent, progressive, as is alleged, and that the same extended with the general growth and increasing needs of the State, and was incomplete in 1861; but this respondent denies that prior to that time a very considerable portion of such improvements had been constructed in the territory now constituting West Virginia in order to meet the needs of the people of that portion of the State for their local purposes. On the contrary, the principal object of the State in entering upon this system was for the construction of a canal from the James River to the Ohio River for the purpose of connecting the Virginia seaboard with the western waters, the building of certain railroads projected in the same direction and in certain other directions, all within the present territorial limits of the State of Virginia, and for the construction of highways and bridges and certain public buildings, nearly all of which were located and constructed within the present limits of the State of Virginia. It is true, as alleged, that the expenditures of this money were under the direction and control of the Board of Public Works, the members of which were elected by the voters of the State at large, but respondent avers that this Board of Public Works was at all times composed of a majority of members residing within the present limits of Virginia and that only such members were chosen as were acceptable to the people residing within the present limits of Virginia and to promote their views and interests as to the method and policy of the expenditures of said moneys.

V.

It is true that on the 17th day of April, 1861, the people of Virginia in general convention assembled adopted an ordinance by which it was intended to withdraw Virginia from the union of the States, and it is also true that a considerable portion of the people of Virginia dissented from this action and that a great majority of the people residing in the territory now composing the State of West Virginia opposed the action thus taken by the people of Virginia then residing within the present territorial limits of that State, and representatives of the people organized a separate government within the territorial limits of Virginia, known and recognized by the people now living within the State of Virginia as the "Restored State of Virginia;" and this government was thereafter recognized by the executive and all the other departments of the United States Government and treated as the State of Virginia until long after the close of the Civil War.

VI.

It is also true that on the 20th day of August, 1861, the State of Virginia, in a convention assembled at the city of Wheeling, adopted an ordinance "to provide for the formation of a new State out of a portion of the territory of this State," and that section nine of said ordinance is in the following words:

> "The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all state expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the state government, since any part of said debt was contracted; and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during the same period. All private right and interests in lands within the proposed State derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of West Virginia."

Section ten of said ordinance provided as follows:

> "When the General Assembly shall give its consent to the formation of such new State, it shall forward to the Congress of the United States such consent, together with an official copy of such constitution, with the request that the said new State may be admitted into the Union of States."

The same ordinance also provided for a convention of the people to be held within the territorial limits of the then State of Virginia by representatives to be selected by a popular vote of the people within the limits of the proposed new State to adopt a constitution for such proposed new State, and the said convention assembled at Wheeling in November, 1861, and framed a constitution which was thereafter duly ratified by a vote of the people, which constitution contained the following provision relating to the public debt of the State of Virginia:

> "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, shall be assumed by this State; and the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof, by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest, and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

Subsequently, on the 13th day of May, 1862, an act was passed by the legislature of Virginia giving the consent of that State to the formation and erection of the proposed new State within the jurisdiction and territorial limits of said State of Virginia. Section one of this act provided as follows:

> "That the consent of the Legislature of Virginia be, and the same is hereby, given to the formation and erection of the State of West Virginia within the jurisdiction of this State, to include the counties of Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, (and many other counties) according to the boundaries and under the provisions set forth in the Constitution of the said State of West Virginia and the schedule thereto annexed, proposed by the convention which assembled at Wheeling on the 26th day of November, 1861."

Section three of said act provided:

> "Be it further enacted, That this act shall be transmitted by the executive to the senators and representatives of this Commonwealth in congress, together with a certified original of the said constitution and schedule, and the said senators and representatives are hereby requested to use their endeavors to obtain the consent of congress to the admission of the State of West Virginia into the union."

The respondent avers that said act was transmitted to the senators and representatives of Virginia in Congress. A correct copy of the same is attached to this answer and made part thereof as "Exhibit No. 1."

VII.

This respondent further says that the allegations contained in Paragraph VII of said bill with reference to the act of Congress and the admission of the State of West Virginia into the Union are true.

VIII.

This respondent for further answer to said bill says it is true that pending the admission of the State of West Virginia into the Union the general assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia passed the act of February 3, 1863, which is set forth in Paragraph VIII of said bill; but this respondent denies that the property which was by this act appropriated and transferred from the Commonwealth of Virginia to the State of West Virginia amounted in the aggregate to several millions of dollars on the 3d day of February, 1863, as in said bill is alleged, and denies that the State of West Virginia realized and received into her treasury from the sale of bank stock alone about $600,000 as is in said bill alleged.

Respondent denies that she is chargeable for or on account of the transfer of said property, except the stocks of companies or corporations and the credits, or for any part thereof, otherwise than in a settlement with the State of Virginia for this respondent's just proportion of the public debt of that State as provided in the said ordinance of August 20, 1861, and in the said act of February 3, 1863; and respondent avers that she is not chargeable in any settlement for or on account of such stocks or credits with any sum in excess of the actual market value of the same at the times when they were transferred to her; and she avers that at the times when such stocks and credits were transferred they were greatly depreciated and were of but little value.

IX.

Respondent admits the passage of the act of February 4, 1863, as alleged in Paragraph IX of said bill, but denies that she received or that it was intended by said act that she should receive any money except such as had then been collected, or might be thereafter collected, within the territory constituting the present State of West Virginia prior to the admission of the State into the Union, and she denies that she is legally or equitably liable to the plaintiffs for any part thereof, or that said act of the Legislature imposed, or purported to impose, any liability upon her or was so intended or understood. Respondent avers that after the Wheeling Convention and the passage of the ordinance providing for the formation of a new State, the Restored State of Virginia continued to impose and collect taxes in the territory now composing the State of West Virginia until the admission of that State into the Union, and a small part of the money realized by such taxation was returned to the new State under the said act of February 4, 1863, and no other money was appropriated or received under that act.

Respondent avers that nearly the entire amount of revenue collected by the "Restored State of Virginia," prior to the admission of West Virginia into the Union was collected from the counties now constituting the latter State, and that much the largest part of it was expended by the said state government outside of those counties, and that it was only just and equitable that such surplus as might remain at the time of admission into the Union should be restored to her in order that she might be able to install her government, establish courts and preserve order within her limits; and this just and equitable claim was recognized by Virginia when the said act was passed.

X.

This respondent, for further answer to said bill, says that it is true that the Constitution of the State of West Virginia contained the provision, among others, set forth and alleged in Paragraph X of said bill, but this respondent denies that the terms "public debt" or "previous liability" referred to either the property or money formerly belonging to the State of Virginia which had been transferred to and received by West Virginia under the acts of the general assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia set forth in Paragraph VIII and Paragraph IX of said bill, for the reason that said constitution was adopted long before the said acts of the general assembly of Virginia were passed, and before the act passed in May, 1862, by the said general assembly of Virginia giving her consent to the formation of the proposed new State out of the territory within her limits. This respondent therefore denies that anything contained in sections 5, 7, or 8 of Article VIII of the Constitution of West Virginia, adopted in 1861, bears any such construction, or is susceptible of any such meaning, as is given thereto by the allegations contained in Paragraph X of plaintiff's said bill.

XI.

This respondent for further answer to said bill says that she denies that the Commonwealth of Virginia made attempts at different times to ascertain and settle the equitable proportion of her public debt to be borne by West Virginia, upon the terms and in the manner contemplated by section nine of the ordinance adopted by the convention of the State of Virginia on the 20th day of August, 1861, in section eight of Article VIII of the Constitution of West Virginia, or in the manner prescribed by either of said instruments. The facts relating to the efforts of the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia to make an adjustment of the liability of the latter State, if any such liability exists, between the year 1865, when communications between the two States was re-established, and the year 1872, are as follows:

Prior to December, 1866, the Commonwealth of Virginia instituted a suit in equity against the State of West Virginia in this Honorable Court for a decision of the question whether or not the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson constituted a part of the State of West Virginia. This cause was not determined until the 6th day of March, 1871, on which day it was decided in favor of West Virginia. The effect of the pendency of this suit for over four years was to prevent a satisfactory adjustment of West Virginia's liability for the payment of an equitable proportion of the public debt of Virginia as provided in said ordinance of the Wheeling Convention because of the fact that West Virginia's boundaries could not be known and therefore it could not be determined what amount of money had been expended within her limits for public works or other purposes prior to the 1st day of January, 1861. 11

Respondent avers that the Governor of West Virginia in his message to the legislature in January, 1866, recommended that Commissioners be appointed to settle with the Commonwealth of Virginia respecting the said public debt; but no action was taken by the legislature of West Virginia of 1866 for the reason that the authorities of Virginia had made, at that time, no provision for a settlement, so far as was known to the authorities of West Virginia.

In his message to the legislature of West Virginia in 1867, the Governor again directed the attention of that body to the subject of the adjustment of the said public debt, stating that he was informed that Honorable Alexander H. H. Stuart of Virginia, together with two others, had been appointed under a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of Virginia: First for the purpose of securing a reunion of the two States, or secondly, for the purpose of adjusting the public debt and for a fair division of the public property. On the 28th day of February of the same year, the legislature of West Virginia by resolution declared that the people of that State were unalterably opposed to a reunion with the people of the commonwealth of Virginia, but expressed the willingness of the citizens of West Virginia to effect a prompt and equitable settlement between the States and directed the Governor as soon as the said suit in the Supreme Court of the United States, relating to the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, had been disposed of, to appoint three commissioners on the part of West Virginia to treat with the Commissioners of Virginia upon the matter of adjusting the public debt of that State as provided in the ordinance of 1861, and the Constitution of West Virginia, adopted by the convention which assembled in November, 1861, and also requiring a report of their action to the Governor in order that the same might be communicated to the legislature of West Virginia for its action.

In January, 1868, the Governor of West Virginia informed the legislature in his annual message that the commissioners had not been appointed under the resolution because the suit in relation to the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson had not been disposed of. But in February of that year the Committee on Claims and Grievances of the House of Delegates, upon the petition of one of Virginia's creditors asking that the State of West Virginia provide for the payment of certain bonds of the State of Virginia of which he claimed to be the bona fide holder, reported that the settlement of West Virginia should be with the State of Virginia and not with the creditors of Virginia. And again in his message of 1869 to the Legislature of West Virginia the governor referred to the subject of the settlement of the public debt of Virginia and stated that commissioners had not been appointed by him up to that time owing to the fact that the suit between the States was still pending. The State of Virginia having, by an act approved February 18, 1870, provided for the appointment of three commissioners to treat with the authorities of the State of West Virginia, the governor of West Virginia, by communication dated February 24, 1870, advised the Legislature of West Virginia of the passage of that act by Virginia, and thereupon the Legislature of West Virginia, on the 1st day of March, 1870, appointed a joint committee of the two Houses of the Legislature to confer with the Virginia Commissioners and report to the Legislature, provided, however, that such appointment of commissioners should not in any manner prejudice the rights of West Virginia involved in the suit in equity brought against her by the commonwealth of Virginia as hereinbefore stated, which was still pending in this court.

Afterwards, on March 3, 1870, the governor of West Virginia was authorized by the Legislature to appoint three resident citizens of the State to treat with the authorities of the Commonwealth of Virginia upon the subject of the proper adjustment of the public debt of that State, but it was provided that nothing in that action was to be construed as impairing the jurisdiction of West Virginia over the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson; but as there was an omission to make an appropriation to pay the expenses of West Virginia's commissioners, and the resolution authorizing their appointment was passed on the last day of the session of the Legislature, the Governor of West Virginia again in his message of 1871 stated that no appointment had been made owing to the lack of funds to pay the expenses of such commission.

Pending the efforts thus being made on the part of West Virginia, the general assembly of Virginia, on February 20, 1871, through the Governor of that State, tendered to West Virginia a proposition for an arbitration of the question relating to the public debt of that State, the arbitrators not to be citizens of either State, each State to appoint two arbitrators and the two to select an umpire if deemed necessary. This proposal made by the Commonwealth of Virginia was submitted to the Legislature of West Virginia on the 17th day of February, 1871, but on the 15th day of February, 1871, two days prior to the communication of this action of the General Assembly of Virginia, the Legislature of West Virginia had passed a joint resolution authorizing the Governor to appoint three disinterested citizens of the State to treat with the authorities of the Commonwealth of Virginia upon the subject of the adjustment of the public debt of that State existing prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, to report on various matters relating to the creation of the debt; upon the investments held by the State of Virginia, and, providing, among other things, compensation for the commissioners and for the employment of an accountant or clerk.

The proposal of Virginia relating to arbitration was referred by the Legislature of West Virginia to a joint special committee of the two Houses, which committee reported a preamble and joint resolution rejecting the tender of arbitration made by the Governor of Virginia because the adjustment of the debt should be subject to the ratification of the legislatures of the two States and because citizen commissioners from both States would be necessarily more familiar with the circumstances attending the creation of the said debt and other questions connected therewith. The said joint resolution also invited the Commonwealth of Virginia to appoint three disinterested citizens of that State as commissioners, with authority to treat with the commissioners, therefore authorized upon the part of West Virginia; but it was provided that their report should be subject to the approval and ratification of the legislature of the State of West Virginia and the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia; and the Governor of West Virginia was also directed by said resolution to communicate to the Governor of Virginia, without delay, certified copies of the preamble and resolution. Accordingly, in pursuance of this resolution, the Governor of West Virginia appointed three commissioners to negotiate with the State of Virginia for a settlement of West Virginia's equitable part of the public debt. After their appointment the said commissioners proceeded to Richmond, where all the accounts, vouchers and other evidences of the receipt and expenditure of the money were kept, and there spent some time in the examination of such documents as were accessible, but realizing the necessity for further and more accurate information than they could obtain unassisted, they addressed a communication to the second auditor of the Commonwealth of Virginia soliciting specifically the necessary information. To this request on the part of the Commissioners of West Virginia, the said second auditor made a reply in which he declined to furnish the information desired, a copy of which reply is herewith filed as "Exhibit No. 2" and made a part of this answer.

The failure and refusal of Virginia to co-operate with the said commissioners placed them at a great disadvantage in the examination of the records at Richmond, and they therefore obtained only such facts and figures as to enable them to make an imperfect report to the Governor of the State of West Virginia with reference to said public debt, showing the part of said public debt for which, in their opinion, according to such information as they could procure, West Virginia was liable.

Respondent avers that by reason of the inability of said commissioners to procure from the State of Virginia the necessary information concerning the public debt and other matters connected therewith, their report was not only very incomplete and inaccurate, but it appeared therefrom, that in making their investigations they wholly disregarded the provisions of the ordinance of the Wheeling Convention adopted August 20, 1861, and did not follow the method of settlement therein prescribed and respondent avers that for these and other reasons the conclusions of said commissioners were not agreed to or accepted by the Legislature of West Virginia; but subsequently the Senate of West Virginia proceeded to make an investigation of the subject through its Finance Committee, of which J. M. Bennett, who was for eight years auditor of the old State of Virginia, and whose time expired when the city of Richmond was evacuated in 1865, was chairman. Said committee made a report on the 22nd day of December, 1873, from which it appeared that the State of West Virginia upon a settlement with the Commonwealth of Virginia based upon the provisions of section nine of the ordinance passed by the commonwealth of Virginia at the Wheeling Convention did not owe to the said Commonwealth of Virginia anything whatever, but that, on the contrary, the said Commonwealth was indebted to West Virginia on account of said debt on the 1st day of January, 1861, in the sum of $512,000, not including interest. A copy of said report is filed herewith, and made a part hereof as Exhibit 3.

The State of West Virginia has never receded from the provisions contained in section nine of the Wheeling Ordinance with reference to the settlement of this respondent's just proportion of the public debt of Virginia, but has uniformly adhered thereto throughout her history as a State; and the resolutions adopted by her Legislature in recent years in which she declared that she did not owe the State of Virginia anything on account of said public debt were based upon the said report of the Senate Committee made in 1873 as aforesaid, and upon Virginia's persistent refusal to recognize the basis of settlement provided for in said ordinance as the just and true one upon which a settlement between the two States could legally and equitably be made.

After the proposition of the Commonwealth of Virginia to select arbitrators, which was declined by the State of West Virginia as hereinbefore stated the said Commonwealth of Virginia at no time signified her desire to settle with West Virginia the matters relating to West Virginia's proportion of said public debt until the adoption of a joint resolution approved March 6, 1894, after she had compromised and settled with her creditors and been released from all liability, which resolution provided for the appointment of a commission of seven members who were thereby authorized and directed to negotiate with the State of West Virginia for a settlement and adjustment of the latter State's part of the public debt proper to be borne by her, but which also expressly provided that such commission should not proceed with such negotiations until assurances should be received from the holders of a majority in amount of the certificates issued by Virginia under the acts hereinafter referred to, that they desired the said commission to enter into and undertake such negotiations and would accept the amount so ascertained to be paid by the State of West Virginia in full settlement of the one-third of the debt of the original State which had not been assumed by the State of Virginia; and it was also provided in said resolution that in no event should said commission enter into negotiations except upon the basis that Virginia was bound only for the two-thirds of the debt of the original State and which, as recited in said resolution she had already provided for as her equitable proportion thereof. Under the aforesaid resolution no negotiations were proposed to West Virginia until the year 1895 and then only upon the conditions prescribed in the joint resolution of 1894, which has never yet been repealed or modified in this respect; and negotiations were again offered by Virginia in 1906 but upon the same condition, that West Virginia should enter upon such negotiations with the admission on her part that the said Commonwealth of Virginia should only be liable for two-thirds of said debt, which was again declined by the said State of West Virginia.

XII.

This respondent further answering the said bill, says that the efforts looking to a settlement, and the only efforts looking to a settlement, are those hereinbefore stated in paragraph XI in this answer; the said commonwealth of Virginia having declined in 1871 to appoint any commissioners empowered and authorized to adjust or confer with the commissioners appointed by the State of West Virginia to adjust and determine what was the proportion of the public debt of said commonwealth to be assumed by this respondent. But, on the contrary, the said State of Virginia in 1871, assumed the right herself to settle the said public debt, created prior to January 1, 1861, with her creditors and for that purpose, without advising or consulting with West Virginia, passed an act, approved March 30, 1871, whereby she repudiated the ordinance of the Wheeling convention and adopted a method of her own as a basis of settlement and set apart as her own just proportion of said public debt two-thirds thereof, providing for its adjustment and funding as in the said act is set forth; a copy of which is filed with said bill as exhibit No. 1.

XIII.

This respondent further answering said bill, says that any burden that the commonwealth of Virginia assumed with reference to the payment of said debts; was made upon the assumption that she owed only two-thirds thereof and which she thereby admitted was not more than her just proportion; and therefore whatever she has paid on account thereof is a matter that cannot affect any controversy involved in this suit and is a matter of which the commonwealth of Virginia cannot complain. It is true, as alleged in said bill, that the great mass of creditors of the commonwealth of Virginia have agreed to accept the certificates issued under the acts of 1871, 1879, 1882 and 1892, for the one-third of her public debt, created prior to January 1, 1861, and have likewise agreed to accept the adjudication of this court what ever it may be, in full discharge of all their claims against Virginia on account of the old bonds and their claims represented by said certificates, thus relieving said commonwealth from any further liability as to said one-third of the public debt, or any part thereof, and this was the effect which the commonwealth of Virginia and the creditors intended and understood that the act of March 30, 1871, should have as to all the certificates issued under that act.

XIV.

This respondent for further answer to said bill, and especially that part contained in paragraph XIV, says that the old bonds were all required by the acts of the Legislature to be surrendered by the holders thereof to the State of Virginia and canceled, and they were all surrendered and canceled and new bonds were issued in lieu thereof for two-thirds of the said debt, not including interest, and certificates were issued for the other one-third; and it was declared by Virginia in the acts authorizing the issues and in the certificates that they were to be paid by West Virginia; and respondent avers that the said commonwealth of Virginia now holds said certificates in trust only for the owners thereof.

This respondent denies that Virginia used any means for an amicable settlement of said debt with West Virginia, or made any overtures to that end which were repeatedly refused, as alleged in said bill, except as hereinbefore stated in paragraph XI of this answer.

XV.

This respondent, for further answer to said bill, avers that even if all the bonds and obligations and other evidences of indebtedness of the original State of Virginia outstanding or contracted before January 1, 1861, as stated in paragraph I of said bill, except a comparatively insignificant sum, not amounting to one percentum of this liability, have been taken up and are now actually held by the commonwealth of Virginia, this fact does not give to the plaintiff the right to call upon West Virginia for settlement with respect thereto, because this respondent avers that the said bonds and obligations and other evidences of public indebtedness of the commonwealth of Virginia, contracted prior to January, 1861, have been taken up by the issuance of other bonds in lieu of two-thirds thereof as before stated, and by the issuance of the certificates hereinbefore mentioned for the other one-third thereof, the said one-third to be paid by West Virginia, according to the plan of funding the said debt by said commonwealth of Virginia, and that all the said original bonds and obligations and other evidences of said indebtedness are without any force, effect or value and have been canceled and annulled as aforesaid. Respondent avers that whatever has been paid upon said old indebtedness, by Virginia, if anything, was paid only on account of her own separate and equitable proportion thereof as recognized and declared by herself; and this respondent denies that the commonwealth of Virginia has any claim either in law or equity for any accounting with reference to said bonds or certificates or other evidences of indebtedness mentioned in paragraph XV of said bill or any part thereof. Respondent avers that the plaintiff does not allege or admit in said bill, nor does it appear thereby, that she is liable on account of the other one-third or for any part thereof, which is represented, as before alleged, by said certificates.

XVI.

For further answer to said bill respondent avers that if any sum has been paid by Virginia, even though amounting in the aggregate to $25,000,000, including principal and interest to date, calculated at the rate of 6 per centum per annum, it was paid by her on account of her admitted just and equitable proportion of said public debt created prior to January 1, 1861; and if she has any claim at all against West Virginia on account of said alleged payment, which is not admitted, but is denied, it can only be for such amount as may be ascertained upon the basis and according to the principles embodied in section 9 of the ordinance of the Virginia convention, as hereinbefore stated. So this respondent denies that she is liable for any part of the obligations mentioned in paragraph XV and paragraph XVI of the plaintiff's bill, alleged to have been taken up and paid on account of said public debt, and denies that the said commonwealth of Virginia has, in her own right, a "just claim" against West Virginia for contribution on account thereof.

Respondent, for further answer to said paragraph XVI of said bill, avers that all accounts, vouchers and other records relating to the said public debt of Virginia, showing the payments made thereon, if any, and all other facts connected therewith, are now and always have been in the exclusive possession and control of the plaintiff, and respondent has no knowledge or information concerning the alleged payment of $25,000,000, or any other sum, on account of said debt existing prior to January 1, 1861, and therefore denies that plaintiff has paid said sum of $25,000,000 or any part thereof, and demands strict proof.

XVII.

This respondent, for answer to paragraph XVII of said bill, avers that the matters therein contained do not relate to the public debt of Virginia within the meaning and contemplation of section 9 of the Virginia ordinance of August 20, 1861, and cannot be brought into this suit for adjudication and determination. This respondent denies any and all liability for or on account of the matters referred to in said paragraph and avers that the said allegations are so uncertain, general and indefinite that respondent cannot answer them specifically and that no claim against this respondent can be founded upon them in this action.

XVIII.

This respondent, for further answer to said bill, says that she denies that the alleged liability of the State of West Virginia for a just and equitable proportion of the public debt of the commonwealth of Virginia rests upon any of the grounds specified in paragraph XVIII of said bill except the second, upon which, as hereinbefore averred in this answer, the State of West Virginia has always been ready and willing, and is now ready and willing, to adjust her liability, and upon which she proposed adjustment from 1866 to 1873, at which time Virginia had clearly evinced by her legislative action with reference to her public debt, her intention not to observe or abide by section 9 of the ordinance adopted by the Wheeling convention, and actually repudiated the agreed method upon which a settlement between the States should be made.

XIX.

This respondent, for further answer to said bill, avers that the only acts of Virginia indicating a desire to treat with West Virginia with reference to said public debt was that in which she tendered a proposition to arbitrate the same, thereby proposing to ignore the mode of settlement provided in said ordinance, and the two subsequent ones whereby she declared the only conditions upon which she would negotiate with the said State of West Virginia was that West Virginia should admit that the said Commonwealth of Virginia was only liable for two-thirds of the said public debt; and this respondent avers that if it is intended by paragraph XIX of said bill to aver that plaintiff ever attempted an amicable negotiation with West Virginia, except the ones hereinbefore stated, then this respondent denies the allegations contained in said paragraph of the bill and calls for proof thereof.

XX.

This respondent, for further answer to said bill, avers that what has already been stated in paragraph XIX of this answer is also applicable to paragraph XX of said bill and is hereby adopted as part hereof; and respondent avers in addition thereto that the alleged attempts of said commission to negotiate with West Virginia with reference to the said public debt related solely to the certificates owned by third parties and held in trust by said commission and the state of Virginia, which certificates represented about all, or practically all, of the one-third of the public debt not including interest of that State created prior to January 1, 1861; and these efforts on the part of said commission to negotiate were upon the expressed condition that this respondent should concede that the Commonwealth of Virginia was, and is, liable for two thirds of the said public debt, and no more; which proffered negotiations were declined by the State of West Virginia because the finance committee of one branch of her legislative body had ascertained and reported that there was no liability upon her part to the Commonwealth of Virginia on account of the said public debt under the ordinance of the Wheeling Convention, and this respondent now denies that she owes or will owe any sum whatever to the State of Virginia upon a settlement made in the mode provided in said ordinance.

For further answer respondent says that the ordinance adopted by the Wheeling Convention in August, 1861, provided for the formation of the new State out of a part of the territory of the Commonwealth of Virginia, defined in the manner in which the respondent's equitable proportion of the public debt of Virginia should be ascertained, as appears from section nine of the said ordinance, which is set out in paragraph VI of the plaintiff's bill, and is heretofore referred to and made part of this answer.

And the said Commonwealth of Virginia also provided by section 10 of said ordinance as follows:

> "When the General Assembly shall give its consent to the formation of such new state, it shall forward to the Congress of the United States such consent, together with an official copy of such Constitution, with the request that the said new state may be admitted into the Union of States."

And respondent avers that the General Assembly referred to in section ten was the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia and the constitution referred to in said section was the constitution to be thereafter adopted by the proposed new state.

The said ordinance as heretofore stated also provided for the holding of a convention by the citizens within the territory of the proposed new state for the purpose of framing a constitution. After the promulgation of the ordinance of the convention, the people of Virginia, as well as those residing in that part of the territory to be converted into a new state as those residing in the other part of the Commonwealth of Virginia, which constitutes the present territory of that State, were fully advised as to the provisions of the said ordinance defining the manner in which the equitable proportion of the said debt was to be ascertained, and when the Constitution of West Virginia was framed and adopted in the year 1861 the said section nine was in full force, and both the Commonwealth of Virginia and the citizens residing in that portion thereof out of which the proposed new state was to be formed were satisfied with the methods therein provided for ascertaining this respondent's equitable proportion of the said public debt, and the constitution was framed and adopted, and West Virginia's equitable proportion of said public debt was assumed on the basis of the said ordinance, and not otherwise. It was provided in section eight, Article VIII, of the Constitution of the State of West Virginia:

> "An equitable portion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, shall be assumed by this State; and the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof, by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest, and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

After the adoption of this Constitution the Commonwealth of Virginia, on May 13, 1862, as hereinbefore stated, by an act of her Legislature, gave her consent to the formation of the new state. "According to the boundaries and under the provisions set forth in the Constitution for the said state of West Virginia, and the schedule thereto annexed, proposed by the Convention which assembled at Wheeling on the 26th day of November, 1861."

Subsequently, by an act of Congress approved December 31, 1862, provision was made for the admission of West Virginia into the Union, the said act providing a change in the seventh section of the eleventh article of the constitution of the said new state, relating to slavery, and providing for a vote to be taken relative thereto, and the proclamation thereof by the President of the United States, under which West Virginia, on the 20th day of June, 1863, became one of the states of the Union.

And so this respondent is advised, and now avers, that when West Virginia framed her constitution and inserted in it the provision concerning the adjustment of the public debt of Virginia and the Commonwealth of Virginia, through her Legislature, by the act aforesaid, approved the constitution of West Virginia as the basis of her consent for the formation of that State and her admission into the Union, and upon the passage of the act Congress admitting the said state into the Union, a compact between the two states prescribing the manner in which this respondent's equitable proportion of the debt should be ascertained was concluded and it became, and is binding upon the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia.

The respondent avers that her equitable proportion of said debt cannot be otherwise ascertained or determined than by the action of the State of West Virginia through her Legislature, as provided by her constitution, nor can its liquidation be otherwise provided for than by a sinking fund of sufficient amount to pay the accrued interest and redeem the principal of whatever sum may be thus ascertained within the period of thirty-four years as likewise therein provided. Respondent therefore pleads and relies upon said compact in bar of the plaintiff's right to prosecute and maintain this suit in this Honorable Court and prays that the said bill may be dismissed.

XXII.

This respondent further answering and as a defense to said bill avers that the Commonwealth of Virginia, by her said bill and exhibits therewith filed and made part thereof, shows that she has adjusted before the institution of this suit to the entire satisfaction of her people and her creditors her alleged equitable proportion of her whole public debt existing on the first day of January, 1861, which she claims is only two-thirds thereof, and that therefore this respondent should be made liable for the other one-third thereof. In effecting this adjustment she refunded all the evidences of indebtedness created prior to January 1, 1861, except about one per centum thereof, and required the same to be surrendered to her and cancelled and annulled. Respondent avers that the said Commonwealth of Virginia did not refund two-thirds of her public debt, as alleged, in said bill although she proposed to do this by an act of her Assembly approved March 30, 1871; but finding that she could probably secure more favorable terms of settlement of what she decided to be her just portion, another act was passed by her General Assembly which was approved March 28, 1879, whereby the debt was divided into two classes as shown by said act, and thereby made a further reduction in the principal of her indebtedness, as well as securing a lower rate of interest to be paid thereon.

After various efforts to adjust the indebtedness on terms most favorable to herself, she secured a settlement whereby she funded and settled what she claimed to be her equitable proportion of her debt at a fraction less than forty-seven per cent upon the entire amount, including interest, a part of which she may have paid, but for the great volume of which she has issued her bonds, and which are now outstanding and unpaid. For one-third of her original indebtedness, created prior to January 1, 1861, she has issued certificates amounting in the aggregate to $18,227,153.60, of which it is alleged her Commissioners of The Sinking Fund and the Literary Fund hold $2,745,462.60, leaving $15,281,970 in the hands of the public.

Said certificates were issued by the State of Virginia and accepted by her creditors under the following acts of the General Assembly of that State, to-wit:

Under the act of March 30, 1871, certificates were issued for the sum of $15,281,970, of which it is alleged the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund and the Literary Fund held $2,578,515, leaving $12,703,451 in the hands of the public. Of these certificates issued to the public $10,851,294 had been deposited with the Virginia Commission on the fourth day of January, 1906, and only $1,852,157 had not been deposited at that time.

Under the act of March 28, 1879, certificates were issued to the amount of $564,258, of which $463,892 had been deposited with said commission at the date aforesaid, leaving $100,366 which had not been deposited. Neither the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund nor the Literary Fund held any of these certificates. The act of the Legislature under which all these certificates were issued and accepted by the creditors expressly provided that they should be taken "as a full and absolute release of the State of Virginia from all liability on account of said certificates."

Under the act of February 14, 1882, certificates were issued to the amount of $1,775,603, of which $166,943 were issued to the Virginia Literary Fund and $1,608,660 were issued to the public. Of the amount issued to the public $1,313,792 had been deposited with the Virginia Commission on the date aforesaid, leaving outstanding at that time $294,868.

Under the act of February 20, 1892, certificates were issued to the amount of $605,320, of which $544,456 had been deposited on the date aforesaid, leaving $60,844 still in the hands of the old bond-holders or their successors in interest. Neither the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund nor the Literary Fund received any of the certificates issued under said act.

The certificates for $1,774,603 issued under the act of 1882 and the $605,320 issued under the act of 1892 were in the following form, and respondent avers that the State of Virginia has been wholly released from liability thereon.

No..... The Commonwealth of Virginia has this day discharged her equitable share of the (registered or coupon, as the case may be), bond ..... dollars, dated ..... day of ....., from ....., to be accounted for to the holder of this certificate by the State of West Virginia, without recourse upon this commonwealth.

Done at the Capitol of the State of Virginia, this ..... day of ....., eighteen hundred and ninety-two.

..... Second Auditor.

..... Treasurer.

And respondent says that the amount of certificates of all classes deposited with the Virginia Commission on the date aforesaid was $13,173,435.41, but respondent does not know what amount, if any, has been deposited since that time, and respondent asks that the State of Virginia be required to show on the hearing of this cause, what amount of certificates have been so deposited since January 4, 1906, and under what acts of the Legislature the same were issued. Respondents avers that all said deposits were made under and in accordance with the agreement made between the Virginia Commission and the Depositing Committee for the certificate holders on the 24th day of November, 1895, which, among other things provides as follows:

> "And the said depositing committee agrees on behalf of the depositors of said deferred certificates so placed subject to the control of the said commission and on behalf of those entitled to the benefit of said certificates as assignees of said depositors or otherwise to accept as aforesaid such amount, either in cash or securities, as may be determined or ascertained in any such suit to be due by, or as may be realized through any adjustment or settlement as aforesaid from the State of West Virginia on account of the said certificates and on account of the bonds represented by and mentioned in the said certificates respectively, in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims on account of said certificates and on account of the bonds therein mentioned, and to accept and take such adjudication against the State of West Virginia in full discharge and acquittance of all claims in the premises against the State of Virginia."

And so respondent avers that the Commonwealth of Virginia has been wholly released from all liability on account of the said certificates and every part of them and has no legal or equitable interest in any claim based thereon, and that this suit was instituted and is being prosecuted by the said Commonwealth of Virginia solely as trustee for and on behalf of the holders of said certificates and not in her own right; and that she has agreed through her said commission with the said creditors that she is to incur no expense on account of this action and that the whole expense thereof is to be borne by the holders of said certificates in whose behalf and for whose exclusive benefit the same was instituted and is now being prosecuted.

XXIII.

This respondent for further answer to said bill says that all the matters and allegations therein contained and not admitted in this answer to be true or heretofore specifically denied, are now and hereby denied and strict proof thereof is required.

Wherefore, this defendant, having fully answered, confessed, traversed and avoided or denied all the matters in the said bill of plaintiff, material to be answered, according to her best knowledge and belief and humbly prays this Honorable Court that the said plaintiff's bill be dismissed and that this defendant have and recover her reasonable costs.

And as in duty bound she will ever pray, etc.

EXHIBITS WITH ANSWER.

In the Supreme Court of the United States.

Original.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 1.

An Act giving the consent of the Legislature of Virginia to the formation and erection of a new State within the jurisdiction of this State.

Passed May 13, 1862.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That the consent of the Legislature of Virginia be, and the same is hereby given to the formation and erection of the State of West Virginia, within the jurisdiction of this State, to include the counties of Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marshall, Wetzel, Mason, Monongalia, Preston, Taylor, Tyler, Pleasants, Ritchie, Doddridge, Harrison, Wood, Jackson, Wirt, Roane, Calhoun, Gilmer, Barbour, Tucker, Lewis, Braxton, Upshur, Randolph, Mason, Putnam, Kanawha, Clay, Nicholas, Cabell, Wayne, Boone, Logan, Wyoming, Mercer, McDowell, Webster, Pocahontas, Fayette, Raleigh, Greenbrier, Monroe, Pendleton, Hardy, Hampshire and Morgan, according to the boundaries and under the provisions set forth in the constitution for the said State of West Virginia and the schedule thereto annexed, proposed by the convention which assembled at Wheeling, on the twenty-sixth day of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-one.

2. Be it further enacted, That the consent of the legislature of Virginia be, and the same is hereby given, that the counties of Berkeley, Jefferson and Frederick, shall be included in and form part of the State of West Virginia whenever the voters of said counties shall ratify and assent to the said constitution, at an election held for the purpose, at such time and under such regulations as the commissioners named in the said schedule may prescribe.

3. Be it further enacted, That this act shall be transmitted by the executive to the senators and representatives of this commonwealth in congress, together with a certified original of the said constitution and schedule, and the said senators and representatives are hereby requested to use their endeavors to obtain the consent of congress to the admission of the State of West Virginia into the Union.

4. This act shall be in force from and after its passage.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 2.

SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
RICHMOND, Nov. 16, 1871.

A. W. Campbell Esq., Secretary, &c.:

DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 14th was received. You ask me for a report upon a variety of questions connected with our public debt, the transactions of the Board of Public Works in regard to it, and the financial affairs of the State, which it is understood, of course, you propose to use in the contemplated adjustment of the portion to be paid by West Virginia of the debt.

To answer the questions propounded would involve an amount of labor which we could not bestow on the subject.

But, apart from this, I presume at an early day this office will be called upon by the Executive or the General Assembly of Virginia for detailed reports of all the matters referred to, which will be available to you.

The books and records of this office are open to your inspection.

I trust that in failing to respond to your inquiries you will not regard me as in any wise wanting in official courtesy to you or your associates. None, certainly, is intended.

I have the honor to be,
Most respectfully yours,
ASA ROGERS.

EXHIBIT NUMBER 3.

REPORT OF THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE OF 1873.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
CHARLESTON, December 22, 1873.

The attention of the Committee on Finance has been repeatedly called by resolutions introduced in the Senate and otherwise, to the subject of Virginia's public debt and the share which it is equitable for West Virginia to bear and pay. The committee under these frequent promptings have been constrained to give the subject their most earnest and careful attention as a matter fraught with more than ordinary consequences to the State, and have come to a conclusion satisfactory to themselves, and it is believed that the conclusion of the committee will be approved by the judgment of the people interested, and will receive the sanction of any tribunal before whom it may be brought for adjudication.

It is necessary to a full understanding of this subject that reference be had to the treaty stipulations or fundamental conditions by whatsoever name they may be called, between the representatives of the people of Virginia and the people desiring separation, by the creation of a new State, which led to the formation of a constitution, its adoption by the people and its approval by Congress, and the establishment of the State of West Virginia.

The ninth section of "an ordinance to provide for the formation of a new State out of a portion of the territory of this State," [Virginia] passed August 20, 1861, provided, that "the new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of the debt was contracted; and deducting therefrom the monies paid into the treasury of the commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during the same period."

Upon compliance with the conditions contained in the ninth section and here quoted the people within the counties now constituting West Virginia, were authorized to form a constitution to be presented to Congress for its approval and for the admission of the new State into the Union.

Accordingly a constitution was adopted by a convention of the people from the several counties now constituting the State of West Virginia and to carefully guard and secure the rights prescribed by Virginia as a condition precedent to the formation of the new State, a provision was incorporated into it to secure the exact fulfillment of the treaty stipulations as aforesaid.

By article eight, section eight of the constitution, it was provided that "an equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State and that the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable, and to provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

This subject has received a careful consideration by commissioners appointed by authority of this State, and while this committee see much to approve in the Report of the Debt Commissioners of West Virginia on this subject for their great research and the ability with which they handled the subject, considering the peculiar difficulties under which they labored, as shown in their report, and in the illustration of the many problems that may rise in the discussion of this subject, yet this committee think the controlling question has not been discussed by the Commissioners by reason of the embarrassment surrounding their action; and the Committee beg leave to refer to the report which is appended hereto and marked No. 1.

In construing the legal principles involved in this matter, it may be assumed that a private creditor of Virginia cannot sue West Virginia for contribution; for that is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States; see article eleven of amendments United States Constitution which declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens or subjects of any foreign State." But notwithstanding this prohibition the third article extends the judicial power of the Supreme Court to controversies between two or more States. Under this provision of the Constitution it is within the power of Virginia to institute and prosecute any suit against West Virginia touching the controversies respecting the public debt.

If the conditions precedent to our admission as a State, prescribed by Virginia herself, be accepted as a true basis of adjustment and final settlement, Virginia's claims for expenditures can very properly be offset by our contributions.

Upon this basis the whole subject is one of easy solution, containing no other items than that of creditor or debtor with balances to be struck upon agreed principles. The legislative history of Virginia establishes beyond a doubt that the first act of assembly to create a debt or issue a bond was passed in the year 1821, and the executive records show that the first bond issued by the commonwealth of Virginia was in the year 1822.

From this latter period we date the commencement of our liability under the fundamental stipulations prescribed by Virginia for our separation, which were accepted by the people of this State, approved by Congress, and the President of the United States, as the head of the executive department, and subsequently affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and may at this day be accepted by the public as firmly engrafted into obligations and rights as if the same were constitutional provisions emanating from the supreme power.

The concurrent approval, binding alike upon the people of Virginia and West Virginia, lead us to the following conclusions which are the results of a mathematical demonstration, founded upon public official records, appropriate to determine how much of the bonded debt of Virginia existing prior to January, 1861, was expended within the limits of this State, and how much was contributed by the counties forming the same.

The report of the Debt Commissioners hereinbefore referred to shows that all State expenditures within this State prior to January, 1861, amounted to $3,366,929.29, and although it is apparent that bonds for quite a large amount of this sum were never issued nevertheless the expenditures would seem to import an obligation upon our people to return every dollar which has been so contributed to the development of the territory of our State.

The committee have not entered into the tedious process of calculating the interest, for the obvious reason that there would be as much interest on our contributions to as upon the receipts of Virginia.

The committee have therefore assumed the foregoing sum of $3,366,929.29 as importing a debt upon West Virginia to be gathered and itemized from the report of the Debt Commissioners aforesaid.

From the amount of the foregoing expenditures must be deducted the moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth of Virginia, from the counties included in this State during the same period. For the sake of convenience the committee have charged to Virginia, not the whole contribution, but the surplus after deducting a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government. Our total contributions from taxes to the State of Virginia in the year 1822, amounted to $63,000; and in that year the total of the expenses of the State government chargeable to us was $47,000, leaving an excess of $16,000, which would go to the liquidation of the debt created for expenditures within our midst.

This small surplus in 1822, by the process of an increased rate of taxation, and the increased value of the subjects to be taxed the rate rising from 8 cents to 40 cents on every one hundred dollars in value, made the excess of our contributions to the treasury of Virginia in the year 1860 amount to $512,000, rejecting fractions.

Thus our contributions to the treasury of Virginia arising from taxes collected in that year amounted to $647,079.96. In the same year our proportion of the ordinary expenses of government amounted to $135,000, which left the surplus aforesaid of $512,079.96. It will be observed that the committee have referred only to the surplus in 1822 and in 1860. The surplus for the intermediate periods swell the aggregate of our contributions to $3,892,000 which is in excess of expenditures within our limits by $525,000.

It will thus be seen that our state is not indebted and the Committee confidently advance this statement, not only as containing the true basis of settlement between the two States, but it is supported by incontrovertible facts by conditions precedent prescribed by Virginia under the restored government which government has been approved as aforesaid by Congress, by the Executive and by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Notwithstanding the satisfactory condition of our finances and our material resources, the attention of the committee has been called to the fact that "West Virginia certificates" and "West Virginia bonds" are quoted at the marketable value of from five to fifteen cents on the dollar, in money of the stock exchanges and markets of the United States. This of course has a tendency to depreciate the just credit to which a State is entitled. For it is acknowledged that the credit of a State depends upon the value of its taxable property, the amount of its indebtedness and above all upon its punctuality in meeting its engagements. These quotations imply two things: first, that we owe a debt; second. that we are either unable or unwilling to pay the debt which beget a want of confidence in the minds of the public who are uninformed with respect to the true condition of West Virginia; and operate unjustly and injuriously upon us. It would seem to be enough for us to say, and we make the assertion without the fear of contradiction, that we owe no debt, that we have issued no bonds and our Constitution forbids the creation of a liability in the nature of a public debt; and with this assurance we cannot demand more nor expect less of all honorable stock brokers and bankers than the withdrawal from the list of indebted states the name of West Virginia.

"West Virginia certificates" and "West Virginia bonds" do not exist. No bonds have ever at any time been issued by West Virginia and we are prohibited from issuing at any time hereafter any bonds on the faith of this State. The bonds or certificates referred to were issued by Virginia, and West Virginia had no agency or participation therein.

In respect to the credit which our conduct and property would imply, we might be indifferent, but we have higher aims and more ennobling ambition. We desire to invite immigration, to cultivate our forests and to develop our mineral resources; this cannot be done with success, when men of thrift and capital are deterred from immigrating to and within our borders by reason of the persistent and unjustifiable misquotations of our credit. No one could be expected to invest capital within a State which has so absorbed the substance of the people thereof that its good faith and obligations were only worth five cents on the dollar. West Virginia owes no debt, has no bonds for sale and asks no credit.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

DECREE REFERING THE CAUSE TO A SPECIAL MASTER.

[DECREE ENTERED MAY 4TH, 1908, REFERRING CAUSE TO MASTER.]

Supreme Court of the United States.

No. 4, Original.—OCTOBER TERM, 1907.

Commonwealth of Virginia, Complainant,
vs.
State of West Virginia, Defendant.

[MAY 4, 1908.]

This cause having been heard upon the pleadings and accompanying exhibits, it is, on consideration, ordered that it be referred to a special master, to be hereinafter designated, to ascertain and report to the court:

1. The amount of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia on the first day of January, 1861, stating specifically how and in what form the same was evidenced, by what authority of law and for what purposes the same was created, and the dates and nature of the bonds or other evidence of said indebtedness.

2. The extent and *value of the territory of Virginia and of West Virginia, June 20, 1863, and the population thereof, with and without slaves, separately.

3. All expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia since any part of the debt was contracted.

4. Such proportion of the ordinary expenses of the government of Virginia since any of said debt was contracted, as was properly assignable to the counties which were created into the State of West Virginia on the basis of the average total population of Virginia, with and without slaves, as shown by the census of the United States.

5. And also on the basis of the fair estimated valuation of the property, real and personal, by counties, of the State of Virginia.

*See Amendment, page 207

6. All moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the State of West Virginia during the period prior to the admission of the latter State into the Union.

7. The amount and value of all money, property, stocks and credits which West Virginia received from the Commonwealth of Virginia, not embraced in any of the preceding items and not including any property, stocks or credits which were obtained or acquired by the Commonwealth after the date of the organization of the restored government of Virginia, together with the nature and description thereof.

The answers to these inquiries to be without prejudice to any question in the cause.

It is further ordered that the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia shall each, when required, produce before the master, upon oath, all such records, books, papers and public documents as may be in their possession or under their control, and which may, in his judgment, be pertinent to the said inquiries and accounts, or any of them.

And the master is authorized to make, or cause to be made, such examination as he may deem desirable of the books of account, vouchers, documents and public records of either State relating to the inquiries he is herein directed to make, and to cause copies thereof or extracts therefrom to be made for use in making up his report.

All public records published by authority of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 17th day of April, 1861, and all papers and documents and other matter constituting parts of the public files and records of Virginia prior to the date aforesaid, which in the judgment of the master may be relevant and pertinent to any of said inquiries, or copies thereof, if duly authenticated, may be used in evidence and considered by the master, but all such evidence shall be subject to exceptions to its competency. The public acts and records of the two States since the admission of West Virginia into the Union shall be evidence, if pertinent and duly authenticated, but all such evidence tendered by either party shall be subject to proper legal exceptions to its competency.

The master is empowered to summon any persons whose testimony he or either party may deem to be material, and to cause their depositions to be taken before him, or by a notary public or other officer authorized to take the same, after reasonable notice to the adverse party.

The master is authorized and empowered, subject to the approval of the Chief Justice, to employ such stenographers and other clerical assistants as he may find it desirable to employ in order to the prompt and efficient execution of this order of reference.

and to agree with such stenographers and typewriters and clerical assistants upon such compensation to be made to them as the master may consider reasonable and just. He is authorized to direct their compensation to be paid out of the funds to be deposited to the credit of this cause.

The complainant shall cause the sum of five thousand dollars to be deposited with the marshal of this court to the credit of this cause, and such further sums as from time to time may be required, on account of the costs and expenses of executing this decree; and the master is authorized from time to time to draw upon the fund so deposited by Virginia for the compensation of the stenographers, typewriters and other clerical assistants whom he may employ, and for any other costs and expenses, including stationery and printing, which may in his judgment be necessary to be incurred in executing this order of reference.

The said marshal shall receive such commission for his services in receiving and disbursing the funds so deposited with him as may be allowed by the court, and he will make a report of his transactions, receipts and disbursements in the premises.

Any notices to be given in connection with the execution of this decree may be given by and to the Attorneys General of the respective States.

The master will make his report with all convenient speed and transmit therewith the evidence on which he proceeds, and is to be at liberty to state any special circumstances he considers of importance, and to state such alternative accounts as may be desired by either of the parties, subject to the direction of the court.

And the court reserves the consideration of the allowance of interest; of the costs of this suit, and all further directions until after the master has made his report; either of the parties to be at liberty to apply to the court as they shall be advised.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

I, JAMES H. MCKENNEY, Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the order of said Supreme Court entered on the 4th day of May, A. D. 1908, in the case of Commonwealth of Virginia, Complainant, v. State of West Virginia, No. 4, Original, October Term, 1907, as the same remains upon the files and records of said Supreme Court.

In testimony whereof I hereunto subscribe my name and affix the seal of said Supreme Court, at the city of Washington, this.....day of May, A. D. 1908.

MOTION TO MODIFY DECREE OF REFERENCE.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States:

Now comes the State of West Virginia, the defendant herein, and availing itself of the leave granted by the interlocutory decree heretofore entered in this cause, respectfully moves the court to modify the said decree to the end that the same may be more definite and certain in the particulars hereinafter set forth:

First. By amending paragraph two to read as follows:

> "The territorial area and assessed valuation of the States of Virginia and West Virginia June 20, 1863, and the population thereof, with and without slaves, separately stated, including in the latter State the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson."

Second. By adding at the end of paragraph three thereof the words:

> "Prior to January 1, 1861."

Third. By amending paragraph four so as to read as follows:

> "The ordinary expenses of the government of Virginia since any of said debt was contracted and prior to January 1, 1861, on the basis of the average total population of Virginia, with and without slaves, as shown by the census of the United States."

Fourth. By amending paragraph five by striking out the words "fair estimated" where they occur in the first line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "assessed" and by adding at the end thereof the words "during the same period," so that the same will read:

> "5. And also on the basis of the assessed valuation of the property, real and personal, by counties, of the State of Virginia during the same period."

Fifth. By amending paragraph six by inserting before the word "period" in the second line thereof the word "said" and before the word "prior" in the third line thereof the word "and," and by striking out the words "the admission of the latter State into the Union" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "January 1, 1861," so that it will read:

> "6. All moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the State of West Virginia during the said period and prior to January 1, 1861."

REPORT OF COMMISSION—JOHN MARSHALL, CHAIRMAN.
FILED AS AN EXHIBIT FOR THE COMPLAINANT.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1907.

ORIGINAL, NO. 4.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.
vs.
STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

REPORT OF COMMISSION—JOHN MARSHALL, CHAIRMAN.

Filed as an Exhibit for the Complainant.

The fact that Virginia in 1811-12 called upon Chief Justice Marshall and others of her leading citizens to devote some weeks or months of their time to a reconnaissance of the region lying between the Blue Ridge Mountains and the Ohio, for the purpose of learning the most desirable line of communication between the waters of the Eastern Seaboard and the Western waters, and that the Great Chief Justice and the eminent men who served with him on that Commission responded to that call and devoted themselves to the arduous service which its acceptance involved, is evidence of the profound interest which in the early part of the last century the people of Virginia and her leading citizens took in that subject, and the importance which they attached to it.

The report of this historic Commission is therefore reprinted and filed as an exhibit for the complainant in this cause.

Col. Claudius Crozet, an eminent civil engineer, who, after having served as an engineer under Napoleon, and afterwards as Professor of Mathematics or Engineering in the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, was for a number of years State Engineer of Virginia, and some of the most important of her works of internal improvement were begun under his direction.

In one of his reports he refers to the service rendered by this Commission in the following language:

> "The first notice of the connection of the eastern and western waters is found in a report, made at the close of 1812, by the commissioners appointed by an act of the preceding session, 'for the purpose of viewing certain rivers within this Commonwealth.' The commissioners, John Marshall, James Breckenridge, William Lewis, James M'Dowell, William Caruthers, Andrew Alexander, examined the James river, from Lynchburg up, crossed the mountains, and descended with much difficulty, and indeed personal danger, the hitherto unexplored New river. They went through this arduous task with a zeal and perseverance worthy of such men.

"A plain sluice improvement of the James and Jackson's river, up to Dunlap's creek; thence a turnpike road, across the Alleghany mountain, which has been made since, and finally a sluice navigation of the Greenbrier, New, and Kanawha rivers were, at that early day, all they thought proper to recommend.

"A remarkable, and in our day, curious passage, occurs in their report. 'Your commissioners submit with diffidence the following propositions: First, that boats impelled by steam may be employed successfully on New River * * *. But they beg leave to say, that the currents of the Hudson, of the Mohawk, and of the Mississippi, are very strong; and that a practice so entirely novel as the use of steam in navigation, will probably receive great improvement, and the power itself be so diversified as to be applied in new and different situations, &c.' These remarks, at the very dawn of steam navigation, show, on their part, much sagacity and forethought."

See Report of Colonel Claudius Crozet, late State Engineer, to the General Assembly of Virginia, 1848.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Counsel for Virginia.

March, 1908.

Besides the Great Chief Justice, the gentlemen who served upon this Commission were James Breckenridge, distinguished as a soldier and statesman, and esteemed by contemporaries as the equal in ability, though not in oratory, of his brother, John Breckenridge, of Kentucky; William Lewis, a patriotic citizen of the highest character, a near relative of Col. Charles, and General Andrew Lewis, of Point Pleasant fame, and a worthy scion of such illustrious lineage; James M'Dowell, one of the gifted men of his generation, who afterwards rendered eminent service as a member of Congress, and as Governor of the Commonwealth; William Caruthers, a leading citizen of the Valley of Virginia, and a farmer and business man of very high character and standing; and Andrew Alexander, surveyor, engineer, representative citizen, a man of skill in his profession, and remarkable for his public spirit.

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTION,

For Re-printing the Report of the Commissioners on the Navigation of the Great Kanawha, &c.

[Agreed to by both Houses of Assembly, February 14, 1814.]

Whereas, it would greatly promote the welfare of this Commonwealth, and the prosperity of our sister States, to form a more intimate connexion between the Eastern and Western Waters of the United States; and, with a view to that object, the General Assembly of Virginia at a former session, appointed Commissioners to survey the head waters of James-River and the Great Kanawha, with instructions to ascertain the practicability of extending their navigation to the base of the chain of mountains which divides them, and at the shortest and easiest portage across it; a trust which was accepted and fulfilled, by the Commissioners who acted therein, in a manner that entitles them to the thanks of their country: And, as the result of their labors has never been presented to the Legislature of the Union, nor to the governments of the several States, who cannot but feel an interest in the accomplishment of an enterprise so important to the arts, manufactures, and commerce of the United States—

Resolved, therefore, That the executive of this commonwealth be, and they are hereby empowered and requested, to cause the Report of the Commissioners to be re-printed, and the Map and References accompanying it to be reduced to a convenient scale, engraved, printed, and annexed to the Report; and, reserving two hundred and fifty copies thereof for the use of the General Assembly, to forward a copy to each of the Commissioners whose names are subscribed to the Report, to each Member of the Congress of the United States, and to the Executives of the several States and Territories.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

Letter of Mr. Marshall, One of the Commissioners.

A communication from the Governor, enclosing a letter from the Honorable John Marshall, and a report from the Commissioners who executed the act of the last session, entitled "An act appointing Commissioners for the purpose of viewing certain Rivers within this Commonwealth," was laid before the house.

The said letter and Report were read as follows:

Richmond, December 26, 1812.

SIR:—I hasten to submit to your Excellency, for the purpose of being laid before the General Assembly, the Report of the Commissioners who executed the act of the last session, entitled "An act appointing Commissioners for the purpose of viewing certain Rivers within this Commonwealth."

To their distance from each other, and the consequent difficulties attending the interchange of sentiment, and the attainment of their respective signatures, is to be ascribed the delay which has taken place in the performance of this part of their duty.

The more detailed report, to which the enclosed refers, is not yet received, but it is expected in a few days, and will then be transmitted to your Excellency. It was not thought advisable longer to withhold the general report, for the purpose of accompanying it with that more in detail, to which it refers.

I have the honor to be,
Sir, with great respect,
Your obedient servant,
J. MARSHALL.

His Excellency Governor BARBOUR.

INLAND NAVIGATION.

REPORT.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the General Assembly, the undersigned Commissioners, named, with others, in the act entitled "An act appointing Commissioners for the purpose of viewing certain Rivers within this Commonwealth,"

RESPECTFULLY REPORT—

That, supposing the autumn to be the season which afforded the fairest prospects for giving effect to the views of the Legislature, as expressed in their act, your Commissioners agreed that a meeting should be called on the first of September, at Lynchburg. The number required by law, for the execution of the service they were directed to perform, having assembled, and the necessary preparations having been made, your Commissioners began at the Bridge at Lynchburg, to view James-river, and to take its level by sections to the mouth of Dunlops-creek. Mr. Andrew Alexander, the surveyor of Rockbridge county, had been engaged to execute this duty under their direction. To his report, which your Commissioners believe to be accurate, they beg leave to refer, as exhibiting, in minute detail, the information required by the law.

As an actual measurement of the whole river would have employed so much time as to defer the completion of the work, until high waters might defeat the object of the Legislature, and was rendered the less necessary by previous surveys; distances were in general conjectured. The eye, aided by a time-piece, and occasionally corrected by actual measurement, furnished information, which, though not perfectly exact, was believed not to vary much from the truth, and to be substantially sufficient. Those places which present serious obstacles were measured by the chain, and the elevation was taken throughout by a spirit level.

On that part of the river which is comprised within the charter already granted, your Commissioners presumed that little, if any, information is expected from them, other than will be found in the annexed report of Mr. Alexander.

From Beall's Bridge, or Crow's Ferry, to the mouth of the Cow-Pasture, no difficulty presents itself, which may not be with certainty surmounted. The falls are no where formidable; there are long stretches of smooth water, and the shallows may be so deepened as to afford water for boats bringing down from six to eight tons, and carrying up from four to six tons, if not throughout the year, through all but a very inconsiderable portion of it. Your Commissioners give the opinion, unanimously, and with great confidence, that the navigation from Crow's Ferry to the mouth of the Cow-Pasture, may, with improvements by no means expensive, be rendered as certain, as useful, and as permanent, as the navigation from the same place to Lynchburg; and that it may be used at all times when the navigation to Lynchburg can be used, with boats carrying an equal burthen—indeed, that it may be rendered more safe and less laborious, than that from the mouth of the North Fork to Lynchburg now is.

From the mouth of the Cow-Pasture to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, the difficulties become more considerable and their removal will require greater expenditures of money. The mass of water diminishes, and the elevation increases.—The shoals become longer and shallower, and the intervals of smooth water shorter. Yet, this rugged navigation, though totally unimproved, is now used during high water. Boats, laden with the produce of the country, pass every year from the mouth of Dunlop's-creek to Richmond. It is, therefore, proved to be, even at this time, practicable for some portion of the year. This portion varies with the seasons. Most commonly, it commences in November, and terminates late in May, or early in June.

That, by the removal of rocks, now lying promiscuously and irregularly through the bed of the river, which it will be necessary in only a few instances to blow, and by the judicious application of labor, to the collection of water in narrower spaces than it now covers, this navigation may be rendered much more secure and beneficial, and the time during which it can be used may be considerably extended, will not admit of doubt.—Whether this portion of the river may be rendered at all times boatable, depends on the depth of water to be collected in particular channels by such means as are applicable to the object.

Some of your Commissioners have been personally engaged in opening the navigation of the North Fork of James-river, through Rockbridge. They are decidedly of opinion, that the river denominated "Jackson's," contains as far as Dunlop's-creek, more water and less formidable obstructions than were found in the North Fork. Yet the North Fork, though its improvement is far from being complete, is now actually used to great advantage, and is not much inferior to the river below.—Some experienced and judicious boatmen who were employed on the expedition, who are well acquainted with the river and its navigation, unite in the declaration, that, if the means be taken which ought to be employed, that part of James-river which is between the Cow-Pasture and Dunlop's-creek, may be used by any boats which will be capable of continuing their voyage to Lynchburg.

Your Commissioners concur in this opinion; and they take occasion now to remark, that should it be deemed advisable still to adhere to the system of improvement heretofore used in the upper part of the river, the difficulties of this navigation would, they think, be much diminished by several facilities which might be given to it. They would particularly suggest chains, with buoys fastened in rocks or otherwise, or walls on which men may walk, of which boatmen might avail themselves to lessen the labor of ascending places of peculiar difficulty; and thus either to increase the load which may be carried up the river, or to diminish the number of persons necessary for carrying up a given load. They will also mention a fact deemed favorable to the object contemplated by the Legislature. It is this: although the cold may be more intense in the bosom of the mountains than below, this part of the river freezes over.

It will perhaps save the honorable the members of the Legislature some calculation, to observe, that the distance from Lynchburg to the commencement of the Blue Ridge is stated, in the report of Mr. Alexander, to be twenty-five miles one-fourth and thirty poles; the elevation to be one hundred and eleven feet eight inches; shewing an average elevation of four and an half feet to the mile.—The distance through the mountain, that is from Racoon Island to the mouth of the North Fork, is eight miles one-fourth and forty-nine poles, and the elevation one hundred and one feet six inches, giving an average elevation of upwards of twelve feet to the mile. The distance from the mouth of the North Fork to Crows Ferry, or Beall's Bridge, the highest point to which navigation is to be carried by the James-River Company, is stated at twenty-six miles and thirty-eight poles, and the elevation is one hundred and thirty-one feet four inches; making the average elevation five feet to a mile.

The distance from Beall's Bridge, or Crow's Ferry, to the mouth of the Cow-Pasture, is stated at thirty-six miles fifty-nine poles, and the elevation is one hundred and ninety feet three inches, making the average elevation five and an half feet nearly to a mile. The distance from the mouth of the Cow-Pasture to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, is stated at twenty-three miles three-fourths and twenty poles, and the elevation is two hundred and twenty-eight feet three inches, making the average elevation nine and an half feet to the mile.

Having reached Dunlop's-creek, your Commissioners proceeded to view and mark out what appeared to them to be the best and most direct way for a turnpike road from the mouth of that creek to the most convenient navigable point on Greenbrier river.

With some inconsiderable deviations, which will appear in the report of Mr. Alexander, already referred to, and some others which will be suggested, the road now leading from the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, by Bowyer's Sulphur Spring, to Anderson's Ford, over Greenbrier, at the mouth of Howard's-creek, is believed to be the most eligible which can be made. To that part of the road which passes from the mouth of Dunlop's-creek to the old Iron Works, a distance of about five miles, there are considerable objections, which your Commissioners are inclined to believe may be diminished. The road crosses the creek eight times, and the ground, during the winter and spring would, if much used and not well covered with stone or gravel, be much cut and be very deep. The creek too is frequently so high as not to be fordable.

Should it be found practicable, which your Commissioners believe to be the fact, to render Dunlop's-creek navigable up to its falls, some distance below the old Iron Works, these inconveniences would be in a great measure removed.

Should it be deemed unadvisable to carry navigation up Dunlop's-creek, a direction, as is understood from some of the inhabitants of that neighborhod, may be given to the road, so as to avoid five crossings of the creek, and at the same time shorten the distance. No attempt to view this way was made, because guides could not readily be procured, and your Commissioners feared that, by devoting too much time to a minor object, on which complete information is attainable with ease and certainty through various channels, they might hazard the failure of others which were believed to be of much importance.

The road from the Sulphur Spring to Greenbrier crosses Howard's-creek, which is often not fordable, six times, and is in a few places attended with some difficulty. A small improvement may be made in it, and the steepest part avoided, by returning it, near the river, to the ground over which it formerly passed, and from which it has been lately taken.

The road over the mountain has been attentively viewed, and the deviations recommended, from that now in use, carefully and plainly marked. Your Commissioners feel much satisfaction in stating, that the elevation of this part of the road may, in the most unfavorable places, be reduced to an angle of five degrees with the horizon. By occasionally removing the earth, for small distances, this angle may be still further diminished. It is believed to be susceptible of improvement on as easy terms as any other road, since the materials for a turnpike are every where convenient, and not more levelling will be necessary than must be expected in passing through a mountainous country.

Your commissioners proceeded down the Greenbrier river in the boat in which they ascended the James. The season had been remarkably dry, and the water was declared by the inhabitants to be as low as at any period within their recollection. It frequently spreads over a wide bed covered with large stone, and is, in its present unimproved state, and at the season when it was viewed, so very shallow for the greater part of its course, as not to swim an empty boat. The labor of removing stone, and of dragging the boat over those which could not be removed without implements provided for the purpose, was so great, that your Commissioners at one time were enabled to advance only three miles in two days, even with the assistance of a horse and of many additional laborers. In part of the river the shoals are frequent and long, and the falls, as the report of Mr. Alexander will shew, considerable. At the great falls, which is the most important of them, the descent is twelve feet in forty-eight poles. There is no perpendicular fall at this place, but one continued rapid, with large rocks, irregularly interspersed through the bed of the river. Near the mouth of the river there is a flat rock, which continues for about two hundred and forty poles, with many irregular apertures or fissures through which the water passes. Although, in the usual state of the river, this rock is covered with water of sufficient depth for navigation; yet, such was the drought of the last autumn, it was necessary to drag the boat over its whole extent.

These difficulties present obstacles to navigation during a season when the waters are remarkably low, which can be surmounted only at considerable expense.

But, from the best information your Commissioners can obtain, and they believe it to be correct, the Greenbrier is seldom so low at any season as it was during the last autumn; and it seldom if ever fails, for eight or nine months in the year, to be at least two feet higher than when viewed by your Commissioners; a depth of water unquestionably sufficient for the purpose of navigation. The testimony given by the inhabitants to this fact, was corroborated by appearances on the river. The indications of a recent considerable diminution of water were not to be mistaken.

On an attentive consideration of the obstacles which were found by your Commissioners to be great, while the river remains in the state in which they viewed it, they are unanimously and decidedly of opinion, that its navigation may be rendered as safe, as certain, and as easy as that of the James, at all times, except when the water is unusually low. The rocks are in general loose; and may be removed without extraordinary difficulty, so as to afford a tolerably smooth passage to boats; and, by collecting the water into narrow channels, a sufficient depth may be obtained, with the exception of a short period in a very dry year, to swim any boat which can be brought at the same time down James-river. But so scanty is the supply of water in a time of uncommon drought, that doubts are entertained whether there may not be a short season of the year during which, unless a considerable expense be incurred, the navigation must be suspended. Though aided by men and horses, ten days of unremitting labor were consumed in passing from the mouth of Howards-creek to the mouth of Greenbrier river, a distance not much exceeding forty-eight miles. In the month of June, the same voyage, if not retarded by measuring the river, might have been performed in a single day. Some of your Commissioners, however, are of opinion, that the Greenbrier may, without great additional expense, be rendered at all times passable for boats carrying half a load.

In addition to the shallowness of the water, (an inconvenience which is common to all rivers as you approach their sources, and which disappears for eight or nine months in the year) and to the rocks which have been mentioned, the obstructions to the navigation of the Greenbrier consists in its falls, and in the general rapidity of its current.

The great falls alone are of sufficient magnitude to merit particular attention. These unquestionably admit of being rendered navigable, either by opening a sluice judiciously through them, or by locks. The latter would be most expensive, but would leave the navigation less laborious.

The rapidity of the current may be estimated by observing that the descent in forty-eight miles and eighty-four poles, is three hundred and sixty-two feet ten inches, between seven and eight feet to the mile.

This current will present no difficulty to a boat descending the river. To one ascending it, the labor will be considerable, but not so considerable as in some parts of James-river.

The night of the 28th of September, was passed among the islands in the mouth of Greenbrier; and on the morning of the 29th, your Commissioners entered New-river.

The New-river, or that part of the Great Kanawha which is above the mouth of Gauley, having to search its intricate way, and force a passage through a long chain of lofty and rugged mountains, whose feet it washes, exhibits an almost continued succession of shoals and falls, from which the navigator is sometimes, though rarely, relieved by a fine sheet of deep placid water.

The difficulties encountered in descending this river were of a character essentially different from those which were experienced in the Greenbrier. Uncommon as had been the drought, the supply of water was abundant. The boat sometimes, though rarely, rubbed upon a shoal; but in every such case it was apparent that a sufficient passage might be opened without much labor or expense. The velocity of the current and the enormous rocks which often interrupt it, the number and magnitude of the rapids and falls, the steepness, cragginess and abruptness of the banks, constitute the great impediments which at present exist to navigation between the mouth of the Greenbrier and the Great Falls of Kanawha.

The distance from the mouth of Greenbrier to Bowyer's Ferry, is forty miles one quarter and forty-six poles, and the descent is four hundred and sixty-six feet seven inches; that is, eleven feet six inches in each mile. In general, there is much sameness in the appearance of this part of the river. Long rapids, frequently terminated by a fall of from five to ten feet, in a distance of ten, twenty, thirty, and sometimes a greater number of poles; an intervening space, sometimes more, sometimes less considerable, of swift or smooth water; rocks, sometimes above the surface, sometimes near it, so as to require great caution to save a boat from dashing on them; a copious stream, with a current commonly impetuous, constitute its leading characteristics.

Falls too great to come within this general description, will be particularly noticed.

Brook's Falls are about four miles and one-fourth below the mouth of Greenbrier. The water descends thirteen feet seven inches in fifty poles. In its most rapid part the descent is five feet ten inches in fourteen poles. The boat was navigated through this place.

A much more formidable obstruction is the falls at Richmond's Mill. These are designated in the neighborhood by the name of the "Great Falls of New-river," but are generally called at a distance, "Lick-Creek Falls."

At this place the water may with propriety be said to fall perpendicularly twenty-three feet. For this distance, the sheet which dashes over the summit is intercepted only by huge fragments of broken rock, which, having been successively disjointed from the brink of the precipice, have fallen into the foaming basin below, where, piled on each other, they form one or two benches that break the cataract. A small distance lower down is another fall of three or four feet.

Here, for the first time, the boat was taken out of the water and let down by skids.

The ground along which a canal may be carried around these falls, pursuing the course of Richmond's mill-race, was measured, and the elevation taken. The descent was found to be twenty-two feet nine inches, in one hundred and eighty-one poles.

This estimate excludes a part of the falls, between five and six feet of which are just above the head of Richmond's mill-race.

The bottom of the river for some distance above these falls, is a hard rock, often appearing above the surface, and much covered with movable stones, some of which are very large. The bottom of the mill-race appears to be of the same description.

From Bowyer's Ferry to the Falls of the Great Kanawha, was estimated at nineteen miles and fifty-eight poles, in which distance the river falls three hundred and thirty-one feet; that is, seventeen feet to a mile. The honorable the legislature will perceive, that below the ferry the descent, in the same distance, is greater than above. For a part of this space, the scene is awful and discouraging. The vast volume of water which rolls down New-river, and which, far above the ferry, often spreads, without becoming shallow, over a bed three or four hundred yards wide; is seldom more than one hundred or one hundred and fifty yards wide. In some places, for a mile or more in continuation, it is compressed by the mountains on each side, into a channel of from twenty to sixty yards wide; and even these narrow limits are still more narrowed by enormous rocks which lie promiscuously in the bed of the river, through which it is often difficult to find a passage wide enough for the admission of a boat. In some places the bank is formed of rugged and perpendicular cliffs or entire rock, which appear to be twenty, thirty, and forty feet high; in others, enormous, but unconnected, rocks dip into the water.

There are unequivocal indications of the river's having risen, in these narrows, from thirty to forty feet perpendicularly.

Immediately above the mouth of Gauley, the river opens and presents a beautiful sheet of deep smooth water, which is succeeded by the rocks over which it dashes, and forms the Great Falls of Kanawha. The height of these falls is twenty feet four inches. With its name, the river loses its wild and savage aspect. It is no longer confined by rugged cliff, by mountains barely separated from each other, nor interrupted by enormous masses of rocks which are scarcely to be avoided.

Within a short distance above the falls, the current is not unmanageably swift, nor the rocks over which it passes uneven. Below, quite to the rocks which have fallen from the brink over which the cataract rushes, is a deep smooth and beautiful basin. The river is so wide as to rise, in the greatest freshes, only six or seven feet. The falls themselves constitute the impediment, and the only impediment at this place.

Your Commissioners have deemed it proper to state in their full strength, the difficulties which are to be surmounted in opening the intercourse between this part of the state of Virginia and the western country; and to put the legislature, as far as is possible, in possession of the testimony on which their opinion is formed, as well as of their opinion. If, misguided by their conviction of the importance of the object, they are too sanguine in their hopes of its accomplishment, the facts now communicated will enable the General Assembly to correct the mistaken conclusions which have been drawn, and to determine on the course which will best promote the interests of the public.

The practicability of rendering the Greenbrier navigable has already been stated. The system which may be found best adapted for the improvement of James-river, will be equally applicable to the Greenbrier, and will be equally successful.—The one river and the other will be rendered more or less valuable as more or less labor and skill may be employed on them; but there can be no mistake in saying that, without incurring an expense which any would pronounce extravagant they are both capable of being brought into extensive use. Not only in descending, but in ascending also, these rivers may be navigated to great advantage.

With respect to New-river, a judgment cannot be formed quite so decisively, nor pronounced quite so confidently. The difficulties are great, and deserve to be seriously considered.

The boat which conveyed your Commissioners, passed from the mouth of Greenbrier, to the place where their expedition terminated, without being taken out of the water, except at the Great Falls of New-river, and at the Great Falls of the Kanawha. It was navigated in the usual way through all the other difficult places which abound in New-river, except two—both below Bowyers Ferry. Through these it was conducted by ropes.

The boat was not laden, nor was it empty. In addition to the number of hands usually employed in navigation, it carried between two and three thousand weight. The greater part of this burthen was taken out in the most difficult places; but in many of considerable magnitude, it remained in the boat. Where the vessel was guided by ropes, the necessity of resorting to this expedient was occasioned solely by the intervention of rocks, which can be removed.

It is also worthy of notice, that this voyage was performed by boatmen, who, having never before seen the river, were reduced to the necessity of selecting their way at the moment, without the aid of previous information.

The only impediments to the descent of the boat, except at the two great falls already mentioned, were rocks lying so near the surface of the water as to strike the bottom while shooting over them. At the usual height of the river, these rocks would be entirely covered, and all danger from them be removed; but others would be placed in a situation to expose a boat to equal hazard. It is therefore necessary, even for the descending navigation, to open a plain and broad sluice through all the rapids and falls, so as to relieve boats navigating the river from all danger of being dashed against the rocks. This may be effected by removing some and blowing others.—This sluice may be so conducted as to graduate the falls where they are most sudden, and thereby, in some degree, to diminish the impetuosity of the current.

Brook's Falls, the Great Falls of New-river, and the Great Falls of Kanawha, will probably require and admit of a different course.

The first of these which is the least formidable of the three, will present three alternatives to the election of those who may be engaged in improving the navigation.

First—One or more locks, which may unquestionably be constructed at this place.

Second—A canal, which is already almost formed, on the north side of the river. Its completion would require that it be opened for a short distance both where it would receive the water at the head of the falls and where it would empty itself below them.

To the eligibility of this canal, there can be but one objection. There may be impracticable rock, now hidden by the earth, so near the surface as to render this plan unadvisable.

Third—To open a sluice in the river, along its northern bank, and graduate the fall as far as may be compatible with that system of operation.

The Great Falls of New-river must be turned, by using a canal to be cut on the southern side, pursuing nearly the tract of Richmond's mill-race. Should locks be employed, it will most probably be found advisable to place them in this canal. Should locks be dispensed with, there will be no difficulty in descending through this channel, but the toil of ascending must, at this place, be considerable.

At the Great Falls of Kanawha, there is, near Morris's mill, a very eligible place for locks. If a canal be preferred, there is every reason to believe that the ground will admit of one, which may be so extended, and the fall thereby so graduated, as to afford a safe passage to loaded boats.

These observations are formed on the state of the river when viewed by your Commissioners.—It will readily occur, that they cannot judge with certainty of the changes which may be brought about by a great rise of water.

It would seem most probable, that by such rise the falls would be diminished, because the water at their feet would pass off less rapidly than at their head. But the apprehension cannot be entirely discarded, that in the narrows, which have been mentioned, the torrent would, in a flood, be too impetuous to be trusted. It is probable, that moderate elevation of the water would rather facilitate the passage of the boats; at least of those descending the river; but that great floods would suspend the navigation.

Having stated their view of this subject, your Commissioners will only add their opinion, that the New-river may be relied on with certainty, for the transportation of articles from east to west.

On the practicability of using this channel of conveyance for the transportation of articles from the western country, towards the rivers which empty into the Atlantic, at least so much of it as lies between Bowyer's Ferry and the Great Falls of Kanawha they must speak with less confidence. The great difficulty consists in the velocity of the current. For several miles, between Bowyer's Ferry and the Falls, it is believed that a canal would be impracticable. The river is susceptible of no other improvement than may be made in its channel, or on its banks. The current is often too rapid to be stemmed by a boat impelled by oars; and the water too deep to admit the use of poles. If a channel, sufficient for the safe passage of vessels, be opened, still some other means than oars or poles must be devised for impelling them up the stream.

Your Commissioners submit with diffidence the following propsition:

First—That boats impelled by steam may be employed successfully on New-river.

With the capacities of this powerful agent they are too little acquainted to speak with confidence of the use which may be made of it in the waters of Virginia. Elsewhere, it has certainly been applied with great advantage to the purposes of navigation. Neither have they that intimate knowledge of the velocity of the currents, against which vessels have been propelled by it, to compare them with that of New-river, and to hazard any decided opinion on the comparison.—But they beg leave to say, that the currents of the Hudson, of the Mohawk, and of the Mississippi, are very strong; and that a practice so entirely novel as the use of steam in navigation, will probably receive great improvement, and the power itself be so diversified in its modifications, as to be applied in new and different situations, as their exigencies may require. It is believed, that a sufficient depth of water is certainly obtainable, but whether sufficient employment may be found, to justify the use of a vessel which must, in any state of things, be constructed at considerable expense, is a question your Commissioners cannot attempt to solve.

Second—Should it be found impracticable to apply steam with advantage to the navigation of New-river, it is respectfully suggested, that between the Great Falls of Kanawha and Bowyer's Ferry, resort may be had to horse labor.

To give this facility to the navigation, it will be necessary to construct a horse-way along the bank of the river at different heights, or at the most common height of the water. The objection that such way cannot be used at all times, will lose much of force, when it shall be recollected that the navigation up the river will admit of being suspended for considerable intervals, with less injury to those who use it, than that which conveys to the western country articles imported for general consumption. The construction of this way, however, will require the blowing of a great quantity of rock, and will, consequently, be expensive.

Third—Should neither of these expedients be deemed eligible, it is respectfully suggested, that boats may be forced up the current, where it is too rapid for oars and too deep for poles, by the aid of chains fastened in the rocks on the bank.

Whatever doubts may be entertained respecting the navigation for boats ascending the river between the Great Falls of Kanawha and Bowyer's Ferry; your Commissioners are entirely persuaded of the practicability of using it advantageously between the ferry and the mouth of Greenbrier.

In obedience to the law under which they have acted, your Commissioners will now proceed to state their ideas of the sums of money which will probably be necessary to open the river and make the road they have viewed.

No part of their duty has been performed with less confidence than this.

It will readily occur to the legislature, that no estimate of expense of executing so great a work as that which is to afford to the western parts of Virginia the means of conveying the produce of their lands to market, and probably to connect Virginia commercially with her sister states in the west, can have just pretensions to exactness.—Were the system of improvement, and the extent to which that system is to be carried, accurately defined; any calculations which could now be made, even by professional men, of the sum necessary for its execution, might be found to vary widely from that which would be actually expended. Still less precision can be looked for in the calculations of your Commissioners.

But it must be apparent that the expense of improvement will essentially depend on the object for which the improvement shall be made.

If the views of the legislature shall be limited to the conveyance of articles, the growth of the upper country, down James-river, the cheapness of that conveyance will certainly depend much on the degree of perfection to which the improvement may be carried; but the river, being the only channel of conveyance, will, if merely practicable, be used to some extent.

If the views of the legislature shall extend to a free commercial intercourse with the western states, or any of them, the channel selected for that intercourse will come into competition with others which now exist or may be opened, and must recommend itself to a preference by the advantages it offers. With a view to the latter object, no improvement ought to be undertaken but with a determination to make it complete and effectual.

The estimates of expense were more particularly made by Mr. Caruthers, who has been personally engaged in opening the North Fork though Rockbridge. This gentleman made his calculations on the plan which has been adopted by the James-River Company, with such improvements as would better adapt that plan to steam navigation. According to his estimate, one hundred and ninety thousand dollars will be sufficient to accomplish the work from Beall's Bridge, or Crow's Ferry, to the Falls of the Great Kanawha, including the road.—This estimate is formed on a comparison of the impediments to be removed, with those he had himself encountered in opening the North Fork of James-river. Some others of your Commissioners, who have too little knowledge of the labor necessary for the accomplishment of objects of this description, to confide themselves, in their own judgment, much less to recommend it to the confidence of others, are so impressed with the magnitude of the difficulties they have seen, as to be unable to persuade themselves that the work can be completed for the sum at which it has been estimated. That estimate does not appear to them to be extravagant, if the descending navigation alone be contemplated. To make the ascending navigation such as will entitle it to extensive use, and give this a preference over other routes, they submit, though with much diffidence, the opinion that at least a half a million, perhaps six hundred thousand dollars, will be requisite.

From the mouth of Dunlop's-creek to the mouth of Howard's creek, is twenty-six miles and forty-four poles. From the first mentioned place to the summit of Alleghany mountain, is sixteen miles and thirty-six poles, and the elevation is nine hundred and forty-eight feet, which makes an angle with the horizon of less than three-quarters of a degree. From the summit of the mountain to the mouth of Howard's-creek, the distance is twelve miles and eight poles, and the descent is eight hundred and thirty-eight feet seven inches, making with the horizon an angle of about three-quarters of a degree. There are no peculiarities attending this route, which will render any plan the legislature may prefer for turnpiking it, more costly in its application to this road, than to others which have been constructed in various parts of the United States. It is now at least equal to, perhaps better, than any other of equal distance in the same part of the country.

In presenting to the honorable the legislature the advantages which, in the opinion of your Commissioners, will probably accrue to this state from executing the work to which their report relates, it will be necessary to divide this subject, and to consider, separately—first, those which may reasonably be expected to result from executing it in part; next, those which are to be looked for from executing it in the whole.

Should the navigation of James-river be carried up to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, and a turnpike road be made over the Alleghany mountain, although nothing further should be done, a considerable impulse will be given to the agriculture, and a valuable effect produced on the wealth and population of a considerable tract of country. It cannot reasonably be doubted, that Bath, a part of Botetourt, and a great part of Greenbrier, Monroe, and perhaps even Giles, would find a real interest in searching for a market on James-river, for the produce of their soil, if such safe and cheap conveyance were afforded them as might be given by the improvements which have been stated.—Agriculture would mingle more than heretofore with grazing; and industry would flourish when the reward of industry should be attainable. Those more western counties, whose distance might forbid the attempt to transport grain manufactured into flour, or distilled into spirits, to the markets on James-river, might still be encouraged to bring to those markets, salt, salted provisions, and various manufactures of hemp. An increase of population would result, not only from the check which this state of things would give to emigration, but also from its operation on the inhabitants, in other respects.

Other parts of the state would derive corresponding advantages from their intercourse with a section of the country which would have more to sell and more to purchase than at present. By the augmentation of the wealth and population of a part, not only would those belonging to that part be improved in their circumstances, but the whole would be more powerful, and the public burdens being more divided, might press less heavily on each individual.

These advantages would probably be extended by improving the navigation of the Greenbrier also.

Should New-river be rendered a safe and easy channel of communication, between the Ohio and the commercial towns on James-river, the subject will assume a more important aspect, and the advantages may be estimated on a larger scale. Not only will that part of our own state which lies on the Kanawha and on the Ohio, receive their supplies and send much of their produce to market through James-river, but an immense tract of fertile country, a great part of the states of Kentucky and Ohio, will most probably give their commerce the same direction. All that part of the state of Kentucky which lies above Louisville, and all that part of the state of Ohio whose trade would pass through the river of that name, might reasonably be expected to maintain a large portion of their commercial intercourse with the Atlantic states, through the James or Potowmac. Certainly in a contest for this interesting prize, the states through which those rivers run have geographical advantages, the benefit of which they can lose only by supineness in themselves, or by extraordinary exertions in others. It is far from being impossible, that even the south-western parts of Pennsylvania may look down one of these rivers for their supplies of goods manufactured in Europe.

Let the importance attached by men best acquainted with the subject to the commerce of the west attest its value. The exertions which other states appear to be making to secure it, will probably awaken the attention of Virginia to that part of it which should naturally belong to her.

There is still another aspect in which this subject deserves to be viewed.

That intimate connection which generally attends free commercial intercourse, the strong ties which are formed by mutual interest, and the interchange of good offices, bind together individuals of different countries, and are well calculated to cherish those friendly sentiments, those amicable dispositions, which at present unite Virginia to a considerable portion of the western people. At all times the cultivation of these dispositions must be desirable but in the vicissitudes of human affairs, in that mysterious future, which is in reserve, and is yet hidden from us, events may occur to render their preservation too valuable to be estimated in dollars and cents.

The advantages which may result to Virginia, from opening this communication with the western country, will be shared in common with her by the states of Kentucky and Ohio.

Considering it as a medium for the introduction of foreign articles into those states, it has claims to their serious attention.

The proposition that a nation finds its true interest in multiplying its channels of importation, admitting them to be equally convenient, is believed to be incontrovertible. In addition to those arguments in support of this proposition which belongs to every case, the situation of the western states suggests some which are peculiar to themselves, and which well deserve their consideration.

The whole of that extensive and fertile country, a country increasing in wealth and population with a rapidity which baffles calculation, must make its importations up the Mississippi alone, or through the Atlantic states. When we take into view the certain growth of the country, we can scarcely suppose it possible that any commercial city on the banks of that river can keep pace with that growth, and furnish a supply equal to the demand. The unfriendliness of the climate to human life, will render this disparity between the commercial and agricultural capital still more sensible. It will tend still more to retard a population of that sound mercantile character, which would render some great city on that majestic river, a safe emporium for the western world.

In times of profound peace, then, the states on the Ohio would make sacrifices of no inconsiderable magnitude, by restricting their importations to a single river. But, in time of war, their whole trade might be annihilated. When it is recollected that the Mississippi empties itself into the Gulph of Florida, which is surrounded by foreign territory; that the island of Cuba and the coast of East Florida completely guard the passage from its mouth to the ocean; that the immense commerce flowing down its stream, holds forth irresistible allurements to cruizers, the opinion seems well founded, that scarcely a vessel making for that place could reach its port of destination.

But the length of the voyage up the Mississippi and Ohio, must be attended with delay so inconvenient to persons engaged in commerce, as to render a shorter route, though not less expensive, more eligible. For importation of many articles, there is much reason to believe that a decided preference would always be given to the transportation through the United States, were that transportation rendered as easy as it is capable of being made.

The export trade during peace, so far as the articles exported were designed for a foreign market, would, more probably, pass exclusively down the Mississippi. But those articles which are consumed in the United States, as manufactures of hemp, would find their way to market through interior and shorter channels.

If the direct route through the Atlantic states would, for many purposes, be more eligible than that through the Gulph of Florida, which must be often connected with a coasting voyage to or from an Atlantic port, then the multiplication of those routes, if in themselves equal, by presenting a greater choice, and by accommodating more territory, must be desirable.

But your Commissioners are sanguine in the opinion, that the communication through the rivers they have viewed, if properly made, will possess advantages over every other, which cannot fail to recommend it to a large portion of the states of Kentucky and Ohio. All that part of the western country which draws its supplies and transports its produce through the river Ohio, and which lies east of Louisville and west of the Pennsylvania line, perhaps a part of the state of Pennsylvania itself, could probably use this route more advantageously than any other; unless, indeed, that through the Potowmac, connected with Monongehela, Cheat, or Yohaghena, should come into competition with it, for the eastern part of the country just mentioned.

That it would, for the importation of articles from Europe, and from the east, (with a few exceptions) and for the exportation of those which are consumed in the United States, be preferred to the voyage through the Mississippi, unless the introduction of steam boats should essentially vary the present state of things, may safely be assumed from the fact, that a land carriage between Pittsburg and Philadelphia or Baltimore, and a carriage up or down the Ohio, are now used for the purposes described, in preference to the route by New Orleans.

The present price for the transportation of goods from Philadelphia or Baltimore to Pittsburg, is understood to be from seven to ten dollars per hundred weight.

The price of transportation from Richmond, up James-river to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, thence across the Alleghany to Greenbrier, and down to the mouth of the Great Kanawha, will certainly depend on the goodness of the road and the degree of perfection to which the navigation may be carried. Your Commissioners believe that a sound national economy would dictate such improvements as would reduce the price of freight, although the labor employed in making them might be procured by an augmentation of toll, and some expenditure of public money.

Should the navigation of James-river be rendered as safe and as easy as may be reasonably expected, and the Greenbrier and New-river be improved, in such manner as the object will justify, your Commissioners believe they hazard nothing in saying, that the expense of transporting one hundred weight from Richmond to the mouth of the Great Kanawha, will not exceed half the price of transporting the same weight from Baltimore or Philadelphia, to the same place.

The immense works meditated in New York, will certainly, if executed, give to that state great advantages in a competition for the trade of the lakes. But if other convenient and more direct channels be opened, it is not probable that the commerce of the Ohio will take the circuitous route by the lakes.

The expense of transportation from New York through the canal contemplated, can only be conjectured. The character of the rivers which would be used, is not well understood, but they must possess many advantages to give them a preference over the direct way through Virginia to the Ohio.

Your Commissioners, however, take the liberty to repeat, that the success of any attempt to obtain that share of the commerce of the west, to which this state, from her geographical situation and her rivers, would seem to be entitled, must depend entirely on the safety and cheapness of her navigation. A mode of transportation by water in itself insecure, or so laborious as to be little less expensive than carriage by land, will never change the channels in which the trade already flow.

The advantages to accrue to the United States, from opening this new channel of intercourse between the eastern and the western states, are those which necessarily result to the whole body from whatever benefits its members, and those which must result to the United States, particularly from every measure which tends to cement more closely the union of the eastern with the western states.

In those operations, too, which the exigencies of government may often require, this central channel of communication by water may be of great value. For the want of it, in the course of the last autumn, government was reduced to the necessity of transporting arms in waggons from Richmond to the falls of the great Kanawha. A similar necessity may often occur.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, Complainant,

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

[ORDER AMENDING DECREE OF REFERENCE.]

On consideration of the motion to modify the decree of reference herein.

IT IS NOW HERE ORDERED BY THE COURT that said motion be and the same is hereby, sustained so far as to make the first line of paragraph 2 read "The extent and assessed valuation," and in all other respects that said motion be, and the same is hereby, denied.

These Bonds are guaranteed by the Commonwealth of Virginia under Act of March 8, 1847, Chapter 107.

Paragraph 1 (after preamble) recites the terms of the Guarantee as follows:

"I, A. B., Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Virginia, in conformity to an Act of the General Assembly, passed on the day of in the year eighteen hundred and forty-seven, do hereby pledge the faith of the state for the punctual payment of the interest, and the ultimate redemption of the principal sum of money appearing due by the within (or above) bond, according to the terms therein specified.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal of office, at Richmond, Virginia, this of —, Eighteen

A. B., Treasurer."

Payable 35 years after date of issue or in 1882, 1883 and 1884.

Certified Correct:

ARTHUR G. POTTER.

PRICE, WATERHOUSE & CO.,
For the Plaintiff.

The defendant agrees that the amounts shown above are correct, but denies that these bonds formed any part of the outstanding debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia on January 1st, 1861, or that they have since become such a debt; and claims that even if these bonds should be paid in full by the Commonwealth of Virginia, her remedy would lie against the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co., and not in any case against the State of West Virginia.

Certified Correct:

CLIFFORD E. SCOVILLE.

THOMAS BYRD DIXCY,

Other Evidence and Proceedings Relating to Paragraph I of the Decree.

[Vol. 4, May 5, 1909.]

[Cross-examination of Arthur G. Potter on Plaintiff's Exhibit A-1.]

Mr. Carlisle: That is all. Take Exhibit A-1. This is a 254 schedule of bonds—

The Special Master: What exhibit do you refer to and what page?

Mr. Carlisle: A-1; the beginning.

The Special Master: The very beginning?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes. The first entry there is $161,600, on which there was outstanding on December 31st, 1860, $104,000. I will get you to state whether that $161,000 represents certificates of the same kind as the one you have just been speaking about—the James River Company.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. So the others, the first one, No. 1—you do not know what that amount was?

A. I don't know what? 255

Q. You don't know what the amount of the first was?

A. Yes; $50,000.

Q. Then there were others there which brought the whole amount up to $161,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not those certificates are now held in the Literary Fund of the State of Virginia?

A. Those individual certificates are not held by the Literary Fund.

Q. You are sure of that, are you? I mean in the Treasurer's office. Perhaps I was mistaken about Literary fund.

A. I don't know whether they are in the Treasurer's office or not.

Q. You never saw them at all I understood you to say?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is all on that, then. On the last page of this summary schedule of bonds of internal improvement companies guaranteed by the Commonwealth of Virginia which were outstanding December 31, 1860—

The Special Master: That is the last page of Exhibit A-1?

A. Mr. Carlisle: Yes; and which were later paid by the State or converted to State bonds, there are quite a number of items there—

Mr. Harrison: What page?

Mr. McClintic: The last page, I think, or at least towards the last page.

Mr. Carlisle: General Anderson has his hand on it, I think. Here is the James River and Kanawha Company, 1823, total $475,475—

Mr. Anderson: The 23rd of March, 1839, is it? 256

Mr. Carlisle: That is the date of the authorizing act.

Mr. McClintic: We did not mean to put that in.

Mr. Carlisle: What do you know about that?

The Special Master: This item is on the last page of Plaintiff's Exhibit A-1.

Mr. McClintic: The last page we have on this exhibit.

The Special Master: I don't find that.

Mr. McClintic: Headed Summary Schedule of Bonds of Internal Improvement Companies Guaranteed.

The Special Master: Let us be sure we are talking about the same thing. That is page 4 of mine.

Mr. McClintic: The pages may have been changed.

The Special Master: We must have them arranged so there will be no confusion. I shall have to ask you, Mr. Potter, to take the exhibits of West Virginia which are in your hands and those in mine and see that they are harmonious. I cannot stop every little while to correct the pages. Will you please attend to that during recess?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you make any investigation of this item that I have just read?

A. We examined the guaranteed bond registers and made a list of the bonds which were funded, cancelled or otherwise disposed of, after January 1, 1861.

Q. After 1861?

A. Yes, sir; those that were disposed of after that date we assumed to be open on that date.

Mr. McClintic: I would like to ask a question if I may be permitted.

The Special Master: Certainly. 257

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Was not that actually assumed, that $475,000, by the State of Virginia, by the act of March 23rd, 1860?

A. I cannot answer that question.

Q. You made no examination of the acts to see whether it was guaranteed or owed by the State at that time, did you?

The Special Master: Is it your question whether or not they were for the first time assumed?

Mr. McClintic: As an actual obligation of the State, on the 23rd of March, 1860.

The Special Master: For the first time?

Mr. McClintic: Yes. Previous to that they were a guaranteed debt, I understand.

Mr. Carlisle: We say a contingent debt.

The Special Master: The question is whether or not on that date they were assumed for the first time as an absolute liability. That you do not know?

The Witness: I cannot answer that question without referring to my other papers.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you look into any of these items shown on the page to which I have referred for the purpose of ascertaining the exact nature of the guarantee of the State to see exactly what the State did?

A. Yes; I searched among the records of the Treasurer's office, and found copies of all these guaranteed bonds except two. That was the 8th and 9th items on this page here covered by my foot note at the bottom of the page.

Q. Were those guarantees of the principal sums or were 258 they guarantees of the interest only, or guarantees of dividends; in what form did you find those guarantees?

A. I cannot say at this time, because I have not the bonds before me. I have no records to show; I don't remember.

Mr. Anderson: You have the records?

The Witness: I have not the records here. We have them, but not here. I don't remember the exact terms of those guarantees.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you read the acts of the Legislature under which these guarantees were made?

A. I believe I read them all.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you read the act of March 23, 1860, in reference to the James River and Kanawha Company?

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know whether they were actually assumed by the State, or not, before 1861, then?

A. No.

Mr. Carlisle: The treasurer is willing to come over and bring this certificate about which the witness has testified—certificate No. 1.

The Special Master: You say it can be produced?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; I understand he is willing to produce it.

The Special Master: I understand that all the original sources of information—

Mr. Anderson: Do I understand that you request that now? 259

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; because I want to examine this witness about it.

Mr. Anderson: Now?

Mr. Carlisle: Not this minute.

The Special Master: If you can get it without inconvenience suppose you send out for it.

Mr. Anderson: Do you wish to interrupt the examination to produce it.

Mr. Carlisle: I want him to produce it so as to let the Master see whether it is an obligation of the State of Virginia or a debt due to Virginia.

The Special Master: Let some messenger go out then, and have the treasurer bring it in.

Mr. Carlisle: We have a copy.

The Special Master: If they concede it is a copy you can probably go on then.

Mr. McClintic: On this page we are now considering, in regard to the guaranteed bonds, I find an item of Valley Turnpike Company, I believe it is, fifty-five. Was not that assumed by the State as a direct obligation prior to the 1st of January, 1861?

The Witness: In regard to such, I cannot state.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You made no examination to find out?

A. Not that I remember; no, sir.

Q. You have on there, then, one item of $300,000 and one of $200,000 of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company. I refer you to the $200,000 item. Did you make any examination to see whether or not that has been paid by the C. & O. Canal Company?

A. No, sir. 260

Q. Either before or after the 1st of January, 1861?

A. No, sir; the records were incomplete in regard to that issue.

Q. Did you make any investigation afterwards to see whether these are still outstanding debts or not?

A. I did not.

Q. You simply found they were guaranteed and apparently outstanding on the 1st of January, 1861, and stopped there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is another charge there of $100,000 for the Virginia Central Railroad, which was afterwards changed to the C. & O. Did you make any investigation to see whether or not that was paid by the original maker of the paper?

The Special Master: When? Prior to January 1st, 1861, or subsequently?

Mr. McClintic: Whether it was paid at any time by the maker.

The Special Master: Your question is general?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you make any examination to see whether or not that was paid?

A. No; we took the evidence on the bond registers.

Q. You did not attempt to find out whether it had been paid or not?

A. No, sir.

Q. There is another item of $13,900 of the James River & 261
Kanawha Company that stands in the same relation as the other James River and Kanawha Company, does it? In other words, you made no examination to see whether it had been assumed directly by the State, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. There is an item of $15,000, Alexandria Canal Company. Did you make any examination to see whether it had been paid or not?

A. We made no examination in any of these cases because we did not have access to the books of these companies; we could not tell without access to their books whether the Company had taken up the obligation or not.

Q. Did you try to find out in any case whether they had been taken up or not?

A. Yes; we used every effort to determine from the State archives whether or not there were.

Q. Did you ask the Alexandria Canal Company people whether they had taken it up; did you make any attempt to find out from the company?

The Special Master: Did you make any application to any of the officers of the company?

A. I believe we did, yes sir. We wrote to the General Manager of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company and asked him if the books were in existence, and he said he did not know anything about it.

The Special Master: Will you repeat that?

The Witness: We told him we would like to know if the account books of the canal with reference to the cost, etc., were conveniently at hand. He did not answer that question. He said, "I have none of the old maps and am not prepared to report on the matter."

262

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Who is the General Manager of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company?

A. G. L. Nicholson.

Q. Where does he reside?

A. At that time 5039 Q Street, Georgetown.

Q. Did you make any attempt to find out whether the $100,000 of the Virginia Central and C. & O. Railroad Company bonds had been disposed of, paid by anybody on the outside?

A. No.

Q. Is not the C. & O. Railroad Company's principal office in the City of Richmond?

A. Oh; the C. & O. Railroad. Yes, I believe it is.

Q. And you made no attempt to find out whether that $100,000 debt had been paid or not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make any attempt to find out from the Alexandria Canal Company whether that $15,000 had been paid or not?

A. No; we did not ask that question.

Q. Why did you include those items guaranteed without attempting to find out whether or not they are still outstanding obligation?

A. Because in the case of the Alexandria Canal Company, it was a bankrupt company, and as long as the State guaranteed the old company they took care of the bonds.

Q. Who told you that?

A. I cannot tell. 263

Q. Was that information satisfactory to you?

A. It was satisfactory at the time, yes, sir.

Q. What were you told by anybody in reference to the Chesapeake & Ohio or Virginia Central $1,000,000?

A. I don't remember.

Mr. Carlisle: The treasurer is here now and if you will allow us to put him on the stand for a question or two—

The Special Master: He had better take the witness stand.

Whereupon

A. W. HARMON

(not sworn, testified as follows):

(Note.—It was agreed by counsel that the witness need not be sworn and that his testimony should be regarded as taken under oath.)

The Special Master: You are the Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Virginia?

The witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. I ask you whether you as Treasurer of the State of Virginia have in your possession one or more certificates issued by the James River Company under the act of February 17th, 1820?

A. I have, sir.

Q. The originals?

A. Yes, sir. I have four.

Q. Will you produce them here, and let us use them for the present? We will have copies made for the record.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Carlisle: I will read a copy into the record.

The Special Master: Do you wish this to appear as an ex- 264 hibit? You wish to retain the copies?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Carlisle: That is my suggestion.

The Special Master: I think we can save time if the witness will hold the original while you read the copy, to see that it is correct.

Mr. Anderson: Do you know these to be correct copies, Mr. Dixey?

Mr. Dixey: Yes; they are correct, even as to the punctuation.

Mr. Carlisle: These are copies of the certificates themselves, and also the endorsements on the back. Will you please look at this.

Mr. Dixey: That endorsement is a foot note.

Mr. Carlisle: Will you please follow the original while I read this.

Mr. Carlisle read as follows:

CERTIFICATE No. 1. SIX PER CENT STOCK OF THE JAMES RIVER COMPANY.

In pursuance of an act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia, passed the 17th day of February, 1820, entitled

'An Act to amend an act entitled "An Act for clearing and improving the Navigation of James River," and for uniting the eastern and western waters by the James and Kanawha Rivers,' and by the 13th section of which act the James River Company are authorized and required to borrow money, on the terms, and in the manner therein specified, the James River Company do hereby certify, that there is due from the James River Company unto the President and Directors of the Literary fund the sum of fifty thousand dollars bearing interest at the rate of six per centum per annum from the fifteenth day of July one thousand eight hundred and twenty, being so much money borrowed of the said President & Directors of the Literary fund by the James River Company, the interest on which, at the rate of six per centum per annum, shall be paid, by the James River Company, semi-annually, on the fifteenth day of July and the fifteenth day of January in each year, and the principal whereof shall be irredeemable for twenty years, from and after the fifteenth day of March one thousand eight hundred and twenty, and from and after the expiration of the said period of twenty years, to be redeemed only at the pleasure of the General Assembly—which said debt is duly registered in the books of the James River Company, and this certificate thereof transferable only on said books—Certified under the common seal of the James River Company, and signed by John Coalter, the President of the said Company for the time, being and counter signed by Robert Pollard, their clerk.

Mr. McClintic read aloud Exhibits A-3, A-4 and A-5, as hereinbefore set forth, the witness, Treasurer Harman, holding 273 the originals, and comparing them with the copies which were read.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Can you state whether or not the books in your office show that prior to the 15th day of July, 1820, the Literary Fund lent to the James River Company $50,000?

A. The books of my company showed that they lent the Company?

Q. Yes. Would it pass through your office?

A. I have not looked to see. I don't think it would.

Q. Would it probably be shown on your books, or shown on the books of the Literary Fund?

A. It would be shown on the books of the Literary Fund, I think, sir.

Q. Do you know whether it is a fact or not that this certificate dated July, 1820, was issued as evidence of an indebtedness of the company to the State on account of the loan made?

A. Yes; I think these certificates show that.

Q. I will not ask anything about the other certificates because they are dated within a period when we admit that the debt was being created in other ways; so it would cut no figure on this question as to the beginning of the debt?

The Special Master: What do you understand this to mean: "Registered June 1st, 1823. J. Brown, Jr., Second Auditor"?

The Witness: I think the reason of it is that the Second Auditor's office was established in 1823, and after it was es- 274 tablished these matters were all of record in the Second Auditor's office.

Mr. Spooner: I think that will be clear to your Honor when we read the Act of 1823.

Mr. Carlisle: Which recites the loan.

Mr. Sponer: Which explains it.

The Special Master: These may be returned to the treasurer, I understand, the copies remaining on file as exhibits?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes.

The Special Master: Do you desire to cross examine, Mr. Conrad?

Mr. Conrad: No sir.

The Special Master: Do you desire to cross examine, Mr. Attorney General?

Mr. Anderson: No sir.

Whereupon

ARTHUR G. POTTER,

resumed the stand for further
Cross Examination.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. I want to ask one other question on the line I was on when the treasurer came in.

In your total of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia on the 1st of January, 1861—and please state the amount so we will be sure we understand each other cor- 275 rectly.

Mr. Anderson: Page 5?

Mr. McClintic: I ask him to state the amount.

Mr. Anderson: I don't know which page you are speaking about.

Mr. McClintic: I don't know either.

The Witness: $34,707,908.96.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Does that include this guaranteed debt?

A. No sir.

Q. The guaranteed debt is in excess of that different amount?

A. In excess of that different amount.

Q. Does that include the amount held by the literary fund of the State of Virginia.

A. It does.

Q. How much do you include of the bonds in the literary fund on the 1st of January, 1861?

A. $1,037,567.33.

Q. How much do you include of the bonds of Virginia in the sinking fund the 1st of January 1861?

A. $1,329,557.20.

Q. And in this literary fund do you include the four certificates which have just been put in evidence?

A. No. 1; 86, 87, and 88, amounting to $665,000.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you find any evidence in the public records, the original books or official reports of the officers of the state, anything to show that these bonds which were held in the literary fund and the board of public works on the 1st of January 1861, 275½ had ever been issued to the public and sold?

A. I did not examine them with the idea of finding out whether they had ever been in the hands of the public, no.

Q. You found nothing to indicate whether they had ever been issued by the state and put on the market and sold?

A. I made no examination.

Q. You made no examination to ascertain that?

A. No sir.

Q. That is all on that point.

TESTIMONY OF THOMAS B. DIXCY (Resumed).

499

[Vol. 5. May 6, 1909. Defendant's Exhibit A-1]

By Mr. McClintic:

1. I hand you exhibit marked Defendant's Exhibit A-1.

If the court please, we desire to offer in evidence a statement of the debt under the 1st paragraph of the decree which we call defendant's exhibit A-1.

You have a copy of that?

A. I have a copy marked "original."

Q. Will you please look at that and identify that?

A. This is the one made by me.

(The document referred to was accordingly marked by the stenographer Defendant's Exhibit A-1.)

500

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Was this signed by you on the 1st day of December?

A. It was signed by me on the 1st day of December.

Q. State to the Commissioner what that exhibit contains in a general way.

A. This is an exhibit showing the amount of State bonds or certificates of indebtedness issued on account of various public improvements, itemized, and the total thereof, from March 19, 1823, to January 1st, 1861, showing the number of the loan, the act of the legislature under which the certificate was issued, the rate per cent, the total amount issued, and the disposition of parts of the entire authorized issue from time to time; and the amount of the public debt outstanding on the 1st day of January, 1861, of each individual issue of these bonds or certificates of State debt.

Q. What amount do you report as being outstanding on the 1st day of January, 1861?

A. On page 7, $32,919,863.93.

Q. Does that total contain therein anything on account of the bonds held by the Literary Fund?

A. It does not.

Q. Does it contain anything on account of the bonds held by the Sinking Fund?

A. It does not.

Q. Does it contain anything on account of guaranteed bonds which were made by other parties and guaranteed by the State at the time?

A. It does not.

Q. Have you personally examined each of the items that 501 make up this schedule?

A. I have personally examined each of the items and I made the schedule.

Q. Is this schedule from such an examination?

A. It is correct from the books of original entry of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Q. Does that total just given by you as of January 1, 1861, contain anything for interest that might have accrued in the year 1860?

A. No, sir; it does not.

Q. Mr. Dixby; did you examine the plaintiff's exhibit A-1, filed here some time since?

A. I have examined it.

Q. I find on the last page thereof certain items of what was called the guaranteed debt or bonds of the Commonwealth of Virginia which were outstanding January 1, 1861, inthe name of the James River & Kanawha Company, three items; one of $475,475; one of $55,000; and one of $13,900. State, if you know, whether they were outstanding on the 1st day of January, 1861.

A. They were not guaranteed bonds. They had been assumed prior to that date by the Commonwealth of Virginia and were actual obligations of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Q. Are they included in the total given by you of the Virginia debt?

A. Yes; they are.

Q. I find on the same page of plaintiff's exhibit A-1, two items: Chesapeake & Ohio canal, $300,000; the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company, $200,000. State, if you know, whether those were outstanding, on January 1st, 1861? 502

A. The item of $200,000 was not outstanding. It had been retired prior to January 1st, 1861. The item of $300,000 appears to be still outstanding.

Q. You mean outstanding at this time?

A. Still outstanding; yes, sir. We are informed that the books containing the record of that were destroyed in the Baltimore fire.

By the Special Master:

Q. Do you mean of the $300,000 item?

A. Yes.

Q. You do not include the $200,000 now?

A. That was retired, had been retired prior to January 1st, 1861.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. How retired?

A. They had been paid off, taken up by the company.

Q. The $200,000 item had been paid and it was no longer an obligation of anybody?

A. It was not an obligation; no, sir.

Q. On the same exhibit I find "Virginia Central Railroad"——

The Special Master: Does the $300,000 enter into your aggregate?

The Witness: No, sir; it does not. As a State obligation. Their status is still undetermined. There is no principal obligation on the part of the Commonwealth of the State of Virginia for those bonds as yet. 503

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. You mean the Chesapeake & Ohio canal?

A. Yes.

Q. No obligation as guarantor?

A. No; not as yet.

The Special Master: Guarantor of the principal sum?

The Witness: They guaranteed interest and the ultimate payment of the principal, and they have not yet paid the principal.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On the same page I find "Virginia Central Railroad", the name of which was afterwards changed to the C. & O. Railroad, $100,000. What has become of that, if you know?

A. In the refunding mortgage of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad I believe that obligation was assumed. I was so informed by Mr. Henry T. Wickham, General Solicitor of the Company. It was paid off by the Company.

The Special Master: So that does not exist as a liability against any one?

The Witness: No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On the same page I find "Alexandria Canal Company, $15,000." Tell the Commission what you know about that, as to its existence or non-existence, and if paid, by whom?

A. I am not testifying from exact knowledge now, sir. There is a report in the files of the Circuit Court here in Richmond to the effect that those bonds have been paid. I sent a man to Alexandria and made inquiry there and they said that in the course 504 of the suit (the Mayor and the Auditor of Alexandria told me this) the matter had been transferred to Richmond, and they thought it was on record there. Inquiry into the records developed that fact in the report of the Commission. They referred to that in the report of the Commission. They referred to that loan as having been paid.

The Special Master: Did it give the date of payment?

The Witness: I have it here in the papers. I haven't it immediately in front of me.

Mr. Conrad: Did you say paid by whom?

The Witness: It was paid not by the State.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The first item of the exhibit Plaintiff A-1 was outstanding December 31, 1860, say $104,000, which was apparently a part of an issue of $161,600. Was the sum of $104,000 outstanding December 31, 1860, as a fact?

A. That was not a State obligation.

Q. I understand, but I am asking was that sum, $104,000 was outstanding.

A. Conceding those conditions, there was not $104,000 outstanding. $65,000 of that issue of bonds, or of certificates of indebtedness were held by the Literary Fund.

Mr. Harrison: What do you mean by "those conditions"; what do you refer to?

The Witness: The conditions in the report.

By the Special Master:

Q. What about the balance of $104,000; do you account for that $39,000?

A. The balance of that was another loan altogether. That 505 remaining balance of $39,000 was not James River bonds at all, but bonds issued to the Presidents and Directors of the Bank of Virginia.

Q. Is it an obligation of the State of Virginia?

A. That $39,000 issued to the Bank of Virginia became an obligation on the State of Virginia in 1840.

Q. But the $65,000 you say never has become an obligation?

A. It has not, as shown by the original certificates presented here the other day, amounting to $65,000?

Q. Now in the hands of the Literary Fund?

A. They are not now. They were until 1871.

Q. They were in 1861?

A. They were in 1861, and until 1871.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Are those the certificates that were read here the other day?

A. Yes; those are the ones.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. There were certain coupon bonds, I believe, without referring to the plaintiff's exhibit at the exact point, representing in pounds a certain amount. Did you find that amount as set out on plaintiff's exhibit A-1 correct?

A. I did not find it correct.

The Special Master: What is the particular item?

Mr. McClintic: I do not know where to look for it.

The Special Master: You ought to direct your inquiry specifically to it, because otherwise I cannot trace it.

The Witness: On page 6. 506

The Special Master: You must have the items specified and the pages, because I cannot follow this out without that. You say you think it is on page 6. What is the item?

The Witness: I think it is the third item from the bottom.

Mr. McClintic: It is on the second page of plaintiff's Exhibit A-1, included, I think, in some large items at the bottom of the page.

The Special Master: Well, that items—because it is necessary for me to trace this and it is difficult to do so unless you locate them.

Mr. McClintic: They were issued under the Act of the 29th of March, 1851, the bottom act on page 2 of plaintiff's exhibit No. 1.

The Special Master: That is at the bottom of page 3, the coupon bond?

Mr. McClintic: Page 2, as I have it.

The Special Master: Let us get all your exhibits harmonious with mine.

Mr. McClintic: I made a mistake.

The Special Master: Then it is page 3, the item marked No. 90, coupon bonds $14,947,500. Is that the item you inquire about?

Mr. McClintic: Yes. I will ask the stenographer to strike the other question out.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you examine the items composing the large item of coupon bonds?

A. I examined them all.

Q. Did you find an item of 375,000 pounds sterling? 507

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state to the court what you make that on your exhibit in American dollars.

A. It is shown on page 6 of defendant's Exhibit A-1, the third item from the bottom.

Q. You make it $1,815,204?

A. Yes, sir. I may say in connection with that, that it is shown on the Auditor's books that $5 is the par exchange, and I make it that it should be $4.8665.

Q. On that date?
A. On that date.
Q. And at what value in the plaintiff's exhibit?
A. $5 in the plaintiff's exhibit.
Q. Do you know what difference that would be?
A. $49,000 and odd dollars. I have not the amount immediately before me. It is a little short of $50,000.

By the Special Master:
Q. Have you got your notes so you can refer to them?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Then put that into your testimony. You must give me the specific amounts on all items like that.
A. The exact amount of the difference?
A. Yes.
A. Between the $1,865,000, which would be the total at $5, and at the proper par of exchange, or $4,8665, is $49,759.50?

Mr. Harrison: Does the difference between yours and Mr. Potter's statement arise out of the difference you took in the matter of exchange? 508
The Witness: It is entirely a matter of exchange. That is to say, it was figured out $5 in the Auditor's books and on your statement.

By the Special Master:
Q. Is your only criticism of the item mentioned as $14,947,500. at the bottom of page 3, this one relating to the question of exchange?
A. I have not the plaintiff's exhibit before me and I cannot testify to that item from memory. Can I have that copy?
(After examination of paper) Will you state the question.

The last question was repeated by the stenographer as above recorded.

Q. (Continuing) That is, is there any other discrepancy between your computation and the computation of Mr. Potter, as appearing in that item?
A. No, sir; there is none.
Q. So there is that difference between the two only?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:
Q. On what date was that power of exchange made?
A. January 1st, 1861?
Q. The date on which this outstanding account is fixed?
A. Yes, sir; the date of the account.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Did you see one of the bonds?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know what the bond said on its face as to the rate of exchange? 509

A. No; but it was entered in the Auditor's books at $5, and on your statement at $5. The obligation was not $5 at that date.

The Special Master: At what date was the entry made on the books, if you remember; that is, bearing on the question of exchange?

The Witness: I will have to go to the original books for that.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Tell the court, if you know, about an annuity of the James River Company on which the interest had been guaranteed by the State and which was funded before January 1st, 1861.

A. That is shown on this exhibit, on page 3.

Mr. Harrison: On your exhibit?

The Witness: On this exhibit, yes; on page 3. It is the last item under the head of the James River Company, shown in the total column as $350,000 and referred to in note 3 at the end of the statement. The note is as follows:

"The amount of $350,000 here shown was not evidenced by any form of certificate of debt prior to January 1st, 1861, but is the principal amount required to produce annually at 6 per cent interest the sum of $21,000, guaranteed forever to the stockholders of this Company (The James River Company) by the act of March 23rd 1860. It was later actually funded on this basis under the acts of 1871 and 1872, known as the Consol and Peeler acts."

510

The Special Master: When you say no certificate of debt, you mean no certificate of debt for the State of Virginia?

The Witness: Yes. These certificates were drawing 15 per cent and the State at this time assumed this obligation and converted them, under this act of March 23rd, 1860, and issued bonds for $350,000, which funded them.

Mr. McClintic: Please take the defendant's Exhibit B-1.

Mr. Harrison: Are you passing now from your Exhibit A-1?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: That schedule has been admitted in evidence?

The Special Master: Yes; A-1 has been introduced and admitted in evidence.

[Vol. 6, May 7, 1909. Cross-examination of T. B. Dixey.]

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I understood you to say, Mr. Dixey, that the origin of the debt which you have been engaged in investigating com- 589 menced with——

A. March 19, 1823.

Q. Yes; and on your statement you take as the first debt created by the State of Virginia an issue of bonds which you describe as the James River Company No. 2.

The Special Master: On what page is that?

Mr. Harrison: I am on page 3, about the middle of the page of defendant's schedule.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. That is correct, is it?

A. Will you repeat that.

Q. I say you begin with a debt which you describe on your schedule as James River Company No. 2, do you not?

A. Loan No. 2 of the James River Company; that is the first debt.

Q. Mr. Potter, in his schedule of the debt, begins with a debt described as James River Company No. 1, does he not?

A. Yes.

Q. The James River debt No. 1, with which Mr. Potter's schedule begins, was created February 17, 1820?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the James River debt No. 2, with which you begin, was created under the Act of March 19, 1823? 590

A. February 24th——

Q. February 24, I mean, 1823; that being a difference in time of some three years or more?

The Special Master: Three years and four months.

Mr. McClintic: Mr. Potter took in arrearages back to October 19.

The Special Master: Yes; from that up to March 19, would be about three years and four months.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Why did you not begin with the debt described as James River Company No. 1?

A. Because no part of that debt was a debt of the Commonwealth.

Q. What is your authority for that statement?

A. The act of February 17, 1820.

Q. You then base your statement on your construction of the Act of February 17, 1820?

A. My construction, which was submitted to counsel.

Q. It was your own construction confirmed by counsel, or was it counsel's construction to you?

A. They instructed me to exclude any bonds issued under that act.

Q. Now, was there any difference in the way the James River Company's debt No. 1 was treated on the books of the Commonwealth of Virginia as compared with the way the James River Company's debt No. 2 was treated upon her books?

The Special Master: What was the difference in the original entries, if any? 591

The Witness: There was not any difference. There were no entries on the books of the Commonwealth until long after the actual creation of this debt, and then they were lumped together in one entry.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. My question was—

A. No sir; there was not any difference.

Q. Then, so far as the books of the Commonwealth of Virginia show, the James River debt No. 1 was as much a debt of the Commonwealth as James River debt No. 2?

A. You are confining that question to the books? So far as the books show, that was the case, yes, sir.

By The Special Master:

Q. What was the date of the first entry you found on the books referring to these two items?

A. I would like to refer to my notes.

Q. You had better have your notes handy.

A. I can get that first entry or submit the original record.

Q. The question is what is the date of the first entry on the books that relates to either one or both of these items. I understood they were both included in one entry.

A. They were.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Were not the entries on the books of Virginia in regard to James River Company debt No. 2 on the same book with the entries in regard to James River Company debt No. 1? 592

A. The original entry included both.

Q. Was not that book a record of the obligations of the Commonwealth?

A. I would like to qualify that. I do not know that that is a book of the Commonwealth of Virginia at all. It is marked on the back "James River Company."

Q. Is this the book? I hand you now the book of original entry that we are talking about and I will ask you to identify it.

A. (After an examination of book). We were talking about different books. This is the register.

Q. That is a register of the bonds of the Commonwealth, is it not?

A It is a register of sundry acts from the 24th of February, 1823, to the 11th of March, 1844, according to the back of the book.

The Special Master: Have you the book of original entry?

Mr. Harrison: What we are concerned with is what it contains.

The Witness: That is the endorsement on the back of the book.

Mr. Harrison: Now, tell us what it contains.

The Witness: This book contains here a record, not necessarily on the original entry, of certificate No. 1. It may be simply a register of that certificate.

The Special Master: Well, read the entry and put it in the record, so it will show for itself.

The Witness: It says No. I. 593

The Special Master: In the first place, give the heading.

The Witness: There is no heading.

The Special Master: Oh, yes. There is "No.," "Date," "Amount."

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Let me ask you this question. Did you ever see that book before?

A. Oh, yes; we have gone over it carefully.

Q. Did you use it in your compilation?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Do you wish this entry in the record?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Then let us have it. First give the headings, and then say No.— No. 1; and then date.

The Witness: "Date 1820; 15th July.

"Amount; 50,000.

"To whom issued; President and Directors of the Literary Fund.

"Place of residence, Richmond.

"When transferred. ———— "To whom transferred. ————"

Do you wish me to go further?

The Special Master: No, I think not. Whenever we put any of these entries in we will have as near as we can exact fac similes of the entries.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I will ask you to look at page 1 there and read a memorandum note entered there opposite the bonds No. 21 to 30 inclusive of the issue of February 17, 1820. Please read that note. I want to get it in the record.

A. The issue of February 17, 1820. 594

Mr. McClintic: What was that question?

(The question as above recorded was repeated by the stenographer).

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Do you say that note does not relate to bonds issued under the act of February 17, 1820?

A. Just a second—

The Special Master: Do you want what the books show or the knowledge of the witness independent of the book?

Mr. Harrison: I want what the books show first.

The Witness: I may say that the only certificate issued under the Act of February 17, 1820, was certificate No. I, for $50,000. These bonds which you are alluding to come under the following act.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Please read that memorandum for me.

A. (Reading):

"1st May, 1840, certificates 21 to 30, both inclusive, cancelled under the Act provising for a reissue of certificates of State stock due the bank of Virginia, passed 18th March, 1840, and new stock issued therefor. See folio 22. (Part of $40,000.)"

Q. Am I to understand you to say that that was not a reissue under the Act of February 17, 1820? 595

A. It was not a reissue.

Q. On what authority do you make that statement?

A. As a matter of fact it was not a reissue. It was an issue by the State, a funding in 1840 of certain certificates of indebtedness which had been issued by the James River Company in 1822.

Q. Part of the note that I asked you to read refers you to folio 22, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you turn to folio 22 you find the explanation of that do you not?

A. There is a note on folio 22.

Q. Suppose you read that note and let us get it into the record.

A. The note on folio 22 that is referred to on folio 1 is as follows:

"Note. The certificates registered on the opposite page and numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4, amounting to $40,000, are issued in lieu of the following certificates issued by the old James River Company under acts passed 17th February, 1820, and 28th February, 1831, viz.: No. 21 to 55 both inclusive, $1,000 each (see folios 1 and 2); and No. 73 for $5,000 (see folio 3)."

Q. You filed on yesterday a copy of a certificate of stock, of indebtedness of the James River Company, marked certificate No. 86, in lieu of original certificate No. 67, which appears to be an obligation for $61,000, bearing interest at the rate of six per centum per annum from the 1st of July 1827. Did you treat that in your statement as part of the debt?

A. No sir; it is an obligation of the James River Company 596 to the State of Virginia; it is not an obligation of the State of Virginia.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. It says it on its face.

Q. Is that your only reason for saying so?

A. That and the acts that back it up, and the opinion of counsel in the matter.

Q. Yes. The books, however, showing the way in which the Commonwealth of Virginia treats it, do not back you up?

A. No, sir; it says in the books that it was a certificate of the old James River Company.

Q. I know it does; but it is also treated as an obligation of the State of Virginia, is it not?

A. After 1840 these particular certificates referred to here became an obligation of the State of Virginia. In 1840 the state bonds that were issued in place of, in lieu of the old certificates of indebtedness of the James River Company—

Q. Why should they become an obligation of the State of Virginia in 1840 if they were not an obligation of the State when they were issued?

A. I have no idea.

Mr. McClintic: They were reissued under an act of the 597 legislature, were they not?

The Witness: Yes, sir; they were reissued under an act of the Legislature. I do not know why the legislature assumed them at that time. That is what I mean to say.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Was not the reissue under the Act of 1840 a reissue of the loan created under the Act of February, 1820?

A. I do not understand it as a reissue at all. I understand it as an original assumption by the State of part of the debt which up to that time had been the debt of the James River Company.

Q. Is the word reissue used?

A. It is; it is used in the title of the Act.

Q. And is it not used on that book of original entry there?

A. It is; yes sir.

Q. Notwithstanding that, however, you do not so understand it?

A. Notwithstanding that, I do not so understand it.

Q. Does any part of the debt described on Mr. Potter's schedule as James River Company No. 1, which is $104,000, appear in your statement of the debt?

A. Yes sir; I think Mr. Potter includes in that statement two issues of bonds, one by the State and one by the James River Company. There were included in that issue 65,000 of the bonds of the James River Company and 39,000 of the bonds of the State issued by the president and Directors of the Bank of Virginia.

By the Special Master:

Q. Is this book here the book of the James River Company? 598

A. It is the register of the second auditor's office.

Q. It is a Commonwealth book, rather than the James River Company book.

A. The record was kept, this record was kept, in the Second Auditor's office. We have not the original book of the James River Company.

Q. This is the record of the State and not the record of the James River Company?

A. This is the record of the State, yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. And it covers the register of all the bonds of the State embraced in the period covered by the book?

The Special Master: And is not confined to the James River Company?

Mr. Harrison: No, not at all.

The Special Master: But other internal improvements?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Harrison: When this book was made it was made to include bonds issued under sundry acts from the 24th of February, 1823, to the 11th of March, 1844, inclusive, and later these James River bonds were inserted.

By the Special Master:

Q. Before you leave this subject, get out the other books, if there are any that show the expenses and disbursements and receipts in connection with this enterprise, so we will have the contemporaneous original history. That is, I suppose there are other books that show disbursements.

A. This is the bond register pure and simple. It is apart from the journals.

Q. But there are books showing disbursements? 599

A. Yes, sir; receipts and disbursements.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I understand you to say that of the $104,000 shown by Mr. Potter's schedule of the James River debt No. 1 to be outstanding December 31, 1860, you do take account of $39,000 of it in your statement of the debt. Is that right?

A. Yes; we take account of $39,000 of that $104,000.

Q. Where does that appear in your statement?

A. It appears on defendant's Exhibit A, sheet 2, third item from the top, headed Bank of Virginia March 18, 1840; total issue $100-000. That $40,000 or $39,000 was included in that amount, and one other bond which was cancelled later.

The Special Master: Do you also include the $65,000?

The Witness: No sir.

Mr. Harrison: Why do you not include the $65,000?

The Witness: Because the $65,000 was not a debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia represented by these James River certificates that we presented the other day.

By the Special Master:

Q. Did it at any time go into the indebtedness of the State of Virginia?

A. Those $65,000 never became a part of the debt of the State of Virginia until 1871.

Q. And what happened then?

A. And they were taken up under this general Consul & 600 Peeler Act, the funding act.

Q. By virtue of the Act of the legislature?

A. Yes, sir; the act of 1871.

Q. Were other evidences of indebtedness issued for the purpose of taking them up?

A. At that time, yes, sir.

Q. In 1871?

A. The certificates bore on their face the statement that the funding was done in 1873, but it was under the Act of 1871.

Q. And that, having taken place after 1861, is not included in this statement?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that the reason?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison.

Q. Then your explanation is that according to your facts, that $65,000 that you exclude as a part of the debt of the State of Virginia prior to 1861, did become a part of the debt of the State of Virginia in 1871?

A. It was assumed by the Commonwealth in 1871.

By the Special Master:

Q. And your theory is that up to that time it was not a part of the indebtedness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And for that reason you did not include it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do I state it correctly? 601

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison.

Q. The fact is, then, according to your testimony, that the State of Virginia assumed a debt of 1871 for which she had been under no previous liability of obligation?

A. Quite true, sir.

Q. You have treated $39,000 of that indebtedness, called the James River Company No. 1, as part of the debt of Virginia, have you not?

A. More than that: $40,000.

Q. $40,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, say $40,000, then—

A. There is a difference of $1,000 there because Mr. Potter takes up one bond of the bank of Virginia and includes that in that issue.

Q. You have treated $40,000 of the $161,000 that constitutes the first debt, known as the James River Company No. 1 as part of the debt of Virginia?

A. Under the act of March 18, 1840. I think it is March 18.

Q. And you treated it as a debt created for the first time on that date?

A. I would like to modify that answer a bit.

Mr. Conrad: Oh, yes; you may modify it as much as you please.

A. (Continuing) The State issued obligations then—and I have said this before, and so I am just repeating—under the 602
Act of March 18, 1840. There were certain obligations of the State issued which replaced the obligations of the James River Company to the extent specified in the Act. It was not a reissue.

By Mr. Harrison.

Q. That statement of yours that it was not a reissue you have already explained?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that notwithstanding the Act of the General Assembly and the Books of Virginia, you treat it as not a reissue.

A. That is true.

Q. And you were acting under the instruction of counsel?

A. Under the opinion of counsel; not under instructions. It was my own opinion as well.

Q. Mr. Dixey, in your investigation of the records in relation to the debt and in the statement you have compiled with respect to it, did you take any account of a hundred shares of the stock of the old James River Company which were donated by Virginia to General Washington under an Act enacted long prior thereto?

A. Of 100 shares of what?

Q. Of the James River Company, that the State of Virginia donated to him?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Anderson: Upon which the state assumed an obligation to pay $3,000 a year forever.

The Witness: Well, the State afterwards assumed an 603 obligation on the dividends of the old James River Stock; but it was not at this period, it was not prior to March 18, 1823.

By Mr. Harrison.

Q. Not prior to it, you mean?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mean her assumption of that liability was not prior to 1823?

A. No sir. It was March 23, 1860, that she assumed that guarantee forever.

By the Special Master:

Q. $3,000 per annum?

A. No; I am speaking of the annuity, the assumption of the annuity.

Q. Well, the annuity relating to this stock given to George Washington?

A. I do not recall particularly as to that.

Mr. Anderson: And he gave it to Washington & Lee College, which holds it now?

The Special Master: That was by virtue of an act of 1860?

The Witness: I do not recall as to that individual stock.

The Special Master: Well that is ascertainable.

Mr. Harrison: I want to know whether he had taken any account of that at all.

Mr. McClintic: May I ask if you took any account of it?

Mr. Anderson: Yes sir, we took account of it; and he has got it in there too, but he does not know it. 604

The Witness: It may be in the $350,000 annuity.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, that is where it comes. It is capitalized by the Act of March 23, 1860.

The Special Master: It is in there, but he had not discovered George Washington in connection with?

By Mr. Harrison.

Q. You give us first the aggregate public debt of Virginia, January 1st, 1861, $32,919,863.93. You do not include in that aggregate the debt held by the Literary Fund or the debt held by the Sinking Fund, do you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Potter's statement of the total amount of the debt does include those two items?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it appears to be, with those items included, $34,707, 908. 96.

The Special Master: Is not the six months interest included in that?

Mr. Harrison: No; he does not include any.

The Special Master: I find I have a pencil note, thirty million dollars and something.

Mr. Harrison: No—

The Special Master: Then the item of $34,707,908.96 is simply, the principal sum exclusive of interest?

Mr. Harrison: Exclusive of interest, but including the two debts of the Literary Fund and the Sinking Fund.

The Special Master: And also including the $64,000 in the James River fund?

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. If you deduct the two items of the indebtedness held by the Sinking fund and the Literary Fund from the total shown by Mr. Potter, the aggregate amount of the debt then, ac- 605 cording to this statement, would be $32,340,784.43, or $579,-079,50 less than your statement appears to be.

A. That may be true, and probably it is true.

Q. I state that so as to save time.

A. Yes; I accept that.

Q. In other words, if you eliminate from Mr. Potter's statement of the debt the two sums held by the Literary fund and the sinking fund your statement of the debt exceeds by more than half a million Mr. Potter's statement of the debt?

A. That is true.

Q. Now, can you give me, if you please, the items that enter into and constitute that excess in your statement of the debt over Mr. Potter's?

A. I think I can very closely from memory. The certificates of indebtedness of the James River and Kanawha Company which were assumed by the State, which are shown in Mr. Potter's statement of guaranteed debt, although they had not been converted into State certificates, were outstanding in their old form but has been assumed by the State.

By the Special Master:

Q. You treated them as a direct liability, and he treats them as a guaranteed liability?

A. Yes.

Q. What does that amount to? 606

A. $375,000 odd as I recollect it.

Mr. Hogg: That was by the Act of 1860?

The Witness: Yes. (Referring to memorandum) $533,375. that we add.

By the Special Master:

Q. That leaves in the neighborhood of $400,000?

A. Yes.

Q. What does that consist of?

A. Well, I would reconcile it if your Honor wishes me to do so. We add $95.500 to the amount shown by the accountants for Virginia in addition to the amount I have already stated, being the principal of the amount required to produce annually at 6 per cent. interest the sum of $21,000 guaranteed forever to the stockholders of the James River Company by the Act of March 23, 1860, and later—in 1871—funded at $350,000. That was the amount necessary to produce $21,000 which had been guaranteed forever on the old Stock, the actual stock of the James River Company. The net amount of that outstanding that had not been acquired by the State was $95,500, which we add to the statement of Virginia, the public debt. We deduct the $65,000 which was under discussion. We deduct the difference between the par of exchange on January 1st, 1861, and 4.8665.

Q. About $49,000?

A. Yes, sir; $49,795.50; the difference between the par of exchange and $5, on 373,000 pounds sterling, coupon bonds issued in that form by the Commonwealth of Virginia for sale abroad.

We also deduct the amounts that Mr. Harrison has already spoken of, held by the sinking fund, the amounts shown by Virginia as held by the sinking fund, $1,329,557.20. And 607 we deduct the amounts shown by the accountants for Virginia as held by the literary fund. That is, $1,037,567.33. That is the amount that they show. Less the $65,000 which we have already deducted and which is included in their amount, making a net of $972,567.33. Our total additions to the figures ($34,703,908.96) are $628,875. Our total deductions are $2,416,920.03; which reconcile the two accounts.

Q. What page of what exhibit do you find that?

A. We have not presented that as an exhibit yet.

Mr. Harrison: I will ask you to furnish on that point—

By the Special Master:

Q. Right on this point, the only discrepancy between the accounts presented by them and the accounts presented by you that can be related to the beginning of the account is the $65,000 item?

A. That is all.

Q. Is that right, Mr. Dixey?

A. As I understand your question, yes.

Q. That is the only item referrable to the beginning of the account?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In order to harmonize this particular exhibit in which you state the amount of the debt with the account made by Virginia what else would you have to do except to add the $65,000?

A. I do not quite get that.

Q. In order to harmonize your statement of the debt pre- 608 dicated on beginning March 29, 1823, and their statement of the debt beginning with the fiscal year 1820, what have you to do to your account except to add to it $65,000?

A. We have to also add the holdings of the sinking fund and the Literary fund—well, practically all these items that I have read.

Q. No; but in order to harmonize so far as the beginning of the accounts is concerned, all that you have to do would be to add $65,000?

A. That is all, I think, sir.

Q. And as to this exhibit, then, that would be completely harmonized?

A. I think so. That is rather offhand, but that is my impression.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now, as to the difference in the two statements, I will ask you to furnish us, if you please, with the items that enter into and constitute the difference between your statement of the debt and Mr. Potter's. I mean the excess, if you eliminate the two indebtednesses held by the Literary Fund and the Sinking Fund with the special schedule supporting those differences. Can you give us that detail?

A. In other words, the items that I have just read into the record?

Q. Yes.

The Special Master: That would simply require a statement of the items that you have already given. 609

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. We want not only the statements, but the details of the statements, how you arrived at them, and how you finally reached your summary in respect to them?

A. I will furnish you that immediately.

(The witness produced some papers.)

Q. Can you give me a copy of that?

A. Yes sir. Here is one. We have not introduced this yet and they are not marked.

Mr. McClintic: Does that answer your question? Does that give you what you want, or do you want to go into a lot of sub-schedules, do you want to go all through it?

The Witness: We have used their figures.

Mr. Harrison: (After examination of the paper given him by the witness.) This does not seem to be what I asked for. We want sub-schedules, precisely such as we submitted to you six months ago.

The Witness: Of what?

Mr. Harrison: Of the bonds, of all the debts in which this difference occurs, this difference of $549,000.

The Witness: I haven't got them. You have about all we have. You have all we have, practically. We did not prepare such schedules as those. I do not think they were referred to except in one or two instances.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Did you not say just now, that you used ours in making up yours?

A. We have taken your statement of bonds as held by the 610 sinking fund and the literary fund and used that in reconciling the difference between the debt as you show it and as we show it. That is what I intended to say.

Q. You say you have not got—

A. We have no such schedules as you made.

Q. Have you got such as you made?

A. We have working papers, yes.

Q. I want to see your working papers; I want to know how you worked up to that difference, I want a detailed statement. We want it for the purpose of testing, of comparing it with our work, the work with which we reached our result.

Mr. Conrad: The Master said the other day that all those working papers should be brought here for the purpose of examination.

The Special Master: As I understand it, there are only three or four items, as the case may be, where the accountants differ on this question of reaching the amount of the indebtedness.

Mr. Harrison: There seem to be about six, I believe.

The Special Master: Well, whatever the number may be; five or six; they are the only items which I apprehend you are interested to inquire about.

Mr. Harrison: That is all.

The Special Master: Now the witness submits here what he calls a reconcilement between the two statements of indebtedness.

Mr. Harrison: That is in total only. 611

The Special Master: I would suggest this, if it is agreeable. We have this statement of reconcilement and I suggest that it be marked Defendant's General Exhibit 1. Then you look at the items and if you are not satisfied with the items he presents, confine your examination to those particular items so as to see whether or not there are any items as to which you will require more details. Mr. Dixey will be able to give, or ought to be able to give, just exactly what he bases his reconcilement figures on. Is that clear?

(The paper referred to was filed and marked Defendant's General Exhibit No. 1.)

The Witness: I do not understand what is not on the statement.

The Special Master: You are not required to understand it at this stage.

The Witness: But I do not know what to admit. We would have to submit all of our papers, and it would be unintelligible to anybody except ourselves.

The Special Master: I do not think you will have a particle of trouble when you get down to the details.

Mr. Harrison: If he satisfies Mr. Potter I will be satisfied.

The Special Master: We will have Defendant's General Exhibit No. 1, which is the statement of reconcilement as to the debt. Now, Brother Harrison, you will take that up and see what you want to know about that. Take the items you want to inquire about.

By Mr. Harrison: 612

Q. I suggested to the witness that I would defer temporarily examining him about those items until I can be informed by Mr. Potter just what specific data he wants.

The Special Master: That is right. For the time being, then, the cross examination as to that point is suspended.

These are not paged, Mr. Dixcy, so I will have them all paged.

[Vol. 6, May 7, 1909, Cross Examination of T. B. Dixcy.]

By Mr. Anderson: 681

Q. I just wish to ask you, Mr. Dixcy, whether you included in your statement of the outstanding debt of Virginia on the 31st of December, 1860, bonds issued to George McIntosh or any of them. I think it is $22,000—the McIntosh bonds?

A. Bonds issued by the State of Virginia to George McIntosh?

Q. They were issued to somebody.

A. They have been retired, Major. My recollection is they have been retired.

Q. They have all been retired?

A. That is my recollection of it, but it is right here in the exhibit. There were $25,300 issued, and they were all retired—purchased and cancelled by the Sinking Fund established under the Act of March 26th, 1853.

By the Special Master: 682

Q. Do they enter into your statement ultimately?

A. Not on January 1st. They had been retired previous to that. Their issue is shown here, and their retirement is shown here.

Q. Shown on your schedule?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It does not make up a part of the debt?

A. It it not a part of the total.

Q. Because up to that time they had been paid?
A. They had been paid and cancelled.

By Mr. Conrad:
Q. They were not paid, in your judgment, by the substitution of other evidences of debts issued by the States?
A. Not those bonds of the State issued to George McIntosh.
Q. They were satisfied, extinguished, wiped out, you think, by payment made?
A. Yes, sir; the books so show.
Mr. Anderson: That is all. I have not traced them down.

By the Special Master:
Q. What is the first entry you find in these books relating to this item of $104,000 of bonds of the Loan No. 1 to the James River, independent of this bond account or bond register?
A. $161,600?
Q. Yes; where do you find the first entry in the books of Virginia that relate to that item?
A. Outside of this bond register? 683
Q. Yes.
A. Outside of the register?
Q. Yes; in the accounts?
A. Well, there are books kept by the second auditor that were opened on May 2nd, 1823. All these entries that had up to that time taken place and were recorded in the original books of the James River Company were transferred in one journal entry on May 2, 1823, to these books that were opened under the act of 1823 by the second auditor, whose office was established by the act of 1823.
Q. Was that simply a duplicate of the preceding entries?
A. Yes; it is not an original entry, in the sense that it is the first relating to this.
Q. Are there any original entries relating to that item showing the disbursement of money by the State of Virginia on account of that $161,000 item?
A. That is the first entry.
Q. Are there any entries on any books showing any disbursement of money, either for interest or principal, on account of that $161,000 item?
A. At any time?
Q. Yes, at any time? If so, what is the first one?
A. I have just got to get the scope of that clearly in my mind before I answer. Will you read that question.

The question was read as follows:
"Q. Are there any entries on any books showing any disbursement of money, either for interest or principal, on account of that $161,000 item?"

A. Why, yes, in part. 684

Q. What is the first entry in relation to it?

A. I will have to look it up. I cannot say, from memory, but I can look it up and show it to you.

Q. What you have just given me is simply a duplication of the original bond entries, practically. This original book you have produced here is a register of the bonds issued. Then when the public works came in, in 1823, the first entry they made on their books was simply to duplicate those entries, so as to have a continuous record of the bonds that may have been issued?

A. That is apparently true; yes, sir.

Q. This No. 1 loan, although named in the bond record—was it or was it not a bond, or was it a certificate of stock issued by the James River Company?

A. It was not a stock certificate as stock is generally understood today. It was a certificate of indebtedness.

Q. Of whom?

A. Why, of the James River Company to the State.

Q. Then the loan indicated as No. 1, $161,000, was evidenced by certificates issued by the James River Company?

A. The President and Directors of the Literary Fund.

Q. And that is all the bond register shows?

A. Yes, sir; and the face of the certificate itself shows that it was registered in 1823, although it had been issued some years previous.

Q. Do any of those certificates connected with the $161,000, import any obligation either on the part of the principal or the 685 interest on the part of the State of Virginia, so far as you have been able to ascertain?

A. Not on the original certificates amounting to $161,000, due. The first time any of that debt was assumed by the State was under the Act of March, 18th, 1840, when the State assumed an obligation of $40,000 of those bonds, but that is aside from the $65,000. The $65,000 had never been assumed by the State. It was still an obligation of the James River Company to the State on January 1, 1861, and it was so held in the Literary Fund until 1871.

Q. Do you find any entries on the books of Virginia showing any payments on account of that $161,000, either the $39,000 or the $65,000, either by way of principal or interest at any time, and if so when is the first entry, and what does it show?

A. They were funded from time to time. I will have to look that up, your Honor. I cannot say indirectly from memory.

Q. Was there any payment of interest?

In the Act of 1820, if I remember it right there is a stipulation that the State of Virginia shall guarantee the interest, not exceeding $12,000 a year, that is, any deficit of interest. That is it in substance, if I understand it.

A. In the Act, it makes the amount $12,000.

Q. That is a maximum?

A. Yes; but for that $12,000 the State was to receive from the James River Company more of these certificates of 686 indebtedness, so that it was a loan. It was a loan to the company, for which the State received a certificate.

Q. Did the State actually loan anything under those circumstances?

A. Yes; it did, certainly.

Q. When did it make the first loan?

A. That is the point I shall have to look up.

Q. That is what I want to find out? I want the entry.

Mr. Conrad: We can give it to you, sir, as Mr. Lightfoot is familiar with a series of acts beginning with the Act of February, 1817.

The Special Master: But I would like, when Mr. Dixey is able to get it, to have the information, either now or later. Then I want to see the original book myself and see just exactly what it shows. I want to see when that loan first became connected with the accounts of the State of Virginia with reference to disbursement, either for interest or principal.

Mr. Conrad: The Act of February, 1820, made the State liable for those certificates.

The Special Master: Of course we have the acts, but in addition to the acts I want the accounts of the State with that particular loan, so that I can see just exactly what the entries are.

Mr. Anderson: There is other evidence in that connection that we wish to offer.

The Special Master: Yes; this does not preclude you from anything. I simply want to get this information myself. 687
Have you anything by way of re-direct examination, Mr. McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir; I want to ask a question or two.

Mr. Anderson: By the Act of 1820 the James River Company was made the agent of the State.

The Special Master: Of course the acts of the legislature are open to us all, but I want to get, so far as I can, contemporaneous acts of the State in relation to the loan. I want to see just exactly what was done. Are you waiting for Mr. Dixey, Mr. McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Is he looking up something for you?

Mr. McClintic: He is looking up that item for your Honor.

The Special Master: You need not bother with that now.

The Witness: I can show it to you in a minute or two.

The Special Master: Let your assistant be looking for it. You may re-examine Mr. Dixcy, Mr. McClintic.

Redirect Examination.

By Mr McClintic: 688

Q. Have you seen a letter dated December 19, 1821, written by John Coalter of the Board of Public Works of Virginia, published in the Journal of the House of Delegates, 1821-1822?

A. I have seen that published copy.

Mr. McClintic: We desire to offer in evidence a letter of John Coalter, then President of the James River Company, dated December 19, 1821, and published in the journal of the House of Delegates for the Session of 1821-22, at page 31. I have not the letter here in full, but I have an extract from it. The journal, however, can be reached.

The Special Master: It will be admitted.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. In that letter it is said:

"It is understood to be admitted by money holders in other states that the funds pledged for the payment of the interest on this loan may be very ample, and their continuance, as well guaranteed by the faith of the State, as though the loan was on behalf of the State, and that the final redemption of the debt may be safely calculated upon; but while these things are not expressly guaranteed by the State, but merely susceptible of demonstration from the Acts of Assembly and other public documents, the loan, though a valuable one to those wishing to make permanent investments, is not so readily convertible in market, as to answer their view. It has, however, been pretty satisfactorily ascertained that a State stock, even at five per cent, would sell for more than 689 par which merely shows to those wishing to make permanent investments, that the stock now offered to the public at five and a half per cent. must be a most valuable stock."

Had you read that letter when you gave the opinion to Mr. Harrison a while ago that you regarded this—

A. I had read a copy.

The Special Master: Do you put in the full letter?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir. I have not the full letter here, however.

Mr. Anderson: What date is that?

Mr. McClintic: It is dated December 19, 1821.

The Special Master: Here is the entry found on page 29 of the book, to be put in as a part of the answer of Mr. Dixey. This applies in realtion to the first entry of the books of Virginia, No. 1 loan, $161,000.

The Witness: I produce a book, a book of original entry as I understand it, so far as these entries are concerned, at page 29, September 30, 1823, are found the following entries.

The following is a correct transcript from the page referred to:

By the Special Master:

Q. This is the first entry you find of any kind of the books of the Commonwealth in relation to the disbursement of the $161,000?

A. Yes, sir; the first original entry.

Q. Well, is there any other duplicate entry indicating an original entry in any other place of any disbursement of funds on account of the $161,000 item?

A. The transcripts in the front of the book seem to be copies of the original books of entry of the James River Company.

Q. Do the original books of entry of the James River Com- 692 pany prior to September 30, 1823, contain any record of any disbursements on the part of the State on account of this $161,000 item, so far as you know?

A. I may answer in this way. The Act of 1823 provided for the transcript of all these entries by the Second Auditor's office. It provides that all the receipts and all the disbursements of the James River Company shall be taken up on the books in the Second Auditor's office; they are matters of record merely, copies of transactions that have gone before, and I think the caption refers to the provisions of the Act.

Q. The caption reads as follows:

"Richmond, May 2nd 1823.

"On this day the books and papers of the James River Company were deposited with me by Robert Pollard, Esq., late clerk and treasurer to the said company, in conformity with the directions of an Act of the General Assembly passed the 24th day of February, 1823, entitled 'An act making more effectual provisions to carry into effect the Act entitled "an act to amend an act entitled an act for clearing and improving the navigation of the James River, and for uniting the eastern and western waters and for other purposes.'"

"JAMES BROWN, JR., Second Auditor."

My question is whether you find any entry on the books of the James River Company or the books of the Commonwealth of Virginia earlier than this one found on page 29, showing any disbursements either for principal or interest on account of this item, $161,000? 693

A. We have never found the books of the James River Company, and this is the first entry on the books of the Commonwealth.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Did you look in the Treasurer's office to see if you could find payments on account of the indebtedness prior to December 30, 1823?

A. I do not understand you?

Q. I ask you if you examined the records of the Treasurer to ascertain if you could whether payments had been made through that office on account of the James River Company Debt No. 1, prior to September 30, 1823?

A. Yes; we found no such payments.

Q. You did examine and you found no such payments?

A. We found no such payments.

Q. Does not the Act of 1823 expressly provide that payments of interest on that original loan should be made?

A. Oh, that is a different matter, payments of interest. I did not so understand you. Yes; the State had said that they would pay $12,000, and later $18,000. I think the $18,000 was in the Act of 1823. There have been payments by the Treasurer on account of that interest.

The Special Master: Do the books of the Commonwealth show payments of interest prior to September 30, 1823?

A. On account of that $12,000 pledged, yes.

The Special Master: Then you can produce those entries.

By Mr. McClintic: 694

Q. When did the books of the James River Company start, what was the beginning of them, kept for the Commonwealth?

A. May 2nd, 1823.

The Special Master: What will be the first thing we will take up this morning; shall it be the question as to the results reached by the accountants?

Mr. Anderson: We had best take up these schedules seriatim and submit them.

The Special Master: Very well. What have you to submit with reference to Plaintiff's Exhibit A-1, which relates to the first paragraph in the decree, in the line of a revised schedule, as 820 the result of the work of both accountants, if anything?

Mr. Anderson: Suppose Mr. Potter takes the stand.

The Special Master: Have you any schedule that has been agreed upon by the accountants on both sides? In the first place, has there been any change in attitude in reference to the date?

Mr. Harrison: Virginia starts from the same date that West Virginia starts from.

The Special Master: Enter upon the record that Virginia agrees with West Virginia upon the date when the accountants should begin, which date is—

Mr. Anderson: March 17, 1823.

The Special Master: March 17, 1823. Is that agreed to?

Mr. Dixey: March 19th, it should be.

The Special Master: I want to get into the record what we agree upon.

Mr. Carlisle: I still understand that the accountant on the other side includes in his statement that item of $65,000 which we say is shown to have been a debt before that date.

The Special Master: Let me make this statement. If these accounts begin on March 19, 1823, and that date is agreed upon by counsel on each side, the Master will not consider any item prior to that date. Now, then, with that statement from the Master, am I to understand that the counsel for Virginia and West 821
Virginia agree that that is the date when the accounts begin?

Mr. Carlisle: That is correct.

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That settles that. Now, let us have the next point. You are submitting, Brother Harrison, a schedule in lieu of Plaintiff's Exhibit A-1, which is under the first paragraph of the decree?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Am I to understand that this schedule, marked Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit A-1, is to take the place of Plaintiff's Original Exhibit A-1?

Mr. Harrison: Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit, I would say.

The Special Master: I want to get this on the record. I have now before me Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit A-1.

Mr. Anderson: It is a supplemental statement to the other, really, because it does not go into the details. Therefore, it is supplemental.

Mr. Harrison: It is a revised statement.

The Special Master: Let us see about that for a moment; I want to get this record as short as we can get it. After we get through with what we agree to, I am going to ask what I asked before, but which I suppose they could not do. What I want to get on the record is exactly what we agree to now. Excuse me, but these suggestions go for nothing if they interfere with the views of counsel on either side. There is no occasion for lumbering up this record with any details that are not necessarily involved in an intelligent conclusion on the part of the Master or on the part of the Court. It is conceivable that a large number of details must 822 have been prepared and have been prepared for counsel on both sides, but if you have a lot of records about which there is no controversy, my own view is that there can be an agreement upon figures and we can shorten the record very much. We can get our schedules down to something as concise as possible, and it will be the better for all concerned. So that if you now have a schedule that presents, so far as either of you is concerned, under Paragraph 1 all of the figures you desire to have presented, eliminating details and containing summaries which adequately present the rights of either party, it seems to me the concise schedule you both agree upon is the thing that we ought to have.

Mr. Harrison: Let me state this, subject to correction by Mr. Dixcy or Mr. Potter. The supplemental schedule referred to shows that the total amount of the debt outstanding in the hands of individuals, or, in other words, in the hands of the public, on 1st of January, 1861, was $32,919,863.93; and as to that figure I understand the two accountants are in accord.

The Special Master: You are in accord on that, Mr. Dixcy?

Mr. Dixcy: Yes, sir.

Mr. Carlisle: Of course we do not agree, as I understand it, that there are not items in there which do not belong to the public debt. For instance, the bonds held in the Literary Fund. The figures, however, are correct.

Mr. Harrison: They are not in there.

The Special Master: You will have to be governed very 823 largely by the suggestion of Mr. Dixcy, who is unquestionably familiar with the details. Of course I will not hold you to anything that may be agreed to if you inadvertently make a concession which would turn out to be adverse to your interests. In such a case, I would expect to relieve you from an admission so made; but what we want now is to get down on the record the items upon which we agree, so as to eliminate all possible controversy.

Mr. Harrison: In this Exhibit, Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit A-1, I think the figures given for the total public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, December 31, 1860, are agreed upon, as follows: $32,919,863.93.

The Special Master: The item thus stated by Mr. Harrison on the part of Virginia we understand to be agreed to by counsel for West Virginia and by the expert on the part of West Virginia?

Mr. Dixey: That is correct.

The Special Master: That item, then, will be reported by the Master as agreed to by the parties.

Mr. Harrison: Now, the point of this agreement relates to three subjects. Virginia shows in her schedule, in addition to the figures agreed to, $1,150,067.33, as held by the Literary Fund; also $1,329,557.20 held by the Sinking Fund; and $146,500.00 held by Board of Public Works; which three items added to the agreed amount of the debt outstanding in the hands of the public, make a total of $35,545,988.46, which Virginia rests upon as constituting the entire public debt on the date mentioned, December 31, 1860.

The Special Master: I want to make this inquiry. Refer- 824
ing to these figures, held by the Literary Fund, $1,150,067.33; held by the Sinking Fund, $1,329,557.20, and held by Board of Public Works, $146,500.00; do Mr. Dixey and counsel for West Virginia concede the figures are correct?

Mr. McClintic: The first item in the Literary Fund, as I understand it, contains the $65,000 which has been referred to.

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

Mr. McClintic: We do not concede that.

The Special Master: Then I will put it this way: Virginia claims that in addition to the $32,919,863.93 there should be added to the public debt the following items: Held by the Literary Fund, $1,150,067.33. As to this item, West Virginia disagrees, first upon the ground that it is not a proper part of the public debt; and, second, upon the ground that the aggregate is too large in any event. So that as to that item there is no agreement, the only disagreement being an item of $65,000 involved in the Literary Fund and claimed by West Virginia to have been contracted prior to the date of the beginning of the debt, and that it has never been a part of the State debt at any time. As to the item of "Held by the Sinking Fund, $1,329,557.20," West Virginia agrees to the accuracy of the amount stated and disagrees upon the question as to whether it is properly included in the public debt. Am I correct in that?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: So that as to the amount both parties agree; as to classification, they disagree. The next item, "Held by Board of Public Works, $146,500.00." 825

Mr. McClintic: That is all right.

The Special Master: As to the amount of $146,500, Virginia and West Virginia both agree; West Virginia contends that it ought not to be included in the public debt. Now, I would like to inquire whether there are any of the computations submitted in the schedules on the part of Virginia and West Virginia under paragraph 1 of the decree that are essential or illuminating upon the question of settling the first controversy as to the $65,000 in the Literary Fund.

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; we have the history of that $65,000 which was offered here before, certificates—

The Special Master: Those figures can be very easily segregated from both of the schedules, I suppose. So we can eliminate them from the other figures. Is there any difficulty about that, Mr. Dixey?

Mr. Dixey: No, sir.

The Special Master: Is there any difficulty about that, Mr. Potter?

Mr. Potter: No, sir.

The Special Master: Are there any items in Paragraph 1 that are essential and material in determining the question as to whether the amount claimed by Virginia, $1,329,557.20, should or should not be included in the public debt? That is, are there any items or details in that account, or is that simply a question of the construction of some legal provision?

Mr. Anderson: That is on the construction of a statute.

The Special Master: It does not involve any details, so 826 long as you agree on the amount. Are there any details contained in the figures given in either schedule that tend to establish or controvert that proposition?

Mr. Harrison: Not at all.

The Special Master: If so, we do not need the schedules for that purpose.

Mr. Anderson: The only question is upon that $65,000, and that is a question of the construction of the statute.

The Special Master: Are there any details in any of the schedules submitted by either party which are material as bearing upon the question as to whether or not the $145,500.00 held by the Board of Public Works is or is not a part of the public debt, so long as you agree upon the amount—

Mr. Anderson: That turns entirely upon the statute, I think.

Mr. Harrison: A question of construction.

Mr. Carlisle: As to all the bonds in the Sinking Fund—

Mr. Anderson: As to all the bonds in the Sinking Fund except $65,000.

The Special Master: That is a question of law.

Mr. Carlisle: It is a question of law as to whether Virginia can owe herself this money.

The Special Master: I do not want anything superfluous in this record. I want you to have everything in that either of you think has any tendency to establish the contention of either, but, outside of that, it seems to me we have no occasion to lumber the record with anything that is unnecessary. 827

Mr. Carlisle: There is nothing, I think—

The Special Master: Why, then, are there any items in the accounts of either of the schedules presented on the part of Virginia and West Virginia that need to be considered in connection with the public debt except the subject which I am going to call attention to in a moment—the manner in which it was constructed? There are none, are there?

Mr. Harrison: I do not think so.

Mr. Anderson: There is one matter there, contingent liability, we thought should be mentioned.

The Special Master: I do not see it.

Mr. Anderson: It is a supplemental exhibit to Exhibit A-1.

The Special Master: Is that an additional item that you claim is a part of the public debt?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir; an additional item.

The Special Master: I am discussing this particular schedule.

Mr. Anderson: I understand.

The Special Master: As to this schedule I now have before me (Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit A-1), as to this exhibit, there is nothing in the accounts that needs to be considered.

Mr. Anderson: No.

The Special Master: Now, the next question I want to inquire about is whether you agree in the statement of how and in what form the debt was evidenced and by what authority of law, and for what purposes the same was created, and the dates and nature 828 of the bonds or other evidence of said indebtedness. Now, do the accountants agree, having agreed upon the amount?

Mr. Dixey: I know of no differences between us there.

Mr. Carlisle: So far as this is an indebtedness. That question is behind it all.

The Special Master: I understand that. There is nothing conceded as to clasification. It is simply getting results.

Mr. Carlisle: That is all.

Mr. Dixey: We quote the names of the acts, the companies for which the bonds were issued, and Mr. Potter has done the same thing.

The Special Master: Do you agree on that?

Mr. Potter: Yes.

The Special Master: Then I will ask you to have one schedule on that matter. Give us a joint schedule. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Carlisle: We do not want these stricken from the record, but they will not have to be printed.

The Special Master: When we get the case all in, I want to have printed for the convenience of counsel and myself in the argument just exactly what we all think ought to be submitted finally to the Supreme Court of the United States. I want to make that record just as short and just as concise as I can. The shorter we get it, and the more concise it is, the more it will relieve counsel of argument, the more it will relieve me in coming to my conclusions, and the more it will relieve the Supreme Court of the United States. Such a record will be infinitely more satisfactory to 829 the Supreme Court. I am going to make the record, if I can, upon which you argue before the same record that I submit to the Supreme Court. For that reason, where you both agree on a statement of facts, it seems to me it is best to have one schedule rather than two schedules. Still, you need not withdraw anything already submitted. But when we come to print, it seems to me there is no necessity for submitting two schedules which involve the same figures and details. As I said before, when we get around to fixing this record up for printing, I shall request Virginia and West Virginia to select some gentlemen, in whom each have confidence, to take this record and go over it and cut out everything that has not any bearing nor any material weight in connection with the issues. Then the transcript record we have here will be as short as possible. After you have agreed on a great many of these items, there is a great deal of discussion it seems to me that can go out. Of course anything that you want in will go in. Do you get my point, Brother Carlisle?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: For that reason, I see no reason why there should not be one joint schedule covering the question as to how and in what form the debt was evidenced, by what authority of law and for what purposes the same was created, and the dates and nature of the bonds or other evidence of said indebtedness; and if the accountants are not able to submit to me now, so I can have the record show that both parties agree upon the schedules selected, I will leave that. Are you ready now with that, Mr. Dixey?

Mr. Dixey: We have not got a schedule that we can both 830 sign now.

The Special Master: You know what I want?

Mr. Dixey: We have not got it in full. We have all the facts here.

The Special Master: That is only a question of type-writing, then, practically?

Mr. Harrison: It will be necessary to do more than agree on the fact that they are in accord—

The Special Master: Of course it is a matter of quite a good deal of importance to both parties, and as far as I am concerned I do not want anything here that may turn out to be an inadvertence or a misunderstanding; but what I want to do is that when I report an agreement by the parties here, of course I shall report it as a fact; but I do not want to report any agreement between you people, on these important questions, unless I have upon my record the facts showing just what the agreement was. For that reason, it would be much more satisfactory to me to have one schedule. I do not want to print both these schedules; there is no occasion for that. I do not want to print Virginia's schedule and leave out West Virginia's schedule, and I do not want to print West Virginia's schedule and leave out Virginia's schedule. Now, if you both agree on a schedule like that, I want to put that in the record to show that you both agree on it. Do you follow me, Brother Conrad?

Mr. Conrad: If your Honor please, I do not see how it is practicable to produce a composite schedule from these two discordant ones that are before you now. If they differed only in 831 items, it possibly might be practicable; but they do not differ in items. They differ not so much in items as in the plan of classification. The plan of classification adopted by Mr. Potter, for illustration, is that that has been pursued by the State government of Virginia from the beginning. The plan adopted by Mr. Dixcy disapproves of the methods adopted by the State government, is a departure from it.

The Special Master: May I inquire this, Brother Conrad: Do these suggestions that you are now making relate to the question of how and in what form the debt was evidenced?

Mr. Conrad: No, no—

The Special Master: I understand that your experts both agree upon this question (reading from the decree):

"How and in what form the same was evidenced, by what authority of law, and for what purposes the same was created, and the dates and nature of the bonds or other evidence of said indebtedness."

Mr. Conrad: I do not think there is any disagreement about that.

The Special Master: That is the only one I am making any suggestion about. We will make more progress if we go step by step. My suggestion is this: We will not encumber this record with Mr. Dixcy's statement and Mr. Potter's statement, both of which are the same thing: we will put into the record one schedule as to that part of the answer to Paragraph 1, and that schedule will be signed by Mr. Dixey and by Mr. Potter, and if the parties agree, we will show on the record that the parties do agree on those 832 facts. That eliminates them from controversy. Now, then, Brother Conrad, as to other features of the controversy, I do not expect Virginia or West Virginia to agree to anything that in any way tends to embarrass the rights of either. I thought I would take this up paragraph by paragraph, and when you reach a place where there is any suggestion of agreement that tends to embarrass the rights of your client, or the other side the same thing, of course as to that there is a disagreement, and as to that I will hear you. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. Conrad: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: So I will put into the record that the schedule submitted with reference to this part of Paragraph 1 that I have been calling attention to, and signed by both accountants, is agreed to by Virginia and West Virginia. Now, except as we have to recur to this Literary Fund, that disposes of Paragraph 1.

Mr. Potter: May I ask a question?

The Special Master: Certainly.

Mr. Potter: Need this joint schedule be in detail or simply as to this total?

The Special Master: Certainly it must be in detail, because here is what the paragraph requires (reading from decree):

"The amount of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia on the 1st day of January, 1861, stating specifically how and in what form the same was evidenced, by what authority of law and for what purposes the same was created, and the dates and nature of the bonds or other evidence of said indebtedness." 833

It is impossible to answer that question without the details. As to that, we want the details signed by both of you, and when it comes to me thus signed I shall report that the parties agree upon that part of the Paragraph 1. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir.

Mr. Carlisle: No, sir.

Mr. Anderson: This is supplemental, this is a supplemental statement of Paragraph 1. We think it should be noted in the record.

The Special Master: Let me make this suggestion. Suppose we do this. See how this appeals to you, Brother Anderson. What I am inclined to think I would like to do now is to go through the accounts where you all agree and eliminate those as subjects of controversy. Then we will go back and take up Paragraph 1, so far as you have additional matters to suggest, and so on all the way through. Of course, when we come to print this case, we can take the testimony that relates to each paragraph and see that it is gathered together, so we will not have to be hunting all over the record to get what we want. It will be some work, of course, to do that, but when we get it done we will have a record that will be worth something.

Mr. Anderson: Your Honor proposes to go over all the schedules?

The Special Master: Yes. Let me get your suggestion.

Mr. Anderson: This can be disposed of in a moment, sir. By the Act of March 8, 1847, the State of Virginia guaranteed the payment of the interest and principal upon $300,000 of bonds 834 of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company. The State guaranteed the payment of the interest without any qualifications. The guarantee of the interest was that the interest should be punctually paid, and the guarantee as to the principal was that it should be ultimately paid. The Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company is still an existing corporation. It has not been found to be ultimately insolvent, so far as we can ascertain. So it cannot be determined now whether this liability will ever have to be met by the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The Special Master: In other words, this is a contingent liability?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Your claim is that it should be included in the public debt?

Mr. Anderson: As an indeterminate and contingent liability?

The Special Master: Now this will be marked Plaintiff's Supplemental Exhibit A-1.

(The paper referred to was filed with the stenographer and marked "Plaintiff's Supplemental Exhibit A-1, the previous paper submitted being marked "Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit A-1.)

The Special Master: Has this been submitted to the other side for criticism as to amounts?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Then I would like to inquire whether the amounts stated in the computation—and this without reference to the propriety or impropriety of their charge—are cor- 835 rectly stated as to amounts.

Mr. Dixey: I think so, yes.

The Special Master: So that, so far as the computations are concerned, in Plaintiff's Supplemental Exhibit A-1, both parties agree that they are correctly stated? They disagree as to whether or not they should be included in the public debt, but they agree that they are correctly stated?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.
Mr. Dixey: I think so.

[Vol. 7, July 1, 1909.]

The Special Master: To see whether we can make any more progress now, without wating for the reports from the experts, I will inquire whether either party has any evidence it wants to submit on this item of $65,000? 868

Mr. Carlisle: I think, so far as I know, there is no oral evidence that has been offered about it.

Special Master: Is that your understanding, Brother Anderson?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir, no new evidence. We rely on the statute entirely.

The Special Master: As to the item at $65,000 in the Literary Fund, that is it, is it? 869

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir—

The Special Master (continuing): Neither party has any additional evidence to submit, both conceding that the rights of the parties are to be determined by the proper legal construction of the statutes involved. Is that right?

Mr. Carlisle: There are several statutes. Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: Now, will you get back before you leave the schedules, to Supplemental Schedule A-1?

[Vol. 7, July 1, 1909.] 873

The Special Master: In order to get along as far as possible, suppose we take up the paragraphs in their order. Now, as to Paragraph 1, does either side desire to submit anything in addition to the evidence already in, relating to the three items mentioned in the schedule, relating to "Held by the Literary Fund, $1,150,067.33;" "held by the Sinking Fund, $1,329,557.20;" and "held by Board of Public Works, $146,500?" Does either side desire to submit any evidence bearing upon those three propositions under that paragraph, or have you everything in that you want to put in on that?

Mr. Anderson: Virginia does not desire to submit anything.

The Special Master: How about West Virginia?

Mr. Conley: West Virginia does not desire to submit anything.

Mr. Anderson: Except, of course, it is understood that counsel will file a schedule reciting the different acts.

Mr. Carlisle: The acts under which the Literary Fund and the other fund held these bonds?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir. 874

The Special Master: Then it is understood that so far as the plaintiff Substitute Schedule A-1 is concerned, the case is closed. Is that agreed to?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Now, we have here Plaintiff's Supplemental Exhibit A-1, headed "Public debt of Virginia; undetermined contingent liability." Does either side desire to submit any evidence in relation to that schedule?

Mr. Harrison: We do not.

Mr. Anderson: Except Mr. Potter is prepared to testify as to the accuracy of the figures.

The Special Master: That is agreed to. The accuracy of the figures is agreed to. Has West Virginia anything to submit as to schedule?

Mr. Carlisle: No, sir.

The Special Master: Then, as to Plaintiff's Supplemental Exhibit A-1, the case is closed.

[See reference to Area contained in testimony of A. G. Potter under Paragraph 7, page —— of this volume, indented pages 80 and 81.]

[Vol. 2, February 15, 1909. in Relation to Area.]

The Special Master: Does any one else desire to be heard on the part of Virginia?

Mr. Anderson: If your Honor please, I can not, perhaps, add anything to the contention that has been made on the part of Virginia in opposition to the application for a continuance. That has already been exhaustively made by my associates. I wish, however, to refer to two matters, which will only occupy a few minutes. One is the statement of Senator Spooner, upon which he based one of his arguments for a continuance, as to any possible objection in this case about the territorial area of the Commonwealth of Virginia and of the State of West Virginia. A report was filed here with reference to the area, which I had not had an opportunity to examine, and which it was finally admitted at the former hearing was a fictitious area. I stated then that we did not rely upon it, and that there would be no controversy upon that question.

I wish now, in furtherance of the suggestion then made, to say to my friend, that Virginia is willing to accept the area furnished by the Department of the United States Government, either the Geological Survey or the Census Bureau.

The Special Master: The Geological Survey would be the 170 natural survey.

Mr. Anderson: The Geological Survey gives, as the area of Virginia, 40,262 square miles, and West Virginia, 24,022 square miles of land, and it is the land only that is assessed.

Mr. Carlisle: That gives both the water and the land?

Mr. Anderson: The water and land, both.

Mr. Carlisle: We think the water and land surface both ought to be included because the water surface is very valuable. Hampton Roads, the big James River and the other navigable streams are very valuable to the State.

The Special Master: You say these figures do include both water and land?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; so much land and so much water. We want them both.

Mr. Conrad: It says, "the assessed value."

Mr. Anderson: The direction of the decree was that the assessed value should be ascertained, and the area of the territory. I take it it is immaterial whether the area is 40,000 square miles or 42,000 square miles, because I take it there will never be any ascertainment of this debt on the basis of area. It will be on the basis of values.

The Special Master: It is not immaterial to me, because that is one of the things I have got to find—the extent. Let us see right here if we are ready to agree. If you have the figures of both water and land—

Mr. Anderson: We have them both here. 171

The Special Master: If you have them both here and you agree on this public document as being the accurate result, why can we not put right into the record that it is now agreed between both parties that the area is as follows; then give the land area and the water area of Virginia and the same of West Virginia? Those facts then would be eliminated from controversy. That is the extent, and what may be predicated upon land and water, or upon land or water, is a matter to be determined hereafter; but we can get that fact out of the way if you both agree to it.

Mr. Carlisle: Their accountant has stated what he said was the area for a purpose, of course.

The Special Master: If the extent, which of course means area, can go into the record as agreed upon, that eliminates that fact from controversy.

Mr. Anderson: We are willing to agree that the area given at page 8 of Bulletin No. 302, Series F Geography, 53, United States Geological Survey of 1906, is an accurate statement of the area of the two States.

The Special Master: Will you pass that to me?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir. Now, we do not concede the water area has anything to do with this question.

Mr. Carlisle: There is no concession about it. You simply state the facts. There is no concession as to what the effect will be.

The Special Master: As long as we are here upon this, I will get this out of the way, Mr. Attorney General. Let me see if I state this so that both parties understand it.

It is agreed, under item 2 of the order, that the extent of Virginia is, land surface, 40,262 square miles; water surface, 2,365 square miles; total area, 42,627 square miles.

Of West Virginia, land surface, 24,022 square miles; water surface, 148 square miles; total area 24,170 square miles. Those are the figures shown by this official report. Are those figures agreed to as being the extent?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, sir. 172

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That eliminates the matter of extent from controversy.

Mr. Anderson: We do not agree, on behalf of Virginia, that the water area should be taken into account.

The Special Master: The facts are stated. You will get the benefit of your legal proposition, whatever it may be. Of course that enables me to state very concretely what the facts are. Then what construction may be placed upon those facts is a matter for argument later.

[Vol. 4. May 5th, 1909.] 2751/2

[Cross Examination of Arthur G. Potter on Plaintiff's Exhibit B-1.]

[By Mr. Carlisle]:

The next clause of the decree is to ascertain the extent and assessed valuation of the territory of Virginia and West Virginia June 30, 1863, and the population thereof, with and without slaves, separately.

Mr. McClintic: In Exhibit B-1, responsive to item 2 of the decreee, you set out the area of Virginia as 48,951 square miles and the area of West Virginia as 45,537 square miles. Do you wish to let that stand as such or do you wish to correct it?

Mr. Harrison: It has already been corrected.

The Witness: I understood that the matter had been adjusted at the previous hearing.

The Special Master: All that relating to that subject matter would practically amount to nothing now because there is an agreement; although of course it is a proper subject for cross examination. There was a stipulation at the last hearing. Of course it is still open, if you desire to pursue it on cross examination.

Mr. McClintic: I just wanted to ask one question to straighten it out.

The Special Master: Unless there is some real occasion for 276 it, I would not spend any time on it.

Value and population are other elements involved in paragraph 2, population with and without slaves.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. You have given the population of these two States, that is the population of what now constitutes Virginia and the population of what now constitutes West Virginia in 1860. Did you get it from the Census.

A. From the volume of the 9th Census of the United States, pages 68 to 72.

Q. And then you add 2.47 for an increase from 1860 to 1863?

A. Not 2.47 per cent, 2.47. In other words, 171 days.

The Special Master: Based on the preceding decade?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. The Census day, under the law was June 1st of each ten years. Did you take that as the date from which you made your calculation of the increase?

A. I stated January 1st, 1861, to June 20th, 1863.

Q. You got the enumeration of the slaves and the enumeration of free persons of color in the same way, did you from the Census?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You took the Census of 1860 and then you made an ad- 277 dition to it to ascertain the population in June, 1863?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What method did you adopt to ascertain that fact?

The Special Master: That is, how did you get at your proportion?

A. I took the increase between 1860 and 1870 and applied the ratio to the population of the two States.

By Mr. Carlisle:

. You went back to the previous decennial period and got the average increase?

A. I got the average yearly increase.

Q. The average annual increase?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you took the item that you did take here and applied that to it?

A. Yes.

The Special Master: What did you find the percentage of increase to be for the preceding decade?

The Witness: I had not figured on percentage. I have 20,000 whites, for instance, the increase in Virginia; and one-tenth of that would be 2,000. That is the way in which I arrived at the annual increase.

The Special Master: You did not take the percentage of increase for the decade, you took the concrete figures?

The Witness: I took the concrete figures.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. The decree says you shall ascertain this population with and without slaves. When you undertook to exclude slaves 278 have you not omitted all free persons of color in the State of Virginia?

(Consultation between Mr. Carlisle and his associates followed)

By. Mr. Carlisle:

Q. I will ask you this question. You find that there were in 1870, which was after this period, 512,841 free persons of color in Virginia—

Mr. Conrad: Free persons of color?

Mr. Carlisle: Colored persons. Of course they were free in 1870. They were put down separately in 1860 as free persons of color.

Q. (Continuing) Did you not assume then, when you wanted to ascertain your final result, that there would have been, if slavery had not been abolished, 512,841 slaves in the State; is not that what you assumed?

A. I have not got your question straight.

Mr. Harrison: That is on page 11?

Mr. Carlisle: It is marked page 10 here.

Mr. Anderson: Page 11 of Exhibit B-1.

Mr. Robinson: The first two pages will explain how we got at that. You mean at the bottom of page one?

Mr. Carlisle: I will ask the stenographer to read the question.

The stenographer read as follows:

"Q. You find that there were in 1870, which was after this period, 512,841 free persons of color in Virginia. They were of course free in 1870. They were put down separately in 1860, as free persons of color. Did you not assume then, when you wanted to 279 ascertain your final result, that there would have been, if slavery had not been abolished, 512,841 slaves in the State. Is not that what you assumed?"

A. I understand that they were put down as free persons of color in 1870.

By. Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you find that in the Census?

A. Virginia's total negro population in 1870 was 512,840.

Q. I did not ask you whether they were put down as slaves in 1860. That was simply my statement. What I want to get at is, how did you get at these figures as representing the free colored people in Virginia in 1870—512,841?

The Special Master: That is, how did he reach that result; where did he get that item?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes.

A. I took it from the Census, the 9th Census of the United States.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. That is, the Census of 1870?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, then, did you not assume that a certain number of them were slaves in 1860 or 1863? You were to give that with slaves and without slaves. I want to know how you got it?

The Special Master: How did you fix the number of slaves in 1863; just give the method of computation. 280

Mr. Carlisle: That is what I want.

The Special Master: He wants to know how you arrive at your result as to the slaves in 1863, on June 20th. Begin at the foundation and give us your computation. Give us the figures.

The Witness: The number of slaves in 1863?

The Special Master: How did you ascertain the number of slaves June 21, 1863. Give us the method you employed by which you reached the result in your statement?

The Witness: I first established the percentage of slaves and free negroes in 1860 in Virginia and West Virginia. Then I determined the free negro population in 1870.

The Special Master: What figures did you have to start with? You first ascertained the number of slaves in Virginia and West Virginia in 1860. What are those figures? That is what you want, is it not, Brother Carlisle?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; the detailed steps.

The Special Master: Give us your figures, the detailed computation and the results.

The Witness: Virginia, 1860—472,494 slaves; 55,269 free negroes. West Virginia, 1860: 18,371 slaves; 2,773 free negroes. With that as a basis, I worked out the percentage shown on the schedule, which was 89.53 per cent. of slaves for Virginia and 10.47 per cent. free negroes.

West Virginia, 86.89 per cent. slaves; 13.11 per cent. free negroes.

By the Special Master: 281

Q. That gave you the proportion of free and slaves, the preportion they bore to each other at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your next step?

A. I took the free negroe population of the two States in 1870, which was 512,841 in Virginia and 17,980 in West Virginia.

Q. Please state that again?

A. Virginia's negro population in 1870 was 512,841, of which 10.47 per cent., or 52,694, would be free negroes if slavery had existed at that time. On the same basis there would have been 2,357 free negroes in West Virginia in 1870, if slavery had existed. I took the total white population, which in 1870 was 712,322, and added to that the percentage of free negroes, determined by the method just mentioned, namely, 53,694, making a total of 766,016 total free population of Virginia. The total white population of West Virginia in 1870 was 424,034, to which I added the number of free negroes, determined by the method just described, 2,357, making a total of 426,391, as the probable total population in 1870. Comparing these two figures, I get the ten years increase at 18,880 in Virginia; and the increase in West Virginia, 68,074; to which I add 2.47.

Q. To what—to the population in 1860?

A. The population of 1860, to determine the population in 1863; making a total of 751,799 in Virginia, and 375,131 in West Virginia.

By Mr. Carlisle: 282

Q. Is that all?

A. That is assuming that the United States Census was made as of December 31, 1860, at the end of the year, taking in the year.

Q. If the United States Census was taken on the 1st of June, as of the 1st of June, 1860, you omitted, when you made the calculation, seven months and ten days, did you not?

A. If it was so taken.

Q. Would not that make a very great difference in the percentage?

A. It would make a very slight difference.

Q. A very slight difference? Would not one per cent. of 400,000 be much more than on 24,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when it came to make the percentage, would it not make quite a difference, the difference in percentage on a large amount and the percentage on a small amount?

A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Then, if you had taken the Census as of June 1st, 1861, the population in the State of Virginia would have been much larger than you have shown it, would it not—because you would have to add an increase for a longer time?

A. I don't understand your question.

Q. In other words, have you not omitted from the time during which you have calculated the increase, seven months and some days?

A. If the Census was taken June 1st, I have omitted seven months, yes. 283

Q. If you had added the increase of Virginia's slave population for the seven months, that would have made it considerably larger, would it not?

A. Not necessarily. I cannot tell without figuring out. But West Virginia's proportion might have increased in the same ratio and would not have changed the result.

Mr. Conrad: Did not West Virginia's population increase in a far greater ratio?

Mr. Carlisle: I am examining the witness about it.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. If nine years had expired after the Census of 1860, would not the result have been very different if only one year had expired?

A. It would.

Q. The same thing applies, in less degree, does it not to seven months?

The Special Master: On how long a period of time is your percentage of 2.7 predicated?

Mr. Carlisle: The first of January, 1861, to the 20th of June, 1863.

The Witness: Yes.

The Special Master: That is two years—

The Witness: And 171 days.

The Special Master: And if there ought to have been seven months more added, you would have had that much longer time, and the results in which case would have been increased by the amount of the increased percentage.

The Witness: It would have been three years instead what of it was. 284

Mr. Carlisle: It would have been three years and twenty-three days.

Mr. Conrad: But the ratio the same.

Mr. Carlisle: But the interest on one dollar is not as much as the interest on $100 for the same length of time.

The Special Master: That is obvious.

Now, it is understood that the Census was actually taken in June, 1860?

Mr. Carlisle: That is the law.

Mr. Anderson: That is the theory.

The Special Master: Well, as far as we know, then, the United States Census is predicated, as to the population in existence, on the first of June?

Mr. Anderson: Although as a matter of fact the count is made after that.

The Special Master: But the work is supposed to have been done as of that date. Is that the understanding?

Mr. Robinson: Of course our schedule shows, too, that West Virginia was increasing very much more rapidly than Virginia.

The Special Master: That does not affect this proposition at all. What we want to know now is whether we have a common starting point. Is it agreed that the census was taken as of the first of June, 1860?

Mr. Carlisle: All the statistics of the Census.

The Special Master: But what I want to know is whether both sides agree to that.

Mr. Carlisle: That is what the Act says.

Mr. Conrad: But the Act says a great many things not in 285 accordance with the fact.

The Special Master: Then, if you do not agree we understand where we are. If you did agree all the accountant would have to do would be to rearrange his figures; but in the absence of agreeing, the defendants may proceed upon their theory and later I will hear the plaintiffs on their theory.

Mr. Carlisle: If you want a reference to the Act, I will give it to you.

Mr. Conrad: No. The reports furnished us agree substantially with ours.

The Special Master: As we go along, where the difference is so small that Virginia does not think it worth while to contest, I will have the record show that, and we will thereby make progress. When we reach that stage I will see to it that the record shows an agreement upon such items as may be involved in that suggestion.

Mr. Anderson: You would probably not care to press this further if you knew the result?

Mr. Carlisle: I do not know the exact result, but it would make some difference.

Mr. Anderson: Have you made an estimate as to what the result would be, what difference between our percentage and yours if this change was made?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Carlisle: The only significance of this inquiry is that one of the alternative methods of ascertaining West Virginia's just proportion of the ordinary expenses of government is based 286 on the population, and the other is based on the assessed value of property. Now, West Virginia is charged with a certain percentage, and a difference between the population, in the other method, and it might be important—

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Potter has looked into that and he has made a calculation as to what the difference would be in the two methods, and I think it would save time to ask him about it. We really do not care which you adopt.

The Special Master: If you do not care which is adopted, can we not have that stated in the record, and that will eliminate this controversy?

Mr. Carlisle: No; we could not; because we do not know just now the exact method he adopted.

The Special Master: We will not be able to make any progress in that direction just now, then. If they have no objection, the Attorney General wants to ask a witness what the result would be upon the theory that you suggest?

Mr. Carlisle: We have no objection.

The Special Master: Otherwise of course you could complete your cross examination and he could take up the matter upon redirect. You may ask that question, Mr. Attorney General.

Mr. Spooner: I would like to have the theory stated first.

Mr. Anderson: The theory has been stated by Mr. Carlisle.

The Special Master: Assuming that the computation of 287 population was to go back to June 1st, 1860, instead of December 1st, 1860, it is upon that hypothesis that Mr. Anderson wants the witness to state how it would affect the result.

Mr. Carlisle: That is purely a method of calculation.

The Special Master: That may be true; but he desires to ask him that question, and unless there is objection he may ask him.

Mr. Carlisle: I don't care; let him guess at it. That is all he can do.

Mr. Anderson: I want it to show that my friend is wasting some very heavy artillery on some very small sparrows.

The Witness: I have made a calculation on the basis of West Virginia figures. We assume she started that day. The difference in the population, taking slaves, is .1745 of one per cent., or, practically 17-100ths of one per cent. And the case of Virginia is the same.

Mr. Carlisle: That could not be so, applying the same method to a smaller number, when you compare the two things. When you compare the difference in the percentage, you have put down the percentage shown on your theory now.

The Witness: The difference between your per cent. and our per cent, shown by the schedules is as I have stated, a little over 17-100ths of one per cent.; and figuring it without slaves there is a difference of a little over .23 of one per cent.

Mr. Carlisle: We are not excluding slaves at all in the question put to you: we are including them.

[Vol. 5, May 6, 1909.]

[Direct Examination of Thomas B. Dixcy on Defendant's Exhibit B-1.]

[The Special Master:] 510

As I understand, defendant's exhibit B-1 is now produced.

Mr. McClintic: Please look at this and see if you identify it.

The Witness: I do identify it as having been made and signed me.

(The paper referred to was marked by the stenographer Defendant's Exhibit B-1.)

Mr. McClintic: West Virginia offers Defendant's Exhibit B-1 as evidence.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Please state, Mr. Dixcy, if you made this, or if it was made under your direction (referring to Defendant's Exhibit B-1.)

A. It was made in part by me, yes, and under my direction. That is the original figures. The report itself was made by 511 me.

Q. Please state to the court what it contains, in a general way.

A. It contains four schedules, four statements, the first showing the area of Virginia and West Virginia separately, second, showing the assessed valuation of the real property in Virginia; third, showing the assessed valuation of the real property in West Virginia; fourth, the population of Virginia and West Virginia, with and without slaves separately, computed as of June 1st, 1863; and the average of such population by decades from 1820 to 1860, both dates inclusive.

Q. Are those amounts stated in there under those four schedules correct?

A. They are correct, sir, from the sources of information as noted.

Q. I find on page 6, included certain items as to the censuses of 1820, 1830, 1840, 1850, and 1860. Are those correct, from the sources from which you obtained them?

A. They are.

Q. What sources?

A. They were furnished by S. N. D. North, the Director of the United States Census Bureau, in a letter over his signature.

Q. Does that letter accompany this exhibit?

A. The letter including that schedule, no.

Q. Please explain how you arrived at the other census figures on that page?

A. The table to the top of the page, headed "With Slaves and Without Slaves" were furnished by the United States Census Bureau, so far as relates to the first and third columns. The 512 fourth column and the percentages were computed by me using the basis of computation used by the Census Bureau of the United States in their computation of June 1st, 1863.

Q. You took the date June 1st, 1860, and computed the additional amount from that date?

A. From that date.

Q. Why did you take the date, June 1st, 1860?

A. Because it is the date given in the laws of the United States for the taking of the United States Census.

Q. The valuation of the real estate of Virginia was taken from what sources?

A. As to Alexandria, from the Auditor's report for 1860, and thereafter from the sources noted at the head of each group of county names; the following group from the report of 1861, and then from the land books of 1861, 1862, and 1863, the Virginia counties being taken, almost altogether or very largely, from the land books of 1863.

Q. In those counties which were not taken from the land books of 1863, did you take them from the best and nearest sources available?

A. The nearest source available to that date.

By the Special Master:

Q. What are these land books?

A. They are assessment rolls.

Q. Where did you find them?

A. Down here in the basement of the State Library Building.

Q. For all the counties of Virginia?

A. No; some of them were missing, but most of them were 513 here.

Q. Is that the rule, that all the assessments made throughout the State are made here?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

Mr. Conrad: Three copies are made. One is sent here.

The Special Master: And this was the duplicate sent here that you had access to?

The Witness: Yes, sir. The series is not unbroken, but approximately so.

The Special Master: And when you did not get the exact date, you got the nearest approximation you could?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Please state what facts bear on the assessment of West Virginia as to the best source of information?

A. They were the same as those in regard to the other counties of Virginia.

[Vol. 6. May 7, 1909.]

[Cross-Examination of Thomas B. Dixcy on Defendant's Exhibit B-1.]

612

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now, I will pass to another subject. In the second item of the second paragraph of the decree, the inquiry was directed to the extent and assessed valuation of the territory of Virginia and West Virginia on June 20, 1863. That is part of the inquiry embraced in the second paragraph, the extent of assessed valuation of the territory. Is there any difference between your statement and Mr. Potter's statment as to the extent of the territory of the two Virginias?

Mr. McClintic: That was agreed on once.

Mr. Harrison: I understand that, but I want to get it in the record.

A. A very material difference.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. There is, you say, a very material difference?

A. As to the extent of the territory, as we show it and as you show it; yes, there is a very material difference.

The Special Master: You mean a difference in the area?

The Witness: I am quite sure. 613

The Special Master: Be sure that you understand the question.

Mr. Conrad: He testified that there was a very material difference.

Mr. Harrison: Yes, between his statement and Mr. Potter's statement as to the area.

Do you understand the question? 613

The Witness: I am not sure that I do.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You understand that Mr. Potter's statement, as originally presented here, more than six months ago, was to be modified, that it was understood it was to be modified and treated as modified in respect to the extent of territory, do you not?

A. I understood that counsel had agreed that the United States

Geological Survey reports or surveys should be accepted.

Q. Then, when I refer to Mr. Potter's statement, I of course refer to it as modified according to the agreement.

A. I had not understood that Mr. Potter's original statement was withdrawn.

Mr. McClintic: He never filed any subsequent statement.

The Witness: Of course if his figures are the same as mine, taken from the same source, although I have never seen any statement prepared by Mr. Potter, I assume the areas would be the same.

The Special Master: Strictly speaking, of course Mr. Potter 614 has not changed his statement, but as a matter of fact, that 614 has been agreed upon, the areas have been agreed upon.

Mr. Harrison: You so understood it?

The Special Master: Yes. I thought the correction had been made.

Mr. McClintic: I never saw the change, if it was made.

Mr. Harrison: I was treating it as if it had been done. It was agreed that it should be done.

The Special Master: That is evidently the way the misapprehension arose.

Mr. Anderson: There is no doubt about it, that that was agreed upon, and there is no difference between us on that point.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. As to the assessed valuation of the territory, is there any difference between your statement and Mr. Potter's statement?

A. As to the assessed valuation of the territory?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes; there is a small difference in each State.

The Special Master: How much?

The Witness: No. 2 is what I want (referring to exhibit).

The Special Master: Do you want your schedule, your second schedule?

The Witness: No; I want the plaintiff's exhibit. 615

The Special Master: Then it is Plaintiff's Exhibit B-1 that you want?

The Witness: (Referring to Exhibit) There is a difference to this extent. Virginia's Exhibit as to the assessed valuation of Virginia is less than ours by the sum of $129,424.36.

By the Special Master:

Q. What is the cause of that discrepancy?

A. It is difficult to reconcile the sums, because these were copied right out of the books in most cases, and sometimes, where Mr. Potter's figures did not agree with ours, we went back and reckoned, and they made clerical differences.

Q. Can you confine the difference to some particular item?

A. No; it varies from two and three cents to different amounts.

Q. Which is the largest?

A. Well, none of the differences are very much.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You have given the difference on the Virginia assessment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the difference on the West Virginia assessment?

A. It is quite small. The Virginia schedule showed the West Virginia assessment to be $6,352.90 less than the West Virginia schedule showed it to be. 616

Q. Then, if you deduct this $6,352.90 from $129.424.36 you will get $123,071.46 as the real difference?

A. No, sir; I should add the two items together.

Q. Why would you do that?

A. Because they are both against West Virginia. In one case Virginia is understated by Virginia's schedule—

Q. By how much?

A. $129,000.

Q. In round numbers, or that much accurately?

A. The figures are $129,424.30.

Mr. Anderson: If I was in error about that I want you to correct me.

The Special Master: Virginia is understated and West Virginia is overstated?

The Witness: By Virginia, yes sir.

Mr. Harrison: And it would be how much?

The Special Master: $6,352. Give me the exact amount, please.

The Witness: $6,352.90.

The Special Master: What do you gentlemen want to do about that discrepancy? I cannot take the time to examine all these details for you, and I should think the experts ought to get together on that. They ought to go over it and find that discrepancy, I should think.

Mr. Harrison: That is why we are developing these discrepancies.

The Special Master: Certainly. That is perfectly proper. I cannot take time for cross-examination on those details. 617 They must reconcile the two sides, or you must agree, one of two things; either you will agree among yourselves or the experts will get together and agree; then if they cannot agree on some particular instance, if they will submit it to me, I will have to determine it.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. The second inquiry under the second paragraph of the decree relating to the population of the two Virginias, with and without slaves, separately. Will you please state to what extent your statement of that inquiry differs from Mr. Potter's statement of that?

A. In amount?

Q. Yes. That is what we are getting at.

A. Do you want it with or without slaves?

Q. I want it both ways.

The Special Master: What is this question?

Mr. Harrison: I ask him to state to what extent his statement of the population of the two Virginias differs from Mr. Potter's statement, showing it respectively with and without slaves.

The Special Master: Whether there was any discrepancy there, and if so, how much.

The Witness: Suppose I prepare that during the recess. It will only take a few minutes.

The Special Master: And it will be understood also in reference to that that if there is any discrepancy the accountants can get together, and see if they can reconcile it, and if they do not reconcile it, all they will do then will be to report to me and I will have to decide upon it. 618

[May 7, 1909.]

After Recess.

619

THOMAS BIRD DIXCY

resumed the stand for further cross examination.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Can you state now specifically the difference, if any there be, between your statement and Mr. Potter's, under paragraph 2 of the decree, of the population with and without slaves in the two Virginias?

A. For Virginia, as computed in the Virginia exhibit, with slaves, 1,220,997; in accordance with West Virginia's Exhibit, 1,221,319, an excess on the Virginia Exhibit of 322.

Q. In other words, Virginia is 322 in excess of the total population over West Virginia's schedule.

A. With slaves.

Q. Now take it without slaves.

A. Without slaves, as computed for Virginia, on Virginia's Exhibit, 751,799. As computed for Virginia on the West Virginia Exhibit, 748,171, an excess on the Virginia exhibit of 3,628.

Q. So that in each case, with slaves and without slaves, the difference is very slight between your statement and Mr. Potter's?

A. It would be a very small percentage of the entire amount; yes sir.

The Special Master: Now, can we agree on that?

Mr. Harrison: I should think so.

The Special Master: It is a small matter.

Mr. Spooner: I do not think the Supreme Court would hear 620 four or five days of argument on that.

The Special Master: But I think it is going to be very gratifying to the court if I can eliminate all controversy that is not substantial.

Mr. Conrad: We might add the difference together, and divide it by two, and equalize them in that way. The difference in infinitesimal.

The Special Master: It is not a matter we will spend very much time about here.

Mr. Spooner: Or there.

Mr. Harrison: We will take their statement, if your Honor please.

The Special Master: Then the statement as to the population with and without slaves—

Mr. Harrison: Under paragraph 2 of the decree.

The Special Master: Under paragraph 2, found on defendant's Exhibit B-1, page 6, is accepted by both parties as accurate.

The Witness: I have only testified in regard to Virginia, not with regard to West Virginia yet.

Mr. Harrison: I do not know how that would be. I thought that covered both.

The Witness: No; that was as to Virginia, on the two exhibits.

The Special Master: Is the difference any greater for West Virginia?

The Witness: It would be a slightly greater percentage, yes. It is not large difference.

621

By the Special Master:

Q. What is the difference?

A. On Virginia's Exhibit, the total population of West Virginia, with slaves, is 392,823.

Q. As against 396,333?

A. Yes, on West Virginia's Exhibit; an excess on the West Virginia exhibit of 3,810.

Q. That is rather in your favor than against you, is it not? That is, as far as Virginia is concerned, it increases their proportion rather than decreases it?

A. Without slaves, the population of West Virginia, as shown on the Virginia Exhibit is 375,131, and as shown on the West Virginia Exhibit, 377,289; an excess on the West Virginia exhibit of 2,158.

Q. In each case it is an excess on the part of West Virginia?

Mr. Anderson: We accept the West Virginia exhibit on both, sir.

The Special Master: Then it is agreed on the record that page 6 of the defendant's Exhibit B-1 is accepted as an accurate statement of the population, both with and without slaves. That is agreed to on both sides.

The Witness: There is still another calculation at the bottom of page ——, an average of the population by decades from 1820 to 1860. They have not accepted that.

The Special Master: What is the significance of that? As long as we agree on the amount which I am to find, I do not know that we are concerned about the method by which the result is 622 reached.

Mr. Spooner: It bears on the expenses, possibly.

Mr. Harrison: I do not know that it has any bearing on any subsequent inquiry.

Mr. Spooner: This is in paragraph 2, as to the extent and value of the territory of Virginia and West Virginia on June 20, 1863, and the population thereof, with and without slaves, separately.

The Special Master: I shall not report any more than that.

Mr. McClintic: We shall ask to file a further statement under the average population of that period.

The Special Master: That is a matter I shall hear you about later. Anything either side may desire to have reported by me under my discretionary power, I will hear you both on; but for the time being it will result in less confusion if I simply confine the admissions to the paragraphs themselves. Then what I take up later will be a matter of discretion on my part.

Mr. Conrad: A question will arise under that provision of the construction of the order of the court.

The Special Master: Yes. Of course I have liberty to state any special circumstances that I consider of importance. I certainly am not going to state trivial things.

Mr. Harrison: Right here, for the purposes of paragraph 2, we will agree rather than spend any time in controversy.

The Special Master: Precisely. That covers the whole of 623 paragraph 2. If either party desires any suggestion or report or alternative in connection with paragraph 2, I will hear you on that at the close. Is that agreeable, Mr. McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

[Vol. 7. July 1, 1909. Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit B-1]

Mr. Anderson: I now have in my hand schedule B-1. That has been agreed on. That was accepted at the last meet- 835 ing.

Mr. Harrison: Will you read that second paragraph of the decree?

The Special Master: The second paragraph in the decree calls for the extent and assessed valuation of the territory of Virginia and West Virginia, June 20, 1863, and the population thereof, with and without slaves, separately. The plaintiffs submit plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit B-1. Has this been submittd to the other side?

Mr. Dixcy: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: And are the computations found in Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit B-1 agreed to?

Mr. McClintic: I understand that they agree to our statement.

The Special Master: I am merely trying to get the information. Is it a fact that you agree with the accountant on the other side as to the computations appearing in Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit B-1.

Mr. Dixcy: They agree with us, yes, sir. 836

The Special Master: It does not make any difference which way you put it.

Mr. Carlisle: I would say that the agreement is with our figures.

The Special Master: Well, have you made an agreement? Does that state it? It is absolutely immaterial, so far as the Master is concerned, how these results are reached. The question is, do we agree on that?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes sir.

The Special Master: So that the Master will report that Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit B-1 is agreed to by both sides. That disposes of that.

[Vol. 7. July 1, 1909.]

[The Special Master]: We now take up revised Exhibit B-1. 871 relating to matters involved under the second paragraph in the decree.

Mr. Anderson: That is an agreed statement.

The Special Master: The case is closed as to that paragraph. Is that agreed to?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

Mr. Conley: Yes sir.

(Group II.) Disbursements made by the Commonwealth of Virginia in payment of subscriptions to the capital stock of joint stock companies and corporations, including banks, created by her, the property or works whereof were situated in whole or in part in the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia, and a loan to the Town of Bath in said territory; all claimed by Virginia under Paragraph III of the decree. The plaintiff and defendant agree to the correctness of the amounts of said disbursements and to the portion of the property situated in West Virginia, as set forth in this table; but the defendant denies that they are a proper charge against her under this paragraph, and denies that some of the items are a proper charge against her in any event, and claims that, so far as she is liable at all, she is liable under Paragraph VII of the decree.

Other Evidence and Proceedings Relating to Paragraph III of the Decree.

[Vol 1. November 16, 1908.]

TESTIMONY ON BEHALF OF COMPLAINANT. 57

under

Paragraph 3 of the Decree.

ARTHUR G. POTTER,
testified as follows:

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Potter, state whether this paper, marked, "Expenditures in West Virginia. Article III. (Part 1, Interstate Improvements)," has been prepared responsive to the third paragraph of the decree?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that a statement of?

A. The first part of it is a statement of expenditures for what we call interstate roads, or interstate internal improvement enterprises, covering internal improvements starting in the present State of Virginia and ending in the State of West Virginia—the expenditures in West Virginia.

Q. The first part is a statement of expenditures in West Virginia, on account of what?

A. Interstate improvements.

Q. And the second part?

A. Expenditures in the State of West Virginia entirely for improvements within her counties.

Q. Please state how those expenditures were made up, and from what sources?

A. From the printed records of the Board of Public Works, verified by the register kept by the Second Auditor.

Q. Are you prepared to state whether those statements are correct, so far as shown by those records?

A. To the best of my knowledge and belief, they are all cor- 58 rect.

Q. As to all the items which they contain?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those statements, as I understand you, are made up from authentic public records of the State of Virginia?

A. They are.

Q. Have you verified those statements?

A. Yes, sir, personally.

Q. Are you prepared to say those statements are correct?

A. They are, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Mr. Anderson: I offer those papers in evidence.

(The papers referred to, entitled respectively "Expenditures in West Virginia, Article III. (Part 1, Interstate Improvements)" and "Expenditures in West Virginia. Article III. (Part 2, direct.)" are filed herewith, marked, respectively, "Plaintiff's Exhibit C-1—Part 1," and "Plaintiff's Exhibit C-1—Part 2.")

The Special Master: Now, what is your next?

Mr. Anderson: I understood Mr. Spooner desired to ask a question of Mr. Potter.

The Special Master: Very well.

Mr. Spooner: I want to ask Mr. Potter where schedule 15 A, which is cited here as being attached, is?

The Special Master: 15-A is Plaintiff's Exhibit C-1, you are enquiring about now, Senator. 59

Mr. Spooner: Yes; "Expenses of Harper's Ferry Raid, summary of detail analysis." I would like to see that statement.

A. Do you want to know where the details are found? What was the question please?

Mr. Spooner: I want schedule 15-A, which is said to be attached, but which is not, so far as I can see.

A. You will find it here, Senator (indicating).

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Did you charge the expenses of the trial and the hanging of John Brown, in this?

A. I can't say. I don't think so.

Q. Why should you not? Was not that money expended in West Virginia?

[Vol. 4, May 5, 1909. Cross Examination of Arthur G. Potter.]

I will turn this schedule over to Mr. McClintic, because he 288 is more familiar with the facts than I am.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Under schedule C-1, third section of the decree, these percentages marked thereon are made by whom?

A. I have not got the schedule to which you refer.

The Special Master: The entries made in red ink, plaintiff's exhibit C-1. It relates to the third item of the decree.

A. (Continuing) The percentages in red were made by—

Mr. Anderson: Wait until we get it.

The Special Master: The question is who made the computations that resulted in the percentages. Is not that it?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Did you make them?

The Witness: I made them, and my assistant, Mr. John B. Lightfoot, Jr., assisted by the regular members of my staff.

Mr. McClintic: On what basis did you make them?

Mr. Anderson: What page is this?

Mr. McClintic: The first page. Take them in their order and go right along. I suppose you made them on some basis, the same basis or on a separate basis.

The Witness: Each one on a separate basis.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you make them all on mileage or some on a mileage basis and others on some other basis?

A. Some on mileage and some on direct expenses which were located—

Q. State generally how you made them; on what basis?

A. On the basis of mileage. 289

Q. State the general principles?

A. On the basis of mileage in some cases where no other method was available; but on a basis of the direct expenditures of the counties where such information was available.

Q. How did you ascertain the mileage when you did base it on mileage?

A. From the board of public works report from maps which we scaled and in some cases from post route maps, which maps we used in some cases; and also railroad maps and railroad guides.

Q. As to those maps, where did you get the maps from which you scaled them?

A. From the office of the Corporation Commission.

Q. What did you know as to the correctness of those maps?

A. Nothing except what the map bore on its face, that it purported to be the map of a certain road or railroad or what not?

Q. When you use the word map, explain the character of the map in a general way.

A. We had a number of maps made by the engineers of the State, showing the routes of the different turnpikes, which we found with the Corporation Commission, and they were hand made maps.

Q. And that is the character of the maps you always used?

A. Not always; we referred to a United States post route 290 map in one case.

Q. Only in one case?

A. I mean we had one map there which we referred to occasionally, sometimes to assist in locating these roads, and sometimes used independently. I have the explanation of the various ones that we have used on that basis.

Mr. Conrad: I suppose your Honor knows what the witness means by the Corporation Commission.

The Special Master: It is the Commission that has control of enterprises of that character?

Mr. Conrad: Yes, sir.

Mr. Moon: It is the successor to the board of public works?

The Special Master: I understand. It is the bureau where all those records will be.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. All the records of the Board of Public Works were turned over to the State Corporation Commission.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. When you did not take maps, but took direct reports, what reports do you refer to?

A. Proceedings of the board of public works.

Q. What do you mean by proceedings of the board of public works, in that sense?

A. They are published volumes of the proceedings.

Q. On what were those based?

A. The reports of the engineers who built the roads. 291

Q. The engineer in charge of the particular road?

A. Or the State engineer in charge of all roads in the State.

Q. What did those reports show as to the location of the roads?

A. I cannot say offhand. In some cases they gave the town from which they started, the length of road built between certain points, and land marks; for instance, ridges of mountains, bodies of water, rivers, creeks, etc.

Q. And gave distances?

A. Gave distances in some instances, yes.

Q. Mr. Potter, where you took the basis of mileage, for instance, did you assume that each mile of road then cost exactly the same amount?

A. Not in all cases.

Q. When did you not assume it?

A. When we could determine that some part of the road had been macadamized, the cost of macadamizing was usually stated separately.

The Special Master: In the case of a turnpike?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. If you did not know where that macadam was, would you divide that on a mileage basis, then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any difference in this mileage basis as to whether a road crossed a mountain, or whether it required excavation or anything of that character? 292

A. No, sir.

The Special Master: That is, you took the mileage without reference to the character of the country through which it went?

The Witness: Exactly.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Were bridges and culverts and things of that kind always charged extra or shown where they existed?

A. If they were identified in any way on the records we so treated them. I imagine there were many small bridges which did not show up separately as bridge constuction which we included possibly upon the mileage basis.

Q. The fact that a road crossed the Allegheny Mountains did not enter into the computation one way or the other on a mileage basis, did it?

A. It would depend on where the State line was.

Q. Supposing that was the State line—

The Special Master: The point is, was the character of the country where they crossed the Mountains taken into account?

Mr. Harrison: He said no.

The Special Master: That is your point, is it not?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You charge this under what you might term two heads, one called interstate improvements, and the other direct.

The Special Master: Where do you find that?

Mr. McClintic: On the first page. That is the general statement, in Exhibit C-1. 293

The Witness: The "direct" begins at page 4.

Mr. McClintic: I am at page 1 now. I was speaking of the front page. Under the first head, in general what classes do you include?

The Witness: Only roads which were built partly in both states—roads and other improvements.

Mr. Harrison: What do you mean by the first head?

Mr. McClintic: I just named that; first, interstate improvements, and, second, "direct."

Mr. Harrison: Direct begins on the fourth page.

The Special Master: It is the title of the Exhibit that you refer to?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

The Special Master: "Part 1; interstate improvements. Part 2, direct." Now, what you want to know is what he included under interstate improvements?

Mr. McClintic: Yes. What did you include under the second one?

The Witness: Expenditures made exclusively in the counties which now form West Virginia.

The Special Master: Are they separated in your report, these two classes of improvements, direct and interstate?

The Witness: Yes, sir; there is a separate total for the two.

The Special Master: Oh, a separate total.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you make any distinction between roads built directly by the state (using the word direct in the sense of direct appropriation), and those in which they bought stock in a 294 company?

A. I did not.

Q. So this includes as a direct charge all those in which the State of Virginia simply owned stock in the company or built the road, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: You mean stock in whole or in part?

Mr. McClintic: In either case.

The Special Master: Both?

Mr. McClintic: Either owned the whole or part of the stock. I ask him whether he included that as a direct charge.

Mr. Conrad: In some cases they owned three fifths of the stock. In other cases the road was built by the Commonwealth. In the case of the northwestern turnpike it was built exclusively by the Commonwealth. In other cases the Commonwealth by purchase or subscription to the stock, owned three fifths.

The Special Master: Yes; but do these items include just what the State paid out on account of its three-fifths subscription?

Mr. Anderson: Both.

Mr. McClintic: Let me ask a question and we will find out.

Mr. Conrad: There is some misapprehension as to your Honor's inquiry. I understand your Honor's inquiry to be addressed to the fact as to whether this report showed in two parts the 295 money appropriated by the State, where it exclusively built a road.

The Special Master: Yes.

Mr. Conrad: And also where it subscribed to three fifths of the stock?

The Special Master: Yes.

Mr. Conrad: It had nothing to do with private subscriptions to the other two fifths. That has nothing to do with this case.

The Special Master: Where the State was the owner of three-fifths and private individuals the owners of two-fifths, this covers, as I understand it, the amount the State expended for its three-fifths.

Mr. McClintic: It did not necessarily own three fifths. Sometimes it would be two fifths, or other sums.

The Special Master: I understand; but whatever it might own. I mean. This schedule shows what the state did expend for, what it did own?—

Mr. Carlisle: And charges what the state paid for its stock as a direct expenditure by the State, for their stock in West Virginia.

Mr. Anderson: It includes all expenditures made by Virginia in works of internal improvements in West Virginia, whether those works of internal improvements were owned wholly by the State or partly by the State.

Mr. McClintic: That is a contention by Mr. Anderson which we do not agree to.

The Special Master: Of course it is only important for me now to get the position taken by each party to the controversy. The total cost may be seen here, all that is here is the cost to the State of Virginia. So we know what the item means. 296

Mr. Carlisle: Of the stock?

The Special Master: Yes; of the stock. Whether that is a proper item to be charged is another matter.

Mr. McClintic: Take the Berkeley and Hampshire turnpike. Is that a joint stock company or a private corporation?

The Witness: I don't know.

Mr. Conrad: Your summary statement does not show that?

The Witness: No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you know as to any of these companies, whether joint stock companies, or private corporations?

A. We made no inquiry into that, as to the form of the Company itself.

Q. Were not the books so kept that they showed an account with each company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you examine those books?

A. We did.

Q. Why did you not state the facts on your exhibit, then?

A. We did.

Q. You did not state whether it is a company or a direct appropriation. Is not that the fact—that appeared on the books?

A. I think it appeared on the books under the head of Berkeley & Hampshire Company, and we have simply the 297
Berkeley and Hampshire turnpike.

Q. Did it say whether the State made a direct appropriation or took stock?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not show that on your schedule, do you?

A. We simply state the amount of money expended by the State in the interest of that road, by stock or by direct appropriation.

The Special Master: You did not differentiate between the two?

The Witness: No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You make no distinction between stock and direct appropriation?

A. No, sir.

Q. Take the second one on the list, the Berryville & Charleston turnpike. You have charged there the total cost of the road, $27,692.71, and charged 68 per cent in West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is an item there, $7,236.97. Do you know what that was paid for?

A. I only know it appeared on the Commonwealth ledger and in the auditor of public account's report of 1858.

Q. You never looked back to see what it was paid for?

A. I cannot say that we did not; I think probably we did; but I do not remember that particular item.

Q. Did you make any examination of that particular road 298 as to whether there were certain stock charges and certain direct charges in relation to it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Just left it as it was?

A. Just as the previous one.

Q. The third item on the first page is the Covington & Ohio Railroad, now the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad line. In settling the amount for the Allegheny tunnel ($284,873.18) please state the basis.

A. I have not the information with me to answer that question. I can give it roughly by saying we took the total length of the tunnel from a copy of the profile and established the State line and measured the distance from the entrance of the tunnel to the State line, on both sides, and used that to obtain the percentage which we used in dividing the total cost of the tunnel, which was stated separately in the books of the Covington & Ohio Railroad under sections 19 and 20—that is, the total cost, sections 19 and 20, including the cost of the tunnel, were under one account. We applied it to that amount and divided it on that basis.

Q. Sections 19 and 20 included a lot more distance than the tunnel, did they not—a lot more distance?

A. They did.

Q. Did you take into account on that tunnel only sections 19 and 20 as a whole, and divide that?

A. Yes; 19 and 20 as a whole.

Q. How much of Section 19 was in the present limits of Virginia; or do you know that?

A. I cannot say from the information before me. I have the information with my other papers.

Q. Did you take into consideration in any way the long 299 cut that was made on the Virginia side before the West Virginia side was reached?

A. No, sir.

Q. You say that these measurements were made. Who made the measurements?

A. They were made from the profiles.

Mr. Carlisle: Who made them?

The Witness: I think I made it personally.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Where did you get the profiles?

A. I think Mr. John B. Lightfoot, Jr., got it from the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and had a copy of that made. We got the copy from them, and had a copy made.

Q. Did you take into consideration in any way the approaches; that is, the cuts on the West Virginia side, in making any charge?

A. Not if I remember correctly.

Q. How long a space did Sections 19 and 20 cover in distance?

A. I have not that information before me.

Q. In making up these charges, what did you use, what book, on the Covington & Ohio?

A. The journal, ledger and cash book, I think.

Q. The journal and cash book of what?

A. Of the Covington & Ohio Railroad; and also the board 300 of public works ledgers, A and B, with the journals.

Q. Were separate books kept of the Covington and Ohio? I am speaking of the whole railroad?

A. Yes; I have not the reference to those particular books, but I believe I am correct in saying that there was a separate set of books kept.

Q. Did you make up all the figures that make that $1,212,354.85?

A. I cannot say I made them up individually. They were made up by my force.

Q. Are you prepared to say that that is a correct charge from those books?

A. I believe it is.

Q. You know it is?

A. I believe it is.

Q. That is your best judgment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you analyze each and every account that appeared in those books?

A. They were analyzed by my force. I did not do the work individually.

Mr. Moon: It was done under your supervision?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You say it was done under your supervision. What do you mean?

A. I mean one of the men who assisted me did the work, 301 did the mathematical part of the work. I laid out the plan and he followed it, and I looked over his work after he had finished it. The mathematical accuracy of it was tested by another man.

Q. At what point did you get into it?

A. I laid out the plan and instructed them what to do, what to include and what to exclude and how to make the divisions, and how to put the figures together.

Mr. Anderson: You were here all the while?

The Witness: I was here all the while.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. How much of this $1,212,000 is a direct charge and how much did you estimate or apply by estimation?

A. All of sertions 21 to 39, eastern division; and all of the western division, $906,817.20.

Q. Is that a direct charge?

A. That is a direct charge, all west of the Allegheny tunnel; 32.4 per cent of the total surveying and location expense on a mileage basis, making $20,664.47, and 12-23rds of the total cost of Sections 19 and 20, including the total.

The Special Master: The first two items are the result of computation and the others of direct charge?

The Witness: No; in the order in which I gave them, the first one is direct.

The Special Master: The second is a direct charge?

The Witness: Yes, sir:

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. In these roads which you charge along there in red ink 302
a certain percentage, can you tell where you charge that percentage by mileage and which by other means?

A. Yes, sir. The Berkeley and Hampshire turnpike was on a mileage basis; the Berryville and Charleston was on a mileage basis; the Covington & Ohio I have just explained; The Cross Roads and Summit Point turnpike was on a mileage basis. The Franklin and Monterey was on a mileage basis. There is a charge there of $861,305.91—

Q. Referring to the $861,305.91, please tell the Commissioner when you entered these charges, what was your stopping point?

A. A draft in that particular case for payment—

Q. That was not the question. When did you stop making charges?

The Special Master: Up to what date did you make this computation?

A. All obligations, payments up to December 31, 1861, and as many obligations as we could determine had been entered into but not actually paid for work actually done prior to December 31, 1860, which were paid in the following year—1861.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Are we to understanud you to say that you stopped all charges as of December 31, 1860, or 1861? You said 1861.

A. I mean 1860, with the exception of such other items as I explained.

(Informal discussion followed in regard to the taking of recess.)

The Special Master: You will remember that the treasurer, when he took the stand was not sworn. I suppose there is no objection to his statement being taken as if it were taken under 303 oath.

Mr. Conrad: There is no objection to that.

Mr. Carlisle: That is the understanding.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 2 there is a road called the Mountain Lake and Sulphur Springs turnpike. On what basis did you divide it?

A. On the basis of mileage.

Q. How did you arrive at the mileage in that particular case?

A. The distance was estimated from the map of post roads in the State of Virginia and in West Virginia, authorized by the Postmaster General in 1904, according to scale. In other words, we scaled the map.

Q. What was the beginning of the road?

A. I cannot tell. It ran through Giles and Monroe Counties. I don't know just where it started or ended.

Q. Please find out for me the beginning and end of that road and give me that information after dinner or some other time?

A. Very well, sir.

The Special Master: You had better be prepared to produce all the original memoranda you used in reaching your results.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Take the Giles, Fayette and Kanawha. Was that divided on a mileage basis? I want to run over these rapidly to see whether we are on the same basis or not. That is on page 1. 304

A. On a mileage basis.

Q. How about the Hardy & Winchester?

A. On a mileage basis.

Q. How many miles did you make that road?

A. By Crozet's, 70 miles.

Q. Did you make any further examination to see whether that was correct as to mileage or not?

A. I have not that information before me.

Q. You don't know?

A. At the present time I cannot say.

Q. The Huntersville and Warm Springs road?

A. On a mileage basis.

Q. That first charge of $1,000 in 1833—was that spent on that road?

A. The notation on my schedule shows it was money advanced Peter Scales, an engineer, for his account and expenses in laying out the road.

Q. The Martinsburg and Winchester. Is that divided on a mileage basis also?

A. On a mileage basis. yes, sir.

Q. The Morgan and Frederick?

A. On a mileage basis.

Q. The Northwestern turnpike; how is that divided?

A. On a mileage basis as to the cost of laying out the road, the cost of surveys and locations; but all of the cost of macadamizing was charged direct to West Virginia, with the exception of five miles, as shown by comparison. 305

Q. You say 92.8 per cent of total loan, $308,000. What do you mean by that debt?

A. The State raised loans, amounting, if I remember rightly to $320,000, of which we charged 92.8 per cent. on a mileage basis to West Virginia.

Q. What books did you get that from?

A. The amount of the loan?

Q. No; how it was divided.

A. The total length, see Crozet's report. Other distances, see proceedings of the Board of public works, Volume 7, page 77.

Q. Were there any original books kept on that, separate from the general books?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you analyze these accounts and get this amount from those books?

A. We analyzed the accounts from those books; but it was not possible to locate them entirely to our satisfaction. So I adopted this method.

Q. You took the percentage method rather than take the direct books in that case?

A. Yes.

Q. And part of that road went through the State of Maryland, did it not?

A. It did.

Q. Was any charge made by you for anything on that ac- 306 count?

A. We made no distinction. We included the item of the cost of the road through that section of Maryland.

The Special Master: I did not hear that answer.

The Witness: We included the cost of the road through that small section of Maryland.

The Special Master: That made a part of your total?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Who built that part through Maryland?

A. The Northwestern turnpike company, incorporated under the laws of Maryland.

Q. Under the laws of Maryland?

A. I believe so.

Q. What interest, if any, did Virginia have in that company?

A. I don't know that, except if my memory serves me, the manager or the engineer of the road was the president of the Northwestern turnpike in Maryland.

Q. Did Virginia own any stock in it?

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know?

A. I don't remember.

Mr. Spooner: Your memorandum will show, will it not?

The Witness: I think it will.

The Special Master: What is the length of the road in Maryland?

The Witness: I think it is about eight miles.

Mr. McClintic: Eight or ten or twelve miles. 307

Mr. Spooner: I would like to make a suggestion. This witness is an expert. He knew he was to be cross examined, and yet I think he has answered a great many questions by saying that he has not the information before him, and a great many questions by saying that the memoranda are not here. I think he ought to bring whatever memoranda he had, from which he compiled these reports, in order that he may, if it is important and desirable, make swift reference to them and be able to answer the questions.

The Special Master: There is no question about that. I have suggested to Mr. Potter, and also I will suggest to Mr. Dixey, that they must both be prepared with all of the original sources of information upon which they have relied for the purpose of getting up these accounts; because counsel on either side are entitled on cross examination to know just the method used in reaching the result, and they have a right to see the original books and memoranda.

Mr. Spooner: Mr. Dixey informs us that that is the rule with accountants and that he will be prepared in that way.

Mr. Harrison: In justice to Mr. Potter I would state that it has been six months since he finished his accounts.

The Witness: We cannot possibly bring all the books from which we took this information.

The Special Master: Of course my suggestion is subject to that qualification—whatever you have that is movable and you can bring here. 308

Mr. Spooner: Your own notes.

The Special Master: Your own memoranda and notes, yes. If there are any books or records of such a character that they cannot be brought in here, if we need them, we will adjourn and go to see them; but in the meantime you will please have your notes here. so that the gentlemen on the other side can in cross examination criticize them as they like. And please bring all the sources of original information that are available. If you have time during the intermission—I do not ask you to do it now, but if you do have time—I would like you to take these exhibits and page them so we will have everything harmonious, and so when we refer to a page of an exhibit we will know just which one it is.

(Thereupon, at 1 o'clock a recess was taken until 2 o'clock P. M.)

AFTER RECESS.

The Special Master: You may proceed. 309

ARTHUR G. POTTER,

resumed the stand for further Cross Examination.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Mr. Potter, did you take into account on the Northwestern road the tolls paid in prior to the War?—I mean prior to the 1st of January, 1861?

A. As credits?

Q. As credits or otherwise.

A. We did not take them into account.

Q. Did you take in none of them, in any way or shape?

A. We took a note of them. We have them summarized in our papers, but we did not allow them as a credit on this account.

The Special Master: That is, you are inquiring into the proportion of the tolls paid into the Treasury of Virginia.

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir; on a road wholly owned by the State.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. How much was the amount you have, Mr. Potter?

A. My account on page 38 of the Northwestern ledger shows, for toll gates, $152,679.26 received as tolls. I don't know that all that was turned over to the State, but that is the account in the ledger.

Q. You neither gave credit for that here nor anywhere else?

A. No sir. 310

Q. Or any proportion thereof?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, Prices Turnpike and Cumberland Gap Road, page 3. Was that divided on a mileage basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no percentage put down there. Do you mean that is the part that was given to West Virginia on a mileage basis?

A. Yes; I have the percentage in another schedule. I don't recall why it was not put in that schedule, but it was on a basis of 91.3 per cent. Virginia, and 8.7 per cent. West Virginia.

Mr. Harrison: What item is that?

A. Price's Turnpike and Cumberland Gap Road.

Q. This amount you have here is what?

A. That is 8.7 per cent, I think, of the total. The total is not shown there. It is just divided. The extensions are made to the two divisions.

Q. Is the next, the Raleigh and Grayson, divided by mileage?

A. No; from the report of the president of the board of public works of the 12th of October, 1852, Document 18, Volume 17, the date of the report, the Section of the road in Raleigh county was reported at 10 miles—excuse me; I am mistaken about that. I would like to have that stricken from the record. I read my note wrong. That is on a mileage basis.

Q. Did not those same reports show where each dollar of 311 that road was, or practically all of it?

A. I don't think so. We have relied upon the board of public works account, on page 14 of Ledger B, for the total expenses of the road, and divided it on that basis, the mileage basis.

Q. In the case of the Raleigh and Wythe line, you have charged $400 in 1862, $2,200 in 1861, and $200 in 1862. Please explain those.

A. The items in 1861 and 1862 are for contracts made and for work done prior to December 31, 1860.

Q. Who paid them?

A. The board of public works. The record is in the board of public works Ledger B, page 269, from the board of public works' funds, by the treasurer.

Q. By what government was the 1862 payment made, for instance?

A. The Virginia government.

Q. What government in Virginia was it, the one that recognized the United States of America, or the one that did not recognize the United Stated of America?

Mr. Harrison: I suppose you refer to the Richmond goverment?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Conrad: All governments of Virginia recognized the United States of America.

Mr. McClintic: Did it give allegiance to the United States of America?

The Special Master: Probably as far as was compatible with the circumstances?

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Now, the Staunton and Parkersburg turnpike, page 3. 312
Were there any tolls on that road?

A. I believe there were tolls received from that road.

Q. Was any credit given for those anywhere?

A. No sir; no credit.

Q. Where did you get the items in reference to the Staunton and Parkersburg?

A. The Board of public works ledgers A. and B.

Q. Did you divide that on a mileage basis also?

A. No; we divided the construction items, macadamizing and engineering expenses, on the basis of 74.83 per cent. to West Virginia, and debited West Virginia with the bridges and direct construction items in West Virginia.

Q. Did not those books show where most of this construction was? Most of the expenditures were by counties.

A. I don't remember that it did; no.

Mr. Spooner: Does not your memorandum show? Have you not a memorandum to show that?

The Special Master: See what your notes show in that regard.

Mr. Spooner: That is what I am asking, whether he has any notes that show.

Mr. Harrison: What was the question?

The Special Master: Whether the books do not show where the money was expended, that is, what locality.

Mr. Harrison: What part of the road?

The Special Master: Yes, I suppose that is it.

A. My notes do not indicate that the books show with sufficient accuracy to be depended upon. 313

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. They indicate that it showed the expenditures?

A. Yes, by sections.

Q. You knew in which counties the sections were, did you not?

A. Not with absolutely certainty.

Q. Do you know that the books do not show with accuracy?

A. I do not. I can't say positively at this time. The books are on file in the second auditor's office.

Q. Did you examine those books yourself or through an assistant?

A. I directed the work in examining. Some of the work I examined myself.

Q. You simply do not know, then, beyond what was told you?

A. Yes; I satisfied myself that it was not safe to take the divisions to be found in those books.

Mr. Spooner: But you want to satisfy us and the court.

A. That is all I can say.

Mr. Spooner: You cannot do it?

A. That is all I can say in order to satisfy you.

Mr. Conrad: You are too hard to satisfy.

Mr. Spooner: You ought to have the data.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. If the books showed the sections and the county why was not that sufficient? 314

A. I testified that we could not locate the sections with absolute certainty within those counties.

Q. It was quite as satisfactory to locate it in that way, was it not, as guessing on the mileage or guessing where the work was done in that 234 miles that the road covered or thereabouts?

A. I think it was a safe basis to divide the construction and the mileage as we have done it no other roads and then divide such direct expenses as we could definitely locate.

Q. Was it not a much better method to take direct construction where you were able to?

A. I don't know that there was any direct construction in this case.

Q. Were there not direct books kept on that subject matter all alone to themselves?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not those books show by reports continuous and often, the process of construction and the amount of cost?

A. I don't recall that we found any reports showing the cost at different periods, or the process of construction at different periods.

Q. So you did not make a sufficient examination of those books to remember those facts, did you?

A. I would not go so far as to say that. I made a pretty thorough examination, or had it made under my direction, and as I said before I satisfied myself that the basis we used was the 315 most accurate.

Q. This was a road 234 miles long, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From Staunton, Virginia, to Parkersburg, West Virginia on the Ohio River?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of which you say 74.83 per cent was in West Virginia.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not that as capable of being differentiated on the books kept as in the case of the Covington and Ohio Railroad?

A. No; it was not. The Covington and Ohio Railroad Books were kept in a much more thorough manner, if I recall them properly. This road was divided into three divisions, the western division, and middle and the eastern.

Q. How much was in each division?

A. We have fifty eight miles and 72 chains in Virginia, and 17 miles and 8 chains in West Virginia, but I have not the figures right here as to the length in the different divisions, except that of the eastern division, which was 75 miles long, 58 miles lay in Virginia and 17 miles in West Virginia.

Q. Then all the balance except the eastern division were wholly in West Virginia, were they not?

A. The western divison and the middle division were both in West Virginia.

Q. The books were so kept as to show accurately the amounts that went to each of those, were they not?

A. I don't recall just—

By Mr. Spooner.

Q. Is it not your business to know?

A. It was at the time, but it has been some six or seven 316 months since I saw those books.

Q. But you must have memoranda from which you can testify?

A. We didn't copy the books.

Q. If you directed it, you ought to know upon what basis you directed it?

A. I simply had to rely upon my judgment at that time, which was that this was the most equitable division of the expenses.

Q. That is for court, not for you.

Mr. Harrison: You are asking him for the foundation of his statement.

Mr. Spooner: We are asking him for the facts.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You say these books were not so well kept as the Covington & Ohio books. What was the difference in the bookkeeping between the two?

A. I mean to say the items were not capable of the same analysis as were the items of the Covington and Ohio, by divisions, because we had a profile of the Covington and Ohio Road which guided us. We had no maps of the Staunton & Parkersburg, if I remember right.

Q. How did you arrive at the mileage, then?

A. From reports.

Q. What reports?

A. The survey of the principal engineer, Crozet's field book, 317 1838 and 1839.

Q. Did that State the amount of mileage in Virginia and the amount in West Virginia?

A. That located the distance from Staunton to the top of the Alleghany Mountains, as 58 miles and 72 chains.

Q. Were there not maps filed with those books, or of that road, showing the whole distance?

A. There may have been. I don't recall that we found a complete map or complete maps showing the entire route.

Q. Did you give credit for the tolls on that road anywhere?

A. No, sir.

Q. How much did they amount to?

A. I can't say offhand. I can look it up. It is somewhere in my papers, but I do not know that I can find it. I may not have it in summarized form. It may have been included in the receipts from the various internal improvement companies, which we did not summarize, but which we threw into a total with all other details.

By Special Master:

Q. You are not able to find that now?

A. No sir; I am not able to find it at present. I could find it if I were allowed the time.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next road is the road from Skedmore Fork to South Branch of Potomac. Was that divided on a mileage basis?

A. Yes.

Q. The next road, Strasburg to Capon Turnpike. Do you 318 assert that any part of that road is in Virginia?

A. We figured that 16 per cent of the distance lies in West Virginia.

Q. Where did you find the report of the Strasburg and Capon Turnpike, Mr. Potter?

A. We traced the road through Shenandoah, at Frederick and Hampshire counties, from the Board of Public Works document 17, year 1857, page 215, which shows the road through Shenandoah, Frederick and Hampshire counties, 12½ miles. The distance has been scaled from the United States post route map of 1904 as 2 miles in West Virginia and 10½ miles in Virginia.

Q. Did the report state that part of it was in Hampshire county?

A. I don't recall.

The Special Master: Is there a map of the State, giving these various towns and these public enterprises, that I could have here to look at?

Mr. McClintic: The gentleman here can furnish it, no doubt.

The Special Master: Hampshire county is Greek to me. It might just as well be located in Florida.

Mr. Anderson: We have a very good map, your Honor.

The Special Master: If you have a map of that kind, I would like to have it to follow this along as you proceed. The testimony would be more intelligible to me.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you find it actually was constructed to Capon from 319 any evidence that you could see in the case?

The Special Master: Constructed to Capon?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

A. Well, evidently we did find some evidence that it was constructed. I don't recall that particular road.

Q. Are you only testifying from the results of what you once had in your mind?

A. I cannot possibly carry all the details of this tremendous case in my mind, especially after the lapse of six months since I saw the papers.

By the Special Master:

Q. Have you anything on your notes to indicate the sources of your original information on this item?

A. I have just read the reference to the Board of Public Works.

Q. You have nothing else that refreshes your recollection on that point in your notes?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is the Winchester & Potomac Railroad Company, of which you charge West Virginia with $168,750. What are those charges made for, say the one in 1834, $50,000?

A. I can't say. All I know is that the amount was charged to that account on the Board of Public Works ledger as a payment to the Winchester & Potomac Railroad.

By the Special Master:

Q. In a lump sum?

A. In a lump sum. I don't know whether it was by sub- 320 scription to stock or payment for construction.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Does not your memorandum show?

A. It does not.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you make no further investigation of an item for a railroad like that than just the Board of public Works ledger, that so much was charged to it?

A. No; we considered that good evidence that payment had been made.

Q. If the Board of Public Works had loaned Governor Johnson of Clarksburg $100,000, and you found it on there charged to Governor Johnson, would you simply put it on this account without looking further?

A. No; we would have looked further to see whether there was any recovery on that loan.

Q. Did you look in this case, to see what these charges were for, whether they were gifts, stocks, loans or what?

A. We determined that they were payments in some form, either for stock or for subscription to the road for construction purposes. There were certain loans which were made and later recovered, which we have eliminated from the account.

Q. In this case?

A. In respect to this road.

Q. Which part of this $270,000 is for stock and which part is for loans, if you know?

A. I don't know.

Q. Have you any means of finding out, from your notes 321 or otherwise?

A. Not from the notes. I can find out from the books of the 2nd Auditor's Office.

Q. What amounts were loaned and afterwards repaid, which you just spoke of?

A. In 1835, the first $10,000, the loan was made in 1835 and paid in 1836. The next loan was $30,000, made in 1835, and paid back the same year to the Board of Public Works by the Winchester & Potomac Railroad. The next loan was in 1836, and repaid the same year.

Q. Then you cannot tell whether any part of this $270,000 was a loan, a stock subscription or a direct appropriation?

A. I can say definitely that it was not a loan.

Q. No part of it was a loan?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make an examination of the books of Virginia in reference to income paid from that Winchester & Potomac Road to the State, if any?

A. I have it among my other papers. We analyzed all of the receipts.

Q. What receipts did you get from the Winchester & Potomac Road?

A. I can't tell you. They are not brought into these statements. We have them in another form among our original 322 papers, but not having taken them into our statements, we did not summarize them.

Q. When was the Winchester & Potomac Road incorporated, if you remember?

A. I have no notes on that point.

Q. Did you look at the books of Virginia, following the period of 1861, as to what Virginia did with that part of that road?

A. I did not.

Q. You have no knowledge of anything occurring subsequent to 1861, then?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you examine the books of Virginia as to an Act of the legislature providing for a surrender of anything from this road by the payment of an annuity?

A. I don't recall such an act.

Mr. Conrad: You refer to the act of 1866 or 1867?

Mr. McClintic: I am not referring to the Act of 1866 or 1867 in that matter. He said he knew nothing about those, so I did not go into that.

By Mr. McClintic:

Did you find any Act in 1846, or did you look for any Act, or see any payment made by this Road to the State of Virginia?

A. The Commonwealth or the Board of Public Works?

Q. I cannot tell you myself, except the payment of the money.

Mr. Harrison: Did you ask whether that was a payment under the Act of 1846?

Mr. McClintic: A payment of $50,000 by an annuity. 323

The Special Master: Paid by the Railroad to the State.

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

A. I don't find such a receipt in the year 1846, either in the Board of Public Works or on the Commonwealth books.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You do not find any sum paid by the Winchester & Potomac road to the State in those years, 1846 to 1861, inclusive, or any one of them?

A. I have only examined one year.

Q. You do not find any in 1846.

A. No, sir; not in 1846.

Q. We will not take time to go into each year after that if you do not remember anything about it. The Hillsboro and Harpers Ferry road, page 4. Was that divided on the mileage basis?

A. On a mileage basis; yes.

Q. And the same as to the Harrisonburg and Hardy road?

A. Yes; on a mileage basis, as near as we could get at it.

Q. You have charged the sum of $428,063.86 on account of James River and Kanawha interest, as you term it?

A. Yes.

Q. You have charged there bonds to Kanawha Board, in 1860, $100,000. What was that; I mean as to a loan, or buying stock, or direct appropriation, or what?

A. It was an issue of bonds under the Act of March 23, 1860. I believe the Act shows the manner in which the $100,000 was to be paid to the Kanawha Board.

Q. Do you call that a loan or a direct appropriation or 324 what do you put it under? Under what head in that line?

A. I don't recall.

Q. What was the James River & Kanawha Company? I mean, was it a corporation or what was it?

A. I don't know the exact status of it.

Q. Do you know whether it was or was not a corporation?

A. I think it was a corporation; yes. It issued stocks.

Q. Then you know it was, do you not?

A. Yes; it was a corporation in some form.

Q. Was not that $100,000 loaned to the James River and Kanawha Company?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Was it delivered to the James River & Kanawha Company?

A. I didn't see the receipt, but I saw the evidence of the issue of the bonds in the bond registers to the James River & Kanawha Company. We did not go to the transfer books to see if the bonds were actually turned over to them.

Q. Did you see any other evidences than the bond register?

A. I don't recall that we did, except the Acts.

Q. You saw the Acts authorizing the issue?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the James River & Kanawha Company got $100,000 worth of bonds?

A. I can't state positively. 325

Q. You found the bonds were issued?

A. Yes; the bonds were issued. I can't state positively that they got the bonds.

Q. You simply charge them because the bond register showed that they were issued?

A. They were charged to the Kanawha Board of the James River & Kanawha.

Q. Did you look further to see whether there were any evidences that the Kanawha Board got them? What was the Kanawha Board?

A. I can't recall the history of that. We have it in another form. I believe, in Mr. Lightfoot's report, the full details which we compiled, but it is rather a complicated organization, this old James River proposition, and I would not undertake to give the history of it offhand.

Mr. Conrad: There were two or three distinct companies in succession. The James River Company was the first one.

Mr. McClintic: The James River entered into it too. It is not worth while to mix this.

Mr. Conrad: It is not mixing it. I say there were three or four companies consecutively growing out of the original company.

The Special Master: Each the successor of the other?

Mr. Conrad: Yes.

Mr. Carlisle: There were several successors, were there not?

Mr Conrad: Yes; three or four, I think, one right after the other.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You know nothing about this except that there were 326 certain bonds shown by the bond register issued to the James River & Kanawha Company for the Kanawha Board?

A. In a general way I satisfied myself at that time that it was a proper charge. Further than that I cannot testify at this time.

Q. Have you anything to refresh your memory so that you could testify on that $100,000 item directly?

A. I think so.

Q. I think you said you did not know whether these bonds were delivered to the James River & Kanawha Company?

A. No; I don't know.

Q. Or to the Kanawha Board?

The Special Master: He said he did not find any receipt from the company on the files.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. When were they issued, Mr. Potter, if you will allow me to ask you a question while you are looking?

A. I don't know the exact date of the bonds. They were issued under that Act of March 23, 1860.

Q. Were they issued before December 31, 1860?

A. They must have been, I think, to come into my account. I would say offhand, yes, they were. Of course I have no proof of that just yet.

Q. You can look that up at your leisure, Mr. Potter. We will not take further time with that. You have charged on account of this James River & Kanawha interest, as you term it, in addition to the $100,000, some $431,000, I believe it is, in round figures, other charges. What did Virginia do with reference to that money in connection with the James River & Kanawha Company? 327

A. What did she do with it?

Q. What settlement was made with the James River and Kanawha Company by Virginia with reference to it.

Mr. Harrison: Are you referring to the $428,000 of interest?

Mr. McClintic: About $438,000.

Mr. Harrison: Those several items, you mean?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

A. I don't know any settlement that was made by Virginia with West Virginia for that.

Q. I did not say West Virginia. I said between the James River & Kanawha Company and Virginia.

A. No; I don't know any settlement that was made between them.

Q. Did not Virginia take stock for that whole sum?

Mr. Harrison: Do you mean $91,666?

Mr. McClintic: The $91,000, the $107,000 and the $84,000; all those items.

The Special Master: Aggregating $424,063?

Mr. McClintic: Well, less the $100,000.

The Special Master: All the items included in that except the $100,000?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, it amounted to about $438,000. Somewhere along there.

A. I can't say at this time whether she took stock in payment for that or not.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you not refer to the Act of March 23, 1860, awhile ago?

A. I believe we did; yes.

Q. Did not that Act provide that she should take stock for 328 all that indebtedness?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Were separate books kept by the James River Company?

A. I believe they were, up to about 1836. In 1836, I believe, the James River books were closed.

Q. Did you look at the books along in 1832, 1833, 1834 and 1835, to see whether or not stock was taken for these early payments?

A. Well, we made an analysis of the books, both receipts and disbursements.

Q. What stock did Virginia have in the James River & Kanawha Company?

A. I have no record.

Q. You made no examination of that?

A. I have no record in summarized form of the stock she held at that time, at the end of this period, or at any time. We only have a record of the various amounts paid to the James River interest, and the amount she received from them, out of which we picked these items that were chargeable to West Virginia.

Q. Did not Virginia have stock for all the amounts owed her by the James River Company by 1860?

A. I think she did. I am not sure of that.

Q. Except this $100,000 to the Kanawha Board. I do not think she had any stock for that. Did not the James River & Kanawha Company pay Virginia in stock for all the money loaned?

A. I can't state positively that she did, because I have 329 not made a computation to ascertain that particular point. The object of our investigation was to find out how much Virginia paid to the James River interest.

Q. If the money was paid by the James River Company, even if it was paid in the form of stock, would you have looked to see any gross credits of that kind?

A. If it was paid back in stock, there would not necessarily be any gross credit.

Q. Would not the accounts be closed on the books?

The Special Master: Well, were they?

A. I can't say that they were.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you look to see?

A. Naturally we examined all of the entries pertaining to the James River items throughout the period, and that would come under the scope of that examination.

Q. You left that part out of your report if you found it, then, did you?

A. Our accounts here do not comprehend that point at all; do not comprehend the items received from the James River.

Q. I realize that, but I ask you if you found the other and left it out?

A. Yes; I think I can safely say that we did. We found everything in regard to the James River.

Q. When the debt was paid by the delivery of the stock of the Company to the State, why did you leave that out?

A. It is my impression that these items we have here were 330 not covered by payments of stock to the State.

Q. Do you know they were not?

A. I cannot state positively that such was not the case at this time, but naturally, having put them in, I think I am safe in saying that they were not. That was my opinion of it, at least, when I made these accounts.

Q. I am not asking your opinion. Is that your knowledge?

A. It is my best judgment that it was the case.

Q. I differentiate between your judgment and your knowledge. Do you know it or do you not know it?

A. I can't say that I positively know it, but I believe it is true.

Q. That these items were not paid by stock?

A. Were not covered by payments of stock.

Q. None of these items?

A. No.

Q. Now take the next page, page 5, I reckon you call it. It is not paged in this memorandum I have.

A. It is page 1 of the second division of this schedule.

The Special Master: I shall have these accounts all paged in their regular consecutive order, for reference in the examination.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. There is charged there the Alleghany Mountain turnpike, for which you charge $1,074. Do you know that that 331 road is wholly within the State of West Virginia?

A. I believe that it is.

Q. On what do you base your belief?

A. Well, I was assisted in locating these roads by a native Virginian, who traveled more or less, Mr. Lightfoot, and I relied considerably upon his advice in the matter.

Q. Where did the road begin and where did it end?

A. I have not that record in convenient form.

The Special Master: What county was it in?

Mr. McClintic: It was in Highland, Page and Pocahontas Counties, West Virginia, as a matter of fact, your Honor.

The Witness: We also relied on Crozet's report.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. What did the Acts say about this road, if you remember?

A. I don't remember.

Q. The next item you have charged is the Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum at Weston, $125,000. Where did you get that sum of $125,000 from?

A. From the reports of the Auditor of Public Accounts, 1858, 1859 and 1860.

Q. What do they show?

A. Those payments of $125,000.

Q. To whom?

A. To the Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum.

Q. To differentiate again, what do you mean by the Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum in that connection?

A. What do I mean?

Q. Who got the money? 332

A. I couldn't say.

Q. You looked no further than the published reports on that item?

A. No further than that, except with regard to the last item of $50,000 we had to refer to the ledger.

Q. What did the ledger show with reference to that?

A. The ledger showed $50,000 charged to the Trans-Alleghany lunatic asylum at Weston.

Q. Why did you have to refer to the ledger for one item and not the other?

A. Because we did not know from the published report of 1861 whether it came in the period between October 1st and December 31st, or after the 1st of January.

Q. You were in West Virginia, were you not?

A. I was.

Q. You looked at certain auditor's reports there, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not see on the auditor's report of the restored government an item by which they recovered into the Treasury $27,000 of that sum?

A. I don't recall such an item; no.

The Special Master: You mean into the Treasury of Virginia?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir; the restored government, the real State of Virginia.

The Special Master: The Pierpont government?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

Mr. Conrad: The Government at Wheeling.

The Special Master: Are they identical?

Mr. McClintic: Yes; when you speak of one you mean the same thing, the restored Government or the Pierpont Government. It had a little trouble getting to Richmond, but it got there sooner or later. 333

The Special Master: It was ambulatory.

Mr. Anderson: There was a race for that money, was there not?

Mr. McClintic: No; Virginia got it.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is the Abbs Valley & Tug Road. Do you know that that road is wholly in West Virginia?

A. I have not the information regarding these roads in this division in convenient form for reference. As we found the appropriations, we made a note as to where the roads ran, and that was not tabulated in such form as to make convenient reference at this time. If it is necessary to have it, I can have it later.

Mr. Spooner. You could not have had time enough to make an exhaustive accounting here, could you?

A. We thought we had devoted sufficient time. We did not anticipate these questions.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. I find charged there, below, the Brandonville, Kingwood and Evansville state road. Have you anything on your accounts to show whether that was a stock company or a direct state appropriation?

A. No, sir; I think, however, it was a direct state appropriation, because the money was paid through the auditor of public accounts, or the evidence of the payment is in his reports.

Q. Do you know? 334

A. I do not, positively.

Q. Further down there somewhere—I have a memorandum on the outside that it is page 3 of the second section—is the Clarksburg and Buchanan road. Do you know whether that was a stock company or a direct appropriation?

A. I do not.

Q. You charge on the same page the Coal River Bridge Company. Was that a company or a direct appropriation?

A. I can't say.

Q. That charge is $3,000. You charge on the same page the Coal River Navigation Company. For what were those appropriations, $96,000 total, made, stock or direct appropriation or loans or gifts?

A. I can't say.

Q. You made no differentiation?

A. If they were charged to the account of the internal improvement, on the Board of Public Works, we accepted them as payments.

Q. The State of Virginia has filed here a great number of acts—that is, a memorandum of acts. That act says that was for stock. Did you look at that compendium of acts, at all?

A. I did not compile that.

Q. You had nothing to do with the filing of those acts and know nothing about them?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know whether this is a company or a direct charge?

A. No, sir.

Q. All you know is that some book showed so much money 335 charged?

A. So much money charged.

Q. Was that an official report or a book?

A. It is the ledgers A and B of the Board of Public Works.

The Special Master: A manuscript book?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. There are a number of these bridge companies, the Buckhannon Bridge Company and others, marked on here as companies. Does the same information apply to those?

A. Yes, sir; we followed the names used in the books that we had for reference, that we have referred to.

Q. You charge here Gauley bridge, $1,419.45.

Mr. Anderson: What page is that on?

Mr. McClintic: It is page 4 of the second section.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You also charge Gauley bridge under the James River and Kanawha Company. Are both charges correct, or why are the two charges made?

A. I believe the bridge was destroyed and rebuilt, and they were charged in different places. One is on the James River account, and later on, among the Board of Public Works accounts.

Q. Did not the bridge belong to the James River and Kanawha Company?

The Special Master: Which was that; Gauley bridge?

Mr. McClintic: Gauley Bridge. 336

A. I don't know.

Q. When you charged it under the James River and Kanawha Company, did it not belong to it?

A. I think very probably it did.

Q. Was not that the first charge?

A. I think it was, but I have not the date of that charge, so I can't state positively.

Q. You charge on the same page, 4, Bank of Fairmount, $50,000. What is that?

A. I believe it was a purchase of the bank stock by the literary fund.

Q. How did you happen to know this was stock and the other things which accompanied it were only direct appropriations? How did you happen to differentiate between the two?

A. The State was not exactly building banks and it was building roads.

Q. Well, were they building roads in some cases where there were companies, or were they building navigation companies?

A. Making appropriations and buying stock of these various companies, the same as they bought this stock.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. You say they bought stock in that bank?

A. I believe they did; yes.

Q. And you have charged it in your account as a direct expenditure of money in West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir; because we could not determine what became of the stock. 337

By the Special Master:

Q. Where was the bank located?

A. In Fairmont, West Virginia.

Q. You say you could not determine what became of the stock?

A. Yes; the record is not clear as to what became of the stock.

Q. Is that the criterion?

Mr. Spooner: Does that make any difference in the nature of the original transaction?

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did the record show what became of the stock of the various other companies?

The Special Master: What is Fairmont; a town in West Virginia?

Mr. McClintic: It is a town in Marion County, up in northwestern West Virginia.

Q. You charged below there $106,800 to the Guayandotte Navigation Company. What was that; a stock transaction, or a direct appropriation or a loan?

A. I don't think it was a loan. I think it was a direct appropriation. It may have been a purchase of stock.

Q. Did not the books show whether the appropriation was for purchase of stock, or for loans?

A. Yes; but we did not make any distinctions between the various classes of payments to improvement companies, etc.

The Special Master: That is, you made no distinction in your account whether the investment was direct or indirect? 338

A. No, sir.

Mr. Spooner: Whether the money was expended in the construction of a railroad or the purchase of stock in a corporation.

The Special Master: Yes; that is what I mean by direct and indirect. What you are getting at now is the basis on which this account is made up?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Whether it is satisfactory or otherwise is to be determined later.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 6 there is the Kingwood and West Union turnpike. Do you know whether that was a corporation or a direct appropriation?

A. I do not.

Q. On the bottom of that page 6 is Lewisburg Law Library. You charge $4,150. Why did you charge that?

A. I believe it was an appropriation made by the State for the purchase of books for that library in 1836, if my recollection serves me.

Q. Do you regard that as a direct expenditure in the State of West Virginia?

The Special Master: Where is that located in West Virginia?

Mr. McClintic: The library was for the Supreme Court of Virginia. It was a Supreme Court on wheels.

Mr. Conrad: Oh, no.

The Special Master: I mean where is it located geographically? 339

Mr. Conrad: In Greenbrier county, West Virginia. It was an improvement for the legal mind of West Virginia.

Mr. McClintic: I suppose you will charge up direct to us the time the court stayed over there and said they were giving us instruction?

Mr. Harrison: If that is of any account, we expect to do it.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 7 you have charged $7,000, the Louisa Fork of the Sandy River road. Please tell us what that is?

A. The road?

The Special Master: Do you mean where the road is located?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

A. I would think from that description that it was on the Louisa Fork of the Sandy River.

Q. Where is the Louisa Fork of the Sandy River?

A. I can't tell you.

Q. Is it not wholly within the States of Kentucky and Virginia?

A. I don't know at this time. I have satisfied myself that at that time that it lay within West Virginia.

Q. Were you as well satisfied of all the other items as you were of that?

A. I think I can say I was.

Q. Were you as well satisfied of that as you were of all the other items?

A. I think so.

Q. You charge there a road called the Morgan County road 340 from Bath to St. John's River, $2,500. Where did you get that information?

A. I don't recall at this time.

Q. Did that appear in that form or shape in any way on any book?

A. It appeared in the Board of Public Works ledgers A and B, page 108 and page 239.

Q. Does the record show that money went to that purpose by that record?

A. The record shows that; yes.

The Special Master: Do I understand there is an entry that indicates an expenditure for that purpose?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Does not an Act of the legislature show a loan of $2,500 to the town of Bath?

A. I don't know. There is such an item in your accounts, and I thought that probably that offset this, but I don't recall having seen the loan to the town of Bath. It may be there.

Q. Does not the act of the legislature authorize the loan to the town of Bath; or did you ever look at the Act?

A. I did not look at the Act with regard to that.

Q. Did not the ledger and journal of the Internal Improvement Fund show that the town of Bath got the $2,500?

A. I don't recall.

Q. You simply don't know?

A. I don't recall at this time that it did; no.

Q. You charge there next, Mr. Potter, the Monongalia Nav- 341 igation Company, $8,180. When do you charge the first item?

A. In 1822.

Q. How much?

A. $5,520.

Q. Is that an appropriation made for the purpose of buying stock or a direct appropriation; or do you know?

A. I don't know.

The Special Master: I understand that to be true of all the items that he cannot differentiate;—that is, with the information he has before him now. That is correct, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On the top of the next page I find an item of Moorefield and Alleghany turnpike, $8,779.78. I also find an act filed by counsel for Virginia here, that that stock in that road was totally given to the county of Hardy in 1858. Were you aware of that fact when you put that item in?

A. I was not.

The Special Master: The county of Hardy?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Which State is that in?

Mr. McClintic: West Virginia. The Act which they filed here shows that it was given to the county.

By Mr. McClintic: 342

Q. On the next page there is an item, Northwestern Bank of Wheeling, $450,000. Please state what that is?

A. I cannot state. The record is not complete, as to whether it was for stock, but I believe it was for stock.

Q. You mean bank stock bought by the State of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Examiner: In what respect is the record incomplete in that regard?

The Witness: I made no description of these items. I merely took them from the books under the drawings. The account said Northwestern bank. I entered that under that heading, the total item, knowing that that bank was in West Virginia.

By the Special Master:

Q. There was nothing on the book you saw that indicated exactly what the money was for?

A. If we had checked back to the journal we could have told about that.

Q. But did you check back to the journal?

A. Not in all cases.

Q. But I mean in this specific instance?

A. I don't remember.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you or not find upon the books that prior to the 1st of January, 1861, the Commonwealth of Virginia had sold a large amount of that stock and received the money for it?

A. I do not recall that circumstance. 343

Q. You cannot answer as to that?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You have an item on there, the last item, $24,908.67 in that account.

Mr. Spooner: If he had it, would it have made any difference in his account?

The Witness: Probably I would have put it in.

Mr. Spooner: Probably is rather indefinite. You have not put in a great many similar things. Why would you have put it in?

The Witness: If the State had sold its holdings in the Northwestern Bank, I would have allowed that credit. That is the theory on which these accounts are constructed, that any disposition for which money was received would work a reduction.

Mr. Spooner: If the books showed that they did sell that stock for so much money, was it a proper examination of the books that you made, if you say you do not know it?

The Witness: I think I would have given it if it was there.

The Special Master: What you intended to give was the balance that stood against the investment in 1861, was it?

The Witness: January 1st, 1861; yes, sir.

The Special Master: That is, your intention was to give the investment as it stood at that time, and you so gave it?

Mr. Spooner: That was not what the order called for; it was moneys expended in West Virginia.

Mr. Conrad: Suppose your accounts that have been offered in evidence here show the fact that you do give credit for that very sale of stock, would that affect the final result you have reached? I say, if the accounts you have rendered here, that have been put in evidence, do show the fact of the sale of this stock, and that you have given credit for the proceeds of that sale? 344

Mr. Spooner; Our accounts?

Mr. Conrad: Yes.

Mr. Spooner: We have not put them in evidence.

Mr. Conrad: You gave them to us and we assume from that that you are intending to put them in evidence. I am not talking about his accounts, but your accounts.

The Special Master: If his accounts show that the stock was sold and credit given, the question is whether you do not get the same result.

Mr. Conrad: Yes. He has simply forgotten it.

The Witness: I cannot say positively about that item.

By the Special Master:

Q. If your accounts show it, and Virginia is given credit for it, of course it is the same thing as if it was in this item. Of course it is not very material whether it appears right here or some other place.

Mr. McClintic: Does your account anywhere show any credit of that kind?

The Witness: Not that I recollect. 345

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You do not think that your account shows anywhere any credit of that kind?

A. I don't think it does.

Q. Did you not take the original investment that you found from the books and charge West Virginia with that amount?

A. I cannot state positively, but that was the basis on which that was entered there.

Q. I started to ask you when I was interrupted whether as to the item of $24,908.67, which you marked "Not on annual report 1839". Virginia paid a cent of that?

A. If you will allow me to refer to the receipts I think I can answer that.

Q. Certainly.

The Special Master: That is, does that represent an actual investment?

A. (Referring to memorandum) I do not find the record among my papers. I have it somewhere, but I cannot answer that question now.

Mr. McClintic: You do not know what that "Not on annual report" means?

A. I think it had something to do—no, I do not know.

By the Special Master:

Q. Have you got all your notes here?

A. I had them here.

Q. But you are not able to put your fingers on that point?

A. They are very voluminous and I cannot turn to that. 346

Mr. McClintic: I wish you would look that up and tell me.

The Special Master: I was going to say, if there are any of these items you want to have him look up in his notes, we had better not take time to do it now; but he can make a note of everything of that kind and look it up between now and tomorrow morning. We will not wait for those things unless it disturbs the continuity of the cross examination to go ahead with something else.

Mr. McClintic: No, sir; it will not disturb me.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 11 you charge a road called the South Branch and Kitterman's to Hardy County. Is that road wholly in West Virginia?

A. I believe it is.

Q. Do you know that it is?

A. I would not have put it in there if I had not been pretty sure of it.

Q. Your judgment was that it should be put in there, was it?

A. It certainly was.

The Special Master: What county do you contend it is in?

Mr. McClintic: It is in Harrison county, Virginia.

Mr. Conrad: There is no such county in Virginia.

Mr. McClintic: I mean Rockingham County; I was thinking of Harrisonburg. It is in Hardy County, West Virginia, and Rockingham, Virginia. It is better known as Brock's Gap. 347

Mr. Anderson: That is another road. That is not Brock's Gap.

The Special Master: Do you remember how you ascertain that fact when you made your statement about that road and its location; that is, from whom or from what you got your information?

The Witness: We had several maps there, and one map that we received from the library in Washington. We located these various roads and charged them up accordingly. I did not make an index showing the locations of the direct West Virginia charges, but made an index of those crossing the line. But I do not think there would be any question about these roads located in West Virginia, I did not think so, and so we did not prepare that index.

The Special Master: And it is impossible for you now to put your finger on the original memorandum from which you reached that result?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. McClintic: Dd not that road have the proper title of the South Branch of the Potomac to Brock's Gap and Rockingham county?

Mr. Anderson: There is such a road as that.

The Witness: I think that is the road; but somewhere in the report we found a record of Kitterman's and located it in West Virginia.

Mr. McClintic: On page 13 I find the Williamsport Turnpike, $5,130.65. Are you aware of the acts of Virginia filed here which give the stock in that road to Wood County?

The Witness: No, sir. 348

Mr. Anderson: What is the date there?

Mr. McClintic: 1858, I think, but I would not be positive.

Mr. Harrison: To whom does the act give it?

Mr. McClintic: To Wood County.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. To go back to one question on the first page of the whole account, do you know, in the case of the Berryville and Charleston turnpike, whether or not that road was sold under a deed of trust given by the company?

A. I do not.

Mr. Anderson: It was.

Mr. McClintic: I will ask Mr. Potter.

The Witness: I don't know.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You do not know anything about what the books showed as to charges?

A. I do not.

Q. Did the books make any difference between the last charge of $7,236.97 and the other charges?

A. I cannot say at this time.

Mr. Spooner: A trust given by the corporation?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Were the items taken from the same book thereunder?

A. No; the item in 1858 was taken from the Commonwealth ledger.

Q. Did you look at the journal of the Commonwealth to 349 see what that charge was for?

A. I think probably we did not. I don't remember.

Q. On page 15 you have a charge there called sundry expenses, $339.91. On what theory did you charge those to West Virginia?

A. Journal B, page 532. In the first place, we find them entered in the annual reports of the board of public works, and we located the expense as in some particular county. There were many others which we located in Virginia counties which we left out. Such as we could locate in West Virginia counties were charged.

The Special Master: What was the nature of the expenses?

The Witness: In connection with the inspection of road by the board and things of that kind.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you not charge under the head of 4-D a whole lot of items for inspections as ordinary expenses of the State Government?

A. Such inspections as we could not locate within particular counties, we charged up as ordinary expenses; but all items that we could locate we charged direct. These items may not have been ordinary expenses in one sense; if they were applied to the inspection of a particular road which we could locate, I think it was quite reasonable to charge it.

Mr. Spooner: How many different kinds of ordinary expenses have you been governed by in distributing these items?

The Witness: I think my previous answer explains that. 350

Mr. McClintic: And these items which you put into ordinary expenses and charged as such, did you exclude all the items for Virginia counties?

The Witness: All direct charges. Items we could locate the same as these, we did so charge, and excluded them from the ordinary expenses of the board of public works.

The Special Master: That is, where the expenses appeared to be localized by the books, you left them out, and where they were general in their character, you made the charge of ordinary expense?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: The only distinction between the two being on the books. You saw where some of them went, but you could not see where the others went, and therefore made a general charge?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Conrad: Governor Wise's salary was an ordinary expense, but when he went to Charlestown to command the troops at the John Brown raid, that, too, was just such an expense.

Mr. McClintic: We thought the hanging of John Brown on West Virginia soil was a permanent improvement to West Virginia.

Mr. Conrad: It was. Jefferson County to-day is the finest 351 county in West Virginia.

The Special Master: I suppose that might raise the question as to whether I have a right to localize it or spread it generally over the whole country.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. We find on the same page a charge of interest on the bonds of the city of Wheeling of $30,627.45, and you give credit for $15,115.64. On what theory of State expenditure did you charge that to West Virginia?

A. On the direct instructions of that paragraph of the decree which says "All moneys expended within the counties of West Virginia."

Q. Was money paid on bonds given by a municipality of West Virginia, which the State had guaranteed, money spent within West Virginia?

A. It was spent for that purpose, yes. Wheeling was in West Virginia.

Q. Yes; Wheeling is in West Virginia, and Wheeling is a solvent municpality, is it not, or was it not?

A. It was.

Q. Was and is, as a matter of fact?

Mr. Anderson: I don't know whether it was or not.

Q. (Continuing) Yes; it was and is. Did you look to see whether that same money had ever been repaid to Virginia?

A. I did not look beyond 1860.

Q. You did not follow the books to see whether items of 352 that kind owned by an independent municipality had ever been repaid to the State or not?

A. Not after 1860.

Q. You were satisfied to make a charge and then not look to see whether it was paid afterwards or not?

A. I don't think it was paid, because it would have appeared on the auditor of public accounts' ledger, if it had been, and I did not notice it there.

Q. If you had looked don't you think you would have found it was paid?

A. I don't know.

Q. It was no part of a State expenditure, but as a matter of fact, the sum with interest was paid to the State of Virginia in 1867, and the State of Virginia took it and accepted it.

Mr. Conrad: What part of the State of Virginia?

The Special Master: He has not taken into account any of those since 1860.

Mr. McClintic: We took the position, that it was his duty to see if that account had ever been paid.

The Special Master: That is open to you to show.

Mr. Harrison: If that is your theory you can put it in your evidence to show it.

Mr. McClintic: The evidence can be had from your own books.

Mr. Harrison: Well, let it go in.

Mr. McClintic: Why did you charge to us the Harpers' Ferry Raid, $174,684.79; upon what theory did you charge that?

The Witness: Primarily— 353

Mr. Harrison: State what it is for first.

The Witness: Claims for subsistence, quartermaster's stores, pay of soldiers, damages, medical department, and miscellaneous items incident to the maintenance of certain troops in Harpers Ferry, which is in West Virginia.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Why did you charge it, that is the question I asked?

A. Because it was an expenditure in West Virginia and I had an opinion of the counsel of Virginia.

Q. That is what I expected; I suppose that was the reason you did it.

The Special Master: That is, he was so instructed.

Mr. McClintic: Yes; I have no doubt that is the fact.

Mr. Conrad: I suppose that was proper.

The Special Master: I do not understand that they criticised the propriety of instructing him, although it may be that they do contest the propriety of the item.

Mr. Spooner: I do not criticise the propriety of his obeying the instruction.

Mr. Carlisle: But we claim that the instruction was erroneous.

Mr. Spooner: We want to be heard briefly on the propriety of the instruction.

The Special Master: That will come up later.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. There is another item, "payment to West Virginia counties for school purposes, $863,278.26," at the bottom of page 15. Why did you charge that to this account? 354

A. Because they were payments to West Virginia counties, as shown by the following schedules.

Q. Did you charge that of your own volition, or was it by instruction?

A. I don't remember of referring that matter to counsel; I think it was of my own volition.

Mr. Harrison: Say whether or not these charges, whether made by instruction or not, met with your approval?

The Witness: This Harpers' Ferry raid did meet my approval. This certainly did, because I think the original charge originated with me. It was the intention to make the charge.

Mr. McClintic: Do you think it makes much difference whether it met with his approval?

Mr. Harrison: It might; we will see later on.

The Special Master: You want it for what it is worth, anyway?

Mr. McClintic: Counsel approved these directions.

The Special Master: I understand that both counsel and auditor concurred in their propriety.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Mr. Potter, did you take any account in your statements anywhere of the dividends paid by any of the banks in West Virginia to the government of Virginia—banks such as the Northwestern?

A. They are not included in these charges.

Q. Anywhere; in any account?

A. In none of our schedules are they included.

Q. Are what you might term the bonus stocks, what the statute terms bonus stocks, some sort of a license, included in any of your accounts? 355

The Special Master: What is that? I don't understand that.

Mr. McClintic: What the statute of Virginia termed a bonus stock which is really a license to do business, as I understand. Were they included in any of your accounts?

The Witness: Not that I know of.

The Special Master: What were those licenses issued by the State of Virginia?

Mr. McClintic: The State of Virginia exacted some sort of a toll from the banks for doing business in some shape, in the shape of a bonus of stock or license in some form. I cannot exactly state what it was now.

The Special Master: In other words, they required some special consideration from them for the exercise of their franchises?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Witness: Do you want the information about the Mountain Lake turnpike that you asked me before lunch to give you?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Witness: The first information we got about that was from an ordinary map, which showed a small lake near Walker's Mountain, and we pursued the research further, and found that there was a town called Mountain Lake, or there is a town called Mountain Lake, in Giles County, and going further, to the old 356 nine section map, a copy of which is in the land office at Richmond, it shows a turnpike from this little lake, which we have decided is the Mountain Lake referred to, across the mountain to Salt Sulphur Springs, in Monroe County.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. What distances, respectively?

A. The distance is 20 miles; and the post route map was scaled, and as near as we can get it on a map of that kind we estimate that it is ten miles in each State.

Q. Does the act show where that road was to begin and end?

A. I have no recollection in regard to the act authorizing it.

Q. How do you know where it began and where it ended?

A. I have just explained to you the theory on which we decided where it began and where it ended.,

Q. Your theory was that you found two things by that name and jumped to that conclusion?

A. I don't think we jumped to that conclusion. It was a place called Mountain Lake.

Q. A place called Mountain Lake, in Giles County?

A. Yes.

Q. And a place called Salt Sulphur Springs in Monroe County?

A. Yes ,sir.

Q. And you decided the road went between those two points?

A. There is a road between those two points, and we decided that was the road referred to. 357

Q. Do you know that that money was expended on that road, or that any money was expended on that road?

A. I cannot state positively it was.

Q. You found no report showing that it was, did you?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. You wished also to ask me something about Covington and Ohio, sections 19 and 20?

A. Yes, sir; sections 19 and 20. I asked you the distance, I believe.

A. The distance was 3,650 feet from the beginning of section 19 to the entrance of the tunnel; and it was 2,234 feet from the entrance of the tunnel on the Virginia side to the State line. It was 2,241 feet from the State line to the end of the tunnel, and it was 2,375 feet from there to section 21, section 20 lying somewhere between those two poles. We are told by H. C. Whitcomb, formerly assistant chief engineer—

Mr. Anderson: Chief engineer.

A. (Continuing) Chief engineer of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, that the West Virginia end of this tunnel was bricked, on account of the character of the soil through which the tunnel was driven. That end of the tunnel is longer, by about 200 feet, than the Virginia end of the tunnel. The West Virginia approach is about 1,300 feet shorter than the Virginia approach; but the character of the land is more precipitous at the West Virginia end than at the Virginia end, and consequently there are greater cuts at the Virginia end, and we allow the additional expense of 358 bricking that West Virginia end, to offset the greater length of the approach on the West Virginia side, which is as near an estimate as we could make.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. That was the statement of Major Whitcomb that you are basing that on?

A. Only with respect to the bricking. The other information we obtained from this profile.

The Special Master: What is that—the profile (indicating)?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: This is a copy of the original profile?

Mr. Conrad: Show it to the judge.

(The profile referred to is examined by the Special Master and explained by the witness to the Special Master.)

Mr. McClintic: I want to ask you one other question on that $863,000. Where did that fund come from?

Mr. Harrison: Do you mean the school fund?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

The Witness: We obtained our information from journals A, B and C of the Literary Fund.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Where did the money come from; where did the literary fund get it?

A. I don't know; I think it was received from the general funds. 359

Q. From taxation, or in what way?

A. I believe the literary fund received the capitation tax, and certain interest on investments.

Q. Do you know how much money it received during that period in which that $863,000 was being charged, from capitations?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know how much it received from investments?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make any effort to find out those things?

A. I did not consider it necessary for the purpose of this —

Q. Just answer yes or no.

A. No, sir.

Q. You do know, though, that part of it came from capitations, and part of it from investments?

A. That is my recollection, and I believe I am right.

Q. Did any come from any other source?

A. The State may have appropriated certain sums to the literary fund during that period. I do not recall.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. I see from this statement that you charged $863,000 and some dollars directly to West Virginia on account of money expended there for educational purposes. That is correct, is it?

A. That is correct.

Q. When you come over to the ordinary expenses of the 360
State government of Virginia, the whole State under another clause of that decree, you charge the money expended by the State of Virginia for education purposes within the limits of what is now the State as ordinary expenses, do you not?

A. No; all the expenses through the literary fund were eliminated.

Q. Well, the University of Virginia and the Military School and some other things is all you have taken there.

A. Well, general educational institutions, colleges and things like that, yes; but not for the education boards, the boards in the various counties.

Q. What distinction do you make between those two?

A. These same payments were made to the counties of Virginia and we excluded those. Payments similar to those were made to Virginia counties.

Q. What I am trying to get at is this. The expenditures for educational purposes in Virginia belonged to the ordinary expenses of the State; why did not expenditures for education purposes for West Virginia belong to the ordinary expenses of the State?

A. We did not take all money for educational purposes in Virginia into the ordinary expenses of the government.

Q. You took some of it?

A. But all moneys paid direct to the counties were excluded from this account?

Q. In Virginia? 361

A. In Virginia.

Mr. Conrad: All universities you refer to belonged to the State of Virginia.

Mr. Carlisle: I understand that; but the point I wanted information on was this. If that money expended here for a similar purpose, that is for educational purposes, belonged to the ordinary expenses, why did not money expended in West Virginia for educational purposes also belong to ordinary expenses, so we would be charged not directly with the whole amount of $863,000, but our just share of it, as a part of the ordinary expenses of the State of Virginia?

The Special Master: Let us see if we understand what the witness has tried to do. I understand the witness has stated that items of this character, applicable to Virginia, do not enter into the accounts as a part of the ordinary expenses that are charged?

The Witness: That is correct.

The Special Master: So that while they are put in here as items disbursed in West Virginia, items of similar character do not appear in the ordinary expenses account, and none of these items occur in the charge that makes up the ordinary expense.

Mr. Harrison: That answers his question.

Mr. Carlisle: In other words, any money expended by the State of Virginia for common schools, we will say, inside of the territory now constituting the State of Virginia was not charged in this account either as ordinary expenses or otherwise. Is that what you mean to say?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That is what I understood him to say. 362

[Vol. 5, May 6, 1909. Cross Examination of A. G. Potter.]

Mr. McClintic: There are sundry matters that I asked you to look up and be able to testify about this morning. Are you in a position now to answer in regard to any of those?

The Witness: I am in a position to reply regarding the road from South Branch.

The Special Master: What exhibit does that relate to?

Mr. McClintic: 3, I think.

The Witness: C-1.

The Special Master: And what page?

The Witness: Page 15 of the new paging. South Branch and Kitterman's, $1,400.

The Special Master: South Branch and Kitterman's?

The Witness: South Branch and Kitterman's to Hardy County.

The Special Master: The question was whether that was all in West Virginia?

The Witness: Yes, sir. 391

The Special Master: What have you found?

The Witness (apparently reading): Journal B, page 753, shows $1,400 to William Seymour for road from South Branch to Brocks Gap, under the Act of the 7th of February, 1850, Chapter 95, section 6. This is posted to his account in Ledger A, page 140, and transferred to Ledger B, page 265, in 1862. The $1,400 is then transferred by Journal D, page 181, 1865, to the account headed "Road from the South Fork of the South Branch of the Potomac near Breaks, by way of Kitterman's, to the Moorefield North Branch Turnpike in Hardy County at Petersburg." Petersburg is in Hardy County, west of the South Branch of the South Fork of the Potomac. I should say it is in Grant County, West Virginia, split off from Hardy.

Mr. Anderson: That shows both termini to be in West Virginia?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. McClintic: That is dated when?

The Witness: The last entry is made in 1865, transferring it to the account under this head.

The Special Master: Have you any other items which you were asked to look up, which you can now testify to?

The Witness: No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. What was the reason for transferring those in 1865, so far as the books would show you anything?

A. I cannot say what the reason was.

Q. As a matter of fact, is not the road of the South Fork of the South Branch of the Potomac River to Petersburg and Hardy County entitled to a charge of $900 loan, and is not that a 392 wholly different road from the one you are speaking of?

A. I do not think it is, because the entry starts with an act of 1850, under the name of South Branch to Brock's Gap, and was later transferred to this other name.

Q. When we know that Brock's Gap is in Rockingham County and the South Branch is in Hardy and Pendleton Counties, would you not suppose the entry made when the road was built would be better than the one made fifteen years afterwards?

A. I don't know; I am sure I don't know whether it would or not. We would have to know more about the facts, and the facts beyond what I have stated here are not ascertainable from the books.

Q. Well, it is ascertainable from the books that when the road was started and when they knew what was doing they had it in one place, and then fifteen years afterwards it was changed to another place?

The Special Master: That is, there is an inconsistency?

The Witness: Yes; the entry indicates that.

Mr. Conrad: The road may have been built to extend much further than it actually did extend, and as it was constructed, it was between two points, the eastern point of which may have been further than provided for in the charter.

Mr. McClintic: What evidence have you of that? Are you testifying?

Mr. Conrad: No; I am not testifying; I am explaining an 393 obvious solution of the matter. Here is a record of West Virginia which shows the terminus of that road to be within that State.

Mr. McClintic: Where is the record and when was it made. This road connects at Brock's Gap.

The Witness: This is from the Board of Public Works. I merely said that this information was taken from the Board of Public Works ledger.

Mr. McClintic: Of what State?

The Witness: The State of Virginia.

The Special Master: Have you any information except what you get from the books?

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Conrad: Will you please give me the last date you read.

The Special Master: If that is to be supplemented by oral testimony that will come from another source, evidently. Is there anything further on that?

Mr. McClintic: No, sir.

[Vol. 5. May 6, 1909.]

JOHN B. LIGHTFOOT, JR.

was called as witness for the plaintiff, and being first duly 408 sworn, testified as follows:

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. What is your profession or occupation, Mr. Lightfoot?

A. I am a lawyer.

Q. How long have you practiced law?

A. Nearly five years.

Q. Please state to his Honor your connection, if any, during the last year or eighteen months, with any investigation or accounts which have been had in connection with this case?

A. When the expert accountant for the State of Virginia came to Richmond I was employed through the Attorney General to assist him by such means and methods as circumstances at various times might require, largely in connection with collecting and securing for their use the various documents of the State, as we might find them at different places. When Mr. Potter, the accountant, came and brought with him his force of assistants, from the time that they arrived until they left I was with them constantly, connected with their work of accounting. I am not personally an accountant, so that my connection with the accounting work has been only that of an assistant under the direction of Mr. Potter. Incidentally to the existing work with him at the request of the Attorney General, I made an independent investigation into the expenditures within the boundaries of West Virginia, under the clause of the decree referring to that matter. It was not my intention at the time to make anything more than a 409 memorandum for the use of counsel so far as it might be needed. However, the report was made the nature of an account, because that was the only way in which I could make it out so that it would serve its best purpose; but the report does not purport to be and is not the report of an expert accountant. It is my observation and my conclusion from the figures which I found in the published reports of the Board of Public Works, the published reports of the auditor and second auditor in the documents of the House of Delegates and in such original books of entry as the Board of Public Works, of the Auditor's office and of the second Auditor's office, and of the various internal improvement companies as I found occasion to examine. That report I have here.

Q. From your examination did you make up a statement or a report as to the expenditures within the counties now constituting West Virginia, and if so, what period was covered by that report?

A. I covered the period between 1820 and December 31, 1860.

Q. Have you a copy of that report?

A. I have one before me.

Mr. Anderson: A copy of this, if your Honor please, was left by me at the office of the Attorney General of West Virginia on the 7th of October last, and he acknowledged it afterwards to me.

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir; we have a copy.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. From what source did you get the figures or statement 410 of fact made in that report, Mr. Lightfoot?

A. The statement of facts and figures shown there were obtained from the published reports of the Board of Public Works, as contained in the separate volumes of the reports of the Board of Public Works, and also as contained in the documents of the House of Delegates; also the reports of the Second Auditor; also the original manuscript journal of the Board of Public Works; also from original maps of internal improvement companies; also from the reports of C. Crozet, Chief Engineer, under the Board of Public Works, and from the original books of entry in the Second Auditor's office and in charge of the corporation commission which deal with internal improvement matters.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Does this differ from Mr. Potter's report?

A. To a slight extent; yes, sir.

Q. Will you point out the difference?

Mr. Anderson: The differences will be pointed out as we go along.

The Special Master: Do you want to use the whole report or only such parts of it as relate to discrepancies between it and the report of Mr. Potter?

Mr. Anderson: We will file the whole report.

Mr. Conrad: We put it in, in large part, because it does differ from Mr. Potter's statement, to show two independent lines of inquiry.

The Special Master: Have you a duplicate of it, so that I can follow along with it?

Mr. Harrison: You will be furnished with a duplicate, 411 your Honor.

The Special Master: In order to follow it intelligently, I must have a copy as we go along.

Mr. McClintic: What page do you begin with?

Mr. Anderson: The report is not paged, but we begin on page 4.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Lightfoot, was your report prepared before Mr. Potter's was completed, or afterwards?

A. My report was prepared before Mr. Potter's was completed, according to my memory. This is dated June 4th. I corrected this report.

Q. Was it revised?

A. This report was revised subsequent to the time it was originally presented; yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: You say you corrected that report. Just finish that answer.

A. I don't understand.

Mr. Harrison: What did you say about subsequently correcting the report?

A. The report as first put in was subsequently revised as to a number of points which developed later, that needed revising.

Mr. Conrad: Revised by you?

A. By me, personally.

Mr. Harrison: And handed to me?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: What have we here; the complete 412 revision?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir; that is his revised report. As will be seen by counsel and by Master, Mr. Lightfoot has adopted a somewhat different arrangement from that adopted by Mr. Potter.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. From page 4 to 6 you have a statement of expenditures by the Commonwealth of Virginia within the boundaries of West Virginia for internal improvements, lunatic asylums, banks, law library, and miscellaneous items, since any part of the debt existing January 1st, 1861, was contracted, and the first statement you have here is a statement the caption of which is "Expended through the Board of Public Works. Joint stock and State turnpikes lying wholly within West Virginia." The first item is the Abbs Valley and Tug Road. Do you remember whether that was a joint stock company?

A. I do not. I took no note of the different internal improvement companies to which subscriptions were made for the joint stock or to which payments were direct by resolution or authority of the special act. I only took note of the fact that the money was spent.

Q. Is that road wholly within West Virginia?

A. This road is wholly within West Virginia, according to my report.

Q. You have the item $4,450, as expended by the Commonwealth on that road?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that a correct interest? 413

A. It is.

Q. Then the Beverly and Fairmount road, $75,384.65. Does that road lie wholly in West Virginia?

A. It does.

Mr. McClintic: That is admitted.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. And the original records show that the State expended that amount?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that true as to all the items in this account on pages four and five of your report? I ask this in order to save time.

A. It is, to the best of my knowledge.

By the Special Master:

Q. In what respect do those items differ from the report made by Mr. Potter?

A. I have not made a minute examination, Mr. Littlefield.

Mr. Anderson: He has not classified them in exactly the same way.

The Witness: To get the exact difference in each item.

The Special Master: Then you would have to make a very careful analysis to get at the differences in details?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: You need not bother to do it now, that is, as far as I am concerned. I did not know but you had it right at hand.

A. I think the items on pages four and five are the same in this and in his.

Mr. Carlisle: As to amounts? 414

A. As to amounts.

The Special Master: You mean the subject matter and the amounts expended?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir; we have Mr. Potter's statement here, and they agree as to that.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. On page 6 you have a statement of the expenditures upon turnpikes and State roads lying partly in Virginia and partly in West Virginia. The first is the Berkeley and Hampshire Road, upon which, according to your statement, the total expenditure by the Commonwealth was $16,572, of which you ascertained that $13,655.33 was expended in West Virginia, or 82.4 per cent of the total expenditure. How did you ascertain those figures? These are what we may call now interstate roads.

The Special Master: That is identical with the item in Mr. Potter's report.

Mr. Harrison: That is right, sir. There is no difference there.

A. With respect to the road to which you refer, the Berkeley and Hampshire, I secured the 82.4 per cent chargeable to West Virginia, as follows. By the Act of March 1, 1851, page 103, the road is shown to run from Martinsburg in Berkeley County, by way of Boyd's Gap and Bloomery Gap in Hampshire County to some point on the Northwestern Turnipke at or near French's Tavern. The Board of Public Works printed report, Volume 17, part 2, page 289, 415 stated the length of that road to be 45½ miles. The Board of Public Works printed report for 1858, at page 23, states that all of it has been finished. By scaling the maps, the length of this road in Virginia is found to be eight miles, and the length in West Virginia 35 and one-half miles. In Crozet's report of 1848—

Mr. Anderson: Crozet was the State Engineer.

A. The distance from Martinsburg to Bloomery Gap is stated to be 29 and one quarter miles. Bloomery Gap is taken to be one and a quarter miles west of Frederick and Hampshire line. By figuring the percentages from those calculations, I arrived at 82.4 per cent total distance in West Virginia. Therefore, 82.4 per cent of the total expenditures was charged to West Virginia.

Q. Does your report contain memoranda showing how you arrived at that result?

A. The report does.

Q. The report itself?

A. Yes, in this instance. In some instances, of course, it does not.

Mr. Spooner: Does that differ from Mr. Potter's statement?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir.

The Special Master: Do you care, gentlemen, to go over these items where there is no discrepancy?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir.

The Special Master: Unless some question is raised about 416 them on the other side?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir; I do not.

The Special Master: Unless there is some question made about these items, where he agrees with Mr. Potter, there is no occasion to spend time on them.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Did you ascertain the facts as stated on this page 6 as to these expenditures, aggregating $829,072.09, upon turnpikes and state roads lying partly in Virginia and partly in West Virginia, from the original records and reports of the Commonwealth to which you have referred?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And maps?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now as to bridge companies—bridge companies solely in West Virginia. You find the total expense bill was $81,412.50 upon those bridges, and they are enumerated and described on page 7 of your report?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the facts and figures stated in that account ascertained by you in the same way as you mentioned with respect to turnpikes and roads?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, expenditures upon navigation companies—Coal River Navigation Company, Guyandotte Navigation Company, Monongalia Navigation Company and Tug Fork Navigation Company are found on the same page, page 7, and the aggregate, according to that account, is $216,020. Were those expenditures traced and ascertained by you and determined in the same way as the 417 others?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: General, do they differ from Mr. Potter's?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir; they agree exactly.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Then you have a statement of money expended directly from the State Treasury on turnpikes and State roads lying wholly in West Virginia between those periods, amounting to $77,586.13.

The Special Master: The copy I have here shows $77,886.13.

The Witness: I think, General Anderson, the copy you have is not one of the revised copies.

Mr. Anderson: It is not. This is one of the first copies furnished.

The Witness: I think that was a copy which was made from one of the originals and not corrected. I have the corrected sheets here, however. You can follow them.

Mr. Anderson: My copy, which was a revised copy, I gave to his Honor.

Mr. Spooner: Have you another copy which you can spare?

The Witness: I have not, Mr. Spooner. I only had three revised copies.

The Special Master: Is there any discrepancy between that list and Mr. Potter's figures, Mr. Anderson?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Then the next account, on page 9, is with reference to turnpikes and State roads lying partly in Virginia and partly 418 in West Virginia. What figures have you for that, Mr. Lightfoot?

A. Exclusive of the Kanawha Turnpike road and extension of same, and the Kanawha River and Board, the total is $6,080.50.

Q. Lying partly in Virginia and partly in West Virginia?

A. Expended directly from the State treasury.

Q. Including that, how much is it?

A. Including the Kanawha Turnpike road and extension of same, and the Kanawha River and Board—they are not shown as added there.

The Special Master: The addition would be $424,612.00, as I have it here. Is that right?

A. That is right.

The Special Master: Is there any discrepancy in those items, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison: There is a slight discrepancy.

The Special Master: In what item?

Mr. Harrison: In the Skidmore Fork item.

The Special Master: How much?

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Potter gives his opinion there as 50 per cent., and Mr. Lightfoot at 58 per cent. There is a difference of $80.

The Special Master: Upon which do you rely?

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. How did you get yours, Mr. Lightfoot? You find 58 per cent. and Mr. Potter 50 per cent. of the road is in West Virginia.

The Special Master: Which computation do you rest upon? 419

Mr. Harrison: We rest upon Mr. Potter's.

The Special Master: Then you do not need to spend any time in going into this detail.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. On page 10 you have a statement of the expenditures by the Commonwealth of Virginia in West Virginia on railroads, and the first item embraces the Winchester & Potomac, 62.5 per cent. in West Virginia, $168,750. How did you get at that, Mr. Lightfoot?

A. Let me find the reference to that, Major.

The Special Master: Is there any discrepancy in that item?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir.

Mr. McClintic: It is a wonderful coincidence, your Honor, that both of them get at the same percentage on both of those things.

The Special Master: I suppose it is assumed they have proceeded upon an accurate hypothesis, and therefore they must come out together. Is there any discrepancy in any of the items on page 10, Mr. Anderson?

Mr. Anderson: There is, in the Covington & Ohio.

The Special Master.: There is no discrepancy between the items with relation to the two railroads?

Mr. Anderson: There is not as to the Winchester and Potomac. The measurement is just the same.

By Mr. Anderson: 420

Q. Now, you find there were $1,158,214.49 expended by Virginia in the Covington & Ohio Railroad.

The Special Master: That is not the way I have it here. I have it $1,187,149.09.

A. The correction in that sheet would show what Mr. Littlefield has.

Mr. Anderson: What is the amount?

A. $1,187,149.09 to be accurate.

The Special Master: Does that agree with Mr. Potter?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir; there is a difference.

The Special Master: Larger or smaller?

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Potter's is smaller.

The Special Master: Upon which do you rely?

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Potter's. There is $25,000 difference.

The Special Master: Then you need not spend any time on this item, need you?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir.

The Witness: I would like to state that the difference comes in because Mr. Potter has worked his out upon a scientific theory of accounting. I was not able to follow the—

Mr. Carlisle: How did you know?

A. I was associated with Mr. Potter for seven and a half months. We consulted over this matter very largely. I assisted him to a large extent, and he assisted me to a larger. Consequently what Mr. Potter has there I am very familiar with, and what I have Mr. Potter is very familiar with. As I wanted to make an independent investigation and could not follow Mr. Potter's theoretical working out of accounts, I had to take my own practical ideas, and I consequently lost $25,000 by it. It is worth that much to get an accountant. 421

By the Special Master:

Q. In other words, Mr. Potter's figures are the figures of an expert and yours are the figures of a lawyer?

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. And they rely on the figures of the experts?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That disposes of that item, then, so far as this branch of examination goes. Of course I do not mean to shut you off, Mr. Anderson, on any of these except I want to get the issues, and make it as short as we can.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. The miscellaneous expenditures, I believe, agree. I wish to direct your attention to the amount expended by Virginia in banks in West Virginia, $500,000.

The Special Master: What page do you find that on?

Mr. Anderson: That is on page 10.

Q. How do you get at that, Mr. Lightfoot? Some question has been raised about that.

By the Special Master:

Q. Does that differ from Mr. Potter's statement?

A. There is a difference there; yes, sir.

Q. What is it; how much? 422

A. I think there is a difference of $50,000.

Q. Is yours larger or smaller?

A. Mine is larger, if I recollect correctly.

The Special Master: On which computation do you rely, on that item?

Mr. Harrison: Upon Mr. Potter's figures. He is the expert.

Mr. McClintic: They are both the same, $500,000.

The Witness: I thought Mr. Potter's was different. I did not remember.

The Special Master: Mr. Potter gets the same result in another way.

Mr. Harrison: Substantially; that is it.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. How did you get at the figures you have, $500,000? I have not been able to compare it, and I do not remember what Mr. Potter has.

A. I made up that statement from an examination, first of the documents of the House of Delegates, 1839-40, document 52, on banks situated in West Virginia. The statement there shows $450,000, held as follows: Northwestern Bank, in the name of the Commonwealth, $400,000; in the name of the Literary Fund, $50,000. In addition to the above, the Auditor's statement for the year ending September 30, 1861, Documents 61-2, document 7, page 12, shows 1,000 shares in the name of the Literary Fund in the bank of Fairmont, $50,000; making a total of $500,000. The expenditure of that $400,000 is shown in detail in the ledger in the auditor's office marked "1856-61," at page 55. The figures there shown make 423 up the $400,000. The item of $50,000, mentioned second, is shown in the documents 1861-2, document 7, page 17. The third item, in the same document, 7, page 12.

Q. Those items make the $500,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that agrees with Mr. Potter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have not found Mr. Potter's estimate. Now, the amount expended on account of the Harper's Ferry raid, as it is called?

A. There is a slight difference there, I think.

The Special Master: He is a little more than $2,000 less than Mr. Potter.

Mr. Harrison: About $2,000 less.

The Special Master: Which do you rely upon?

Mr. Harrison: We rely upon Mr. Potter:

The Special Master: Is it a fact that wherever discrepancies occur between the reports of Mr. Potter and Mr. Lightfoot, the plaintiff relies upon Mr. Potter?

Mr. Anderson: Yes; we rely upon Mr. Potter.

The Special Master: Then what occasion have you for taking the time with Mr. Lightfoot, under the circumstances, unless he is possessed of some information as to the original sources that is not possessed by Mr. Potter?

Mr. Harrison: It shows the result of an independent investigation, and we are introducing it for the purpose of corroborating the statements filed by Mr. Potter.

The Special Master: If they do not happen to agree, they 424 do not corroborate.

Mr. Harrison: As far as they do not agree, they do not corroborate; but so far as they do agree, and so far as the report shows the sources from which the information was derived, they are corroborative.

The Special Master: Very well.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Do you remember what you excluded that Mr. Potter included in his statement of the Harper's Ferry expenses?

A. I couldn't say, from memory, where we differed as to items.

The Special Master: That, of course, would be disclosed by a comparison, but there is no occasion to take up time for that if I may rely upon Mr. Potter's report as the authentic report. That is, I will not have any occasion to examine it for that purpose.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. You make the total expenditures in West Virginia, Mr. Lightfoot, as shown by the last two pages of your report, $5,770,677.48.

The Special Master: That is on page 10?

A. No, sir; page 11, the summarized report. They show the same figures, however. Page 11 is merely a summary of the foregoing.

The Special Master: Yes; I have it.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. The items aggregating that amount were determined by you in the same manner in which you have taken the details as to a number of items about which you have testified? 425

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is supported by the record and accounts in the public offices of the Commonwealth?

A. They were.

Mr. Anderson: We now offer that report.

The Special Master: Do you wish this all to go in, Mr. Anderson?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir; we want the statement to go in.

The Special Master: Just what you have called attention to in the examination?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir; the whole of it.

The Special Master: On page 12 there is a statement of the variance between these figures and those by J. M. Bennett in the report of the Virginia Debt Commission to Governor Jacob, August 9, 1871. Do we have any occasion for that?

Mr. Conrad: It is very important. Then it was the Auditor of Virginia who made the reports on which we rely. He afterwards returned to his home in West Virginia, at the close of the war, and was employed there to make a report by the Governor of West Virginia.

The Special Master: Well, this will become material, I suppose, so far as it tends to show what the actual conditions were; but the mere fact that a discrepancy existed between one accountant and another, of itself, standing alone, would not be very illuminating.

Mr. Conrad: The curious result was disclosed that the re- 426 port made by him under the auspices of West Virginia differed materially and essentially from the report made by him five years before, as Auditor of Virginia.

The Special Master: This has some tendency to affect the integrity or reliability of his reports.

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, both as an officer of old Virginia and as auditor of West Virginia.

Mr. Conrad: He was not the auditor of West Virginia.

Mr. Carlisle: He had been the auditor of Virginia.

Mr. Conrad: He had been the auditor of Virginia, but he never was the auditor of West Virginia.

Mr. Carlisle: Do you think the report in West Virginia was not correct?

Mr. Conrad: I know it was not correct.

Mr. Carlisle: Then what makes you think that the report by the same man in old Virginia was correct?

Mr. Anderson: It was just a compilation of figures.

The Special Master: That will come later.

Mr. Conrad: I will answer that later, or try to do it.

The Special Master: Then, as I understand, you offer the whole of this, Mr. Anderson?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: What shall we mark this? It relates to all of the various subjects, does it not?

Mr. Anderson: No, sir; it only relates to Article C-2.

The Special Master: Then it will be marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit C-2."

(The paper referred to is filed herewith, marked "Plain- 427 tiff's Exhibit C-2.")

Cross Examination.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. I understand you to say you are not an expert accountant, Mr. Lightfoot?

A. You are correct, sir.

Q. But an attorney at law.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were employed as an attorney in the case, were you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You were employed as an ottorney in the case, were you?

A. I was not employed as an attorney in the case.

Q. In what capacity were you employed?

A. I was employed in the broadest capacity that could be devised. It was to do anything which might assist the accountants in this matter, either in a legal way or in the matter of accounting, so far as my abilities went.

Q. In a subordinate capacity?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, as a subordinate, did you make, as you said a while ago, an independent examination of these things?

A. That is correct, sir.

Q. Not subject to the supervision or control in any way of Mr. Potter?

A. Not at all, sir.

Q. Did you consult with him from time to time while you were making the account? 428

A. Very frequently.

Q. What was the character of those consultations? What were they about, in a general way?

A. Let me illustrate. We will take the Covington & Ohio Railroad. When the accountants came to making up their report on the Covington & Ohio Railroad, we found that it involved largely a history of events and of the work of the Board of Public works—not of the Board of Public Works, but of the Commissioners who built that railroad. That tooks us through a large number of volumes of the report of the Board of Public Works and of the documents of the House of Delegates. We had to find the scheme under which the engineers built that road. We had to find the history of the various proposed routes, and the authority for the one which they finally adopted, and the cost of surveys on various routes, the division which the engineers made between Covington and the western end of the road, so as to divide the expenditures properly between Virginia and West Virginia. The conferences with Mr. Potter on that subject were of great assistance to me, and I do not hesitate to say the conferences with me were of great assistance to Mr. Potter. That is merely an illustration of the way we worked together.

Q. That is one instance?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I asked you for your general course while you were there acting as a subordinate to Mr. Potter, as I understood you to say you were.

A. Yes, sir. 429

Q. Did you not co-operate with Mr. Potter all the way through this investigation?

A. All the way through; yes, sir.

Q. So that it was not, as you said, an independent investigation on your part?

A. It was independent in this sense, that the report which I have here I made up from notes which I myself took during the work with Mr. Potter.

Q. I understand that. Then you submitted them to Mr. Potter, did you not?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not?

A. I did not.

Q. When you came to revise them, where did you get your information for your revision?

A. I got my information from the same sources.

Q. Did you go back to the original sources again?

A. Absolutely; yes, sir.

Q. Sources that were original with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Potter ever have that report?

A. Yes, sir; he made a copy of it.

Q. Did he have it before he made his report?

A. As to that I can't state positively. I think he did.

Q. Then, as I understand you, there are some differences between the amounts found by you and the amounts found by Mr. Potter? 430

A. In some instances; yes, sir.

Q. A few instances? About how many?

A. Probably not over three or four.

Q. Then, as I understand you, an independent investigation made by a gentleman who is not an expert accountant at all, of all these numerous accounts, agrees, except in three or four instances, with the investigation made by an expert accountant?

A. That is correct, as to the expenditures within the counties comprising the State of West Virginia. You understand, Senator, this report does not go beyond that item.

Q. Then if Mr. Potter is an expert accountant, you are one also, are you not?

A. If I am as close to Mr. Potter's results as this, I think I might say I am.

Q. You are almost as good an expert accountant as he is?

A. I should think so.

Q. Mr. Lightfoot, did you consult Mr. Potter at any time during this investigation as to what should and what should not be included in his accounts?

A. In his accounts?

Q. Yes.

A. I think I had better answer that question generally by saying that possibly there is no question which arose in connection with these accounts in toto that was not discussed between Mr. Potter and myself.

Q. If, for instance, Mr. Potter had charged certain items 431 under the head of ordinary expenses, if he had to charge certain others as moneys expended in West Virginia, then he had to credit West Virginia with certain moneys which had been paid into the public treasury by the counties now composing that State. Did you advise Mr. Potter as to what he should include in any one of these accounts, and what he should exclude from any one of these accounts, as a lawyer, as an attorney? You were there in that capacity as I understand you?

A. No, sir; I was not there in the capacity of an attorney to advise Mr. Potter.

Q. Well, you were not an accountant, you say?

A. No, sir.

Q. In what capacity were you acting?

A. I was there in the capacity of a subordinate, to assist in any way I might.

Q. A subordinate accountant, or a subordinate—

A. If you will pardon me, let me be understood.

Q. I do not want to confuse you. I want to get the facts. That is all.

A. It is a fact that I want clearly stated. I would not like my position to be misunderstood. It was clearly understood, when I was assigned to this work, that while my legal opinion might be valuable, it was not to be final. In fact, it was not to be taken in important matters at all, without reference to a regularly employed counsel.

Q. I did not ask you whether your opinion was final or not. 432
I simply asked you if you did or did not consult with him and advise him?

A. As I have stated, I undoubtedly did, and I gave my opinion in numerous instances.

Q. Did he follow your opinion?

A. That I couldn't tell you.

Q. You can look at his account and see. Does your account differ from his as to the classification of any of those matters about which you gave him advice?

A. I would not attempt to answer, it covers such a multitude of detail.

Q. You consulted him a great many times, did you not?

A. Numerous times. In fact, we were working together. He would sit at this end of this desk, and I would sit at the other end, frequently.

Q. There are only three or four differences, as you have already stated, between your account and the account of the expert?

A. I think that is all, sir.

Q. Are they on figures or on classification of the accounts?

A. As to the main differences—well, what do you mean by classification?

Q. I mean whether a particular item should be charged as an ordinary expense or should be charged as a direct payment to West Virginia, or should be credited to West Virginia as a payment by her counties into the public treasury. You know the division of each county, under the decree of the Court.

A. Yes. The discrepancy of the Covington & Ohio Rail- 433 road—

Q. I am not asking for any particular thing.

A. I can best illustrate it in that way.

Mr. McClintic: We do not want an illustration. We want facts.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Well, go on.

A. The discrepancy in the case of the Covington & Ohio Railroad, which, according to my memory, covers about $25,000 loss in the difference between Mr. Potter's method of dividing the administrative expenses and my method of dividing the same, is one instance. There is a discrepancy in the Northwestern turnpike accounts, which, according to the best of my memory, is for the same reason—probably that and the Staunton and Parkersburg.

Q. You see, Mr. Lightfoot, I am not asking you anything on that subject. I am asking you whether you and Mr. Potter differed at any time with respect to the classification of the accounts; that is, to which account a particular item should go.

Mr. Anderson: About any matter in this account or the other account?

Mr. Carlisle: All the accounts. I want to know in other words, if his account and Mr. Potter's account agree as to the classification of the items, and if so, how that came about?

A. They do. 434

Q. How did that come about? You are not an expert accountant, and he is. How did this agreement between you and him come about?

A. Because, so far as I see, there is only one possible classification—that is, into turnpikes wholly within the State of West Virginia, turnpikes partly—

M. Lightfoot, I am very unfortunate in not being able to make myself understood.

The Special Master: The question simply is, Mr. Lightfoot, inasmuch as you and Mr. Potter did agree on the classification, how does it happen you did agree?

Mr. Harrison: But there is no item in this statement except money spent wholly or partly in West Virginia.

The Special Master: Then it may be one great classification. There are various items.

Mr. Carlisle: There are three different material accounts.

The Special Master: The simple question now is how they came to agree on the classification between themselves. That is the only question asked now.

Mr. Carlisle: That is my question.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. There are three accounts there which I have already enumerated, and your report and Mr. Potter's report, if I understand it, agree substantially on the items contained in those classifications. I do not mean as to amounts now. You agree that this item should go into this account, and another one into another account, under the decree of the Court. How did you happen to agree on this classification—not on amounts. I am not talking about 435 amounts at all.

A. I understand you. May I ask you again, Senator, to explain the meaning of classification?

Q. I will state it again. I can state it from the decree.

Q. Would you take my report and illustrate?

A. That is not necessary at all. I don't know what your report is on that subject. The decree directs the Master to ascertain three things which affect the accounts between these two states. The first is that West Virginia shall be credited with all the money which the counties now composing that state, paid into the Treasury of the State of Virginia during the time this debt was being created?

A. May I interrupt you? My report takes no account whatever of that.

Q. What does your report relate to?

A. Only expenditures within the Commonwealth.

Q. Leave that out, then. There are two other accounts. The decree, then, directs the Master to ascertain and report West Virginia's just proportion of the ordinary expenses for the State of Virginia, which of course requires him to ascertain what the ordinary expenses of Virginia amounted to during that period.

A. May I interrupt there?

Q. Yes.

A. My report takes no account whatsoever of that.

The Special Master: His report, Mr. Carlisle, is only made under paragraph 3, plaintiff's exhibit C, which relates simply to expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia, as I understand it. I may be wrong about this, but as I understand it Mr. 436
Lightfoot's report is confined entirely to that particular item.

Mr. Harrison: Absolutely.

The Special Master; And up to date he has not testified about any other item? The report submitted covers only that particular item, and does not go any further.

Mr. Carlisle: Then on that item, we will confine ourselves to the report. I thought his report covered the whole thing.

The Special Master: I had that impression in the beginning, but I find it is confined to that paragraph.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. I understand, then, Mr. Lightfoot, that this report refers to expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia in the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia since any part of the debt was contracted. That is the only one, as I understand now, that you investigated.

A. That is correct.

Q. Does your report agree with Mr. Potter's report under that item of the decree?

A. It does not.

Q. In what respects does it differ?

A. There is a discrepancy probably amounting to nearly $50,000. 437

Q. I did not ask for dollars and cents. I have expressly excluded that. Do you agree as to the items you have charged under that against West Virginia? Did you agree upon the subject matters that should go in there?

A. Practically, I think we did. I know of no instance in which we did not.

Q. You consulted about that, did you not?

A. Undoubtedly, yes.

Q. Did or did you not advise him on that subject, as to what he should put in?

A. In specific instances, I have no doubt that I did.

Q. Did he take your advice?

A. I couldn't tell you, Senator.

Q. His report will show you that?

A. I have no doubt he did.

Q. He put them in?

A. I have no doubt of it.

Q. Now, there is an item in there of eight hundred and some odd thousand dollars for school expenditures in the counties of West Virginia, Did you consult with him about that?

A. Yes, sir; as to that item. Let me find that item. It is added in ink at the end of my report.

Q. After you had made your report?

A. After I had made my report. It is to indicate, and is a fact, that as to that item, I made no personal investigation. I took Mr. Potter's figure entirely, in order to complete the nature of my report.

Q. So you had no consultation about that item, you mean to say, before Mr. Potter included it in his report? 438

A. Before what date?

Q. Before he included it in his report. You took that item from Mr. Potter's figures?

A. Entirely so; yes, sir.

Q. Previous to the time when you took it from his figures, you had no consultation about it, as I understand it?

A. Yes; we had. We had worked together on compiling those figures of his report. I had not included it in mine. I had no notes on the subject.

Q. I misunderstood you. I thought you said you did not investigate that subject at all.

A. Not for the purpose of my report. I made no notes for my own purposes on that item.

Q. Do you know why you had not included that in your report, when you took up the specification of the decree, to ascertain what money had been expended by the State of Virginia in the counties composing the State of West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir; I can explain that, I think. The original idea of this report was to furnish to the attorney general or the counsel some idea as to the expenditures for the physical internal improvements. It was intended primarily to cover the turnpike companies, the bridge and navigation companies and the railroads.

Q. That is what is covered by the decree.

A. I was not instructed to do that by the attorney general, but I got it up on my own idea, and later when the report was completed and handed in, I found that Mr. Potter had in- 439 cluded the school commissions in his report.

Q. You put it on the bottom of yours?

A. I put it on the bottom of mine, to make a full figure.

Q. Mr. Lightfoot, in apportioning the amounts which were expended on turnpikes, roads, bridges and navigation companies, which you had to do, you say, by ascertaining the percentage of the work in the one State or in the other?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you and Mr. Potter collaborate on that together?

A. A great deal; yes, sir.

Q. Who made the measurements on the maps?

A. Why, we both made them.

Q. Did Mr. Potter or any one of his assistants go over all those measurements, so far as you know?

A. So far as I know, Mr. Potter or one of his assistants personally went over all of them.

Q. Did Mr. Potter or any of his assistants, so far as you know, go through the books to see whether your amounts were right or not?

A. No, sir; they did not check my amounts. They checked their own.

Q. So that the amounts which are reported there by Mr. Potter are the amounts found by you?

A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Not by him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Not by any of his assistants? 440

A. That is correct sir.

Q. Do they disagree from Mr. Potter's in any way?

A. They do not, except in the one or two instances mentioned.

Q. Do you know how that disagreement came about?

A. May I state that now?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Referring back to this Covington & Ohio matter—

The Special Master. You do not need to go over that again, Mr. Carlisle:

The Witness: Then I can't explain how it came about

The Special Master: You need not explain that one instance again, because you have already explained it twice. If there are any other instances, you may explain them. You do not care to have him go over that again, Mr. Carlisle?

Mr. Carlisle: Oh, no, sir.

The witness: I understood you to ask me the question, and it would require repetition.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. What other instance have you beside the Covington & Ohio?

A. The Staunton and Parkersburg and the Northwestern Turnpike are the only two I recall right now.

Q. How did that disagreement come about?

A. From the different methods we used in getting at it.

Q. In getting at the amount? 441

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you just now to say that neither Mr. Potter nor his assistants investigated the amounts at all; that they took your figures on the amounts?

The Special Master: You did not get the whole of his answer, Mr. Carlisle; I noticed particularly in answer to that question that he said they did not examine as to his items, but did examine as to their own.

Mr. Carlisle: That is one of your items?

A. Let me make that answer a little more clear. I said that neither Mr. Potter or his assistants checked my amounts in order to ascertain if they were correct. They themselves made up independently their amounts and checked those.

Mr. Carlisle: I misunderstood you entirely?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: I thought you did. That is substantially what he said before.

Mr. Carlisle: My question to the witness was whether they had investigated the amounts, and he said no, as I understood him.

A. We compared them, of course, to see if we had arrived at the same conclusions.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Yes; I understand that. Now, you were asked about this celebrated John Brown raid. Did you investigate that account?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you come to investigate that account, when 442 you say you started in to ascertain only the amounts expended for improvements in West Virginia? Did you think that was an improvement?

A. I investigated that at the special request of the attorney general.

Q. That was beyond the scope of your investigation, as I understood it, at the start? That was beyond the scope of your report?

A. No, sir. It was beyond the scope of my report as I had personally intended to make one.

Q. If you started out as you said a while ago to investigate the accounts of money expended in West Virginia for internal improvements, et cetera, would not the John Brown raid expenditure be outside the scope of that investigation?

A. As to internal improvements?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. It would be outside of the scope of my report. Physical improvements, was the idea of my report.

Q. Why did you suppose that was an expenditure to be charged to the counties composing the State of West Virginia?

A. Because so far as—

Q. As a lawyer, now, why did you suppose that expenditure was an expenditure chargeable alone to the counties composing the State of West Virginia?

A. So far as my judgment went in the items included they were expenditures within the counties of West Virginia.

Q. I suppose you included the idea that they were expended 443 for the benefit of the counties of West Virginia?

A. You suppose I included that idea?

Mr. Anderson: The decree does not take account of beneficial expenditures in West Virginia.

Mr. Carlisle: Money expended for the benefit of West Virginia exclusively.

Mr. Conrad: Not at all.

Mr. Carlisle: We differ about that. A great deal of money was expended in West Virginia during this period for various purposes, but it was for the common benefit.

Mr. Conrad: I think the tunnel through the Blue Ridge Mountains, which is entirely in the State of Virginia, was as much for the benefit of the counties of West Virginia as of Virginia.

Mr. Spooner: You do not see any connection between that and the John Brown raid, do you?

Mr. Conrad: The parallel, Senator, is that the body politic is like the human being. The food put in the mouth goes for the nutrition of the whole body, and not for the mouth alone.

Mr. Carlisle: Suppose the body politic had three heads, the restored government, the government at Richmond and the West Virginia government.

The Special Master: That is a sort of an aggravated Siamese twins illustration. You may proceed with the examination.

Mr. Carlisle: I want to see what the account is for, what 444 the items of the expenditure were made for.

Mr. Harrison: Which account?

Mr. Carlisle: I want to see whether it includes anything for the trial of John Brown, the sheriff's fees for hanging, or whatever was in there.

A. My notes, so far as this report has it on that subject is:

"The above is obtained from the reports of the Auditing Board of March 15, 1860, and January 1, 1861, as published in Senate Documents 1859-60, document 62 and Senate Documents extra session 1861, document 2."

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Do they give the items?

A. They give all the items.

Q. You haven't them?

A. I haven't them here; no sir. I picked out such items as I thought in my own judgment were proper.

Q. That is what I want to get at. Will you state to the Master what character of items you included?

A. I find a further note:

"The basis of charges to West Virginia are for expenditures at Harper's Ferry and Charlestown, but expenditures for arms, ordinance, blankets, overcoats, and transportation are not included in the above."

Q. The trial of John Brown, though, and the expense of it, are included there?

A. No; I am very sure the trial was not included in the report.

Q. You spoke of Harper's Ferry and Charlestown. That is where he was tried and executed. What expenses at 445 Charlestown are included?

A. I can't tell you without having that report here. There are in that report the data and vouchers for everything that they paid.

Q. Could you get those details some time to-day?

Mr. Conrad: We can get them in fifteen minutes. They are in Senate Documents 1859-60.

A. It is very possible I have them here in my notes.

Mr. Carlisle: I do not care so much about the details, because the whole trial, as a matter of history, is in the record.

The Special Master: He thinks he has the details here.

Mr. Carlisle: What was it at Charlestown?

Mr. Anderson: The charge was for the support of 1,500 troops for a month or two. I don't remember the time.

Mr. Carlisle: At Charlestown?

Mr. Anderson: Chiefly at Charlestown. The money was expended in West Virginia.

The Special Master: Do you find the items, Mr. Lightfoot?

A. No, sir; I do not find them.

Mr. Carlisle: I am through with the witness.

Mr. McClintic: I would like to ask one or two questions on the road matter.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You charge the Back Creek Valley road, and Mr. Potter does not charge it. Which is correct in that instance?

A. If you expect me to answer that question, I will say 446
I am.

Q. Where is the Back Creek Valley Road; in West Virginia?

A. Just a moment, sir. I will give you some information on that.

The Special Master: On what page do you find that?

Mr. McClintic: It is on page 6.

Mr. Conrad: It is partly in Hampshire and Frederick counties, but the bulk of it is in Hampshire county.

A. With reference to the Back Creek Valley road, I find this note:

"Virginia 58 per cent, $661.20; West Virginia, 42 per cent, $478,80; total expenditures, $1,140.00. Act of March 8th, 1856, page 134. Road to run from the Northwest Turnpike near Lockhart's Tavern, in Frederick county, up Back Creek Valley to Capon Springs in Hampshire County. See Act of March 29, 1860, page 302, for States subscription. The 'nine section' map shows this road beginning about ½ mile west of Lockhart's Gap and running to Capon Springs. By scaling that I find the total distance to be 16¾ miles; in Frederick county, 9¾ miles; in Hardy county, 7 miles."

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Is that Hardy or Hampshire?

A. It should be Hampshire. That is evidently a mistake.

Q. You charge there the Abbs Valley and Tug road wholly in West Virginia, on page 4. Do you know Abbs is in Tazewell County, Virginia? 447

A. Yes, Abbs Valley is in Tazewell County.

Q. Where they had the celebrated Indian massacre and various and sundry other historical episodes?

A. I don't personally recollect it, but I have no doubt that is true.

Q. Do you say that is all in West Virginia or partly in West Virginia, that Abbs Valley and Tug road?

A. I have it wholly in West Virginia.

Q. Is that your best judgment?

A. That is my best judgment.

Q. On page 8 you have the Allegheny mountain turnpike wholly in West Virginia. What have you in relation to that?

A. What is your next one, sir?

Q. The Allegheny mountain turnpike?

A. As to the Abbs Valley, I have no notes here which would assist. I have references. I think as to the Allegheny Mountain turnpike I have a specific note, however. (After examination.) No; I have no specific note here as to that. I have only the references.

Q. As a matter of fact, do you not remember that the Acts calls for Pendleton and Pocahontas Counties?

A. I can't say that I recall the Act.

Q. And look further for it when you look for it, and see if that part of Pendleton County was not afterwards made into Highland County?

A. That may probably be true, sir.

Q. Those are the facts in the case. 448

Mr. Anderson: What was the date of it?

Mr. McClintic: I do not recall the date.

A. My report will show the date of the expenditure, not of the Act. Mr. Taylor's report would show the date of the Act.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You have the Louisa Fork of Sandy River road?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is that?

A. What page are you referring to now?

The Special Master: It is page 8, $1,000.

A. I have no note on the location of that road. I have only references to the expenditures, but those references are doubtless the ones from which I obtained this information. I will refer back to it.

Mr. McClintic: That is all.

The Special Master: Have you anything to ask on re-direct?

Mr. Conrad: There is just one question I want to ask, referring to Mr. Carlisle's examination.

Re-Direct Examination.

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. You refer to your report there as an independent inquiry of your own. I would ask you if there is any fact or figure stated in your report which was acquired by you by adoption from Mr. Potter or from any other source, or whether you derived it from original investigation of your own?

A. I derived it from original investigation of my own, with the single exception of this payment for schools in West Virginia, which I have already stated. 449

Q. Yes. Having derived all the facts and figures by original investigation of your own, I would ask whether your application of those facts and figures in any respect was derived by you from Mr. Potter's scheme, or whether it was an original device of your own.

A. So far as I have any recollection at all, it is entirely an original device of my own.

The Special Master: That is, you acted on your own initiative?

A. Yes, sir; entirely so.

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. You adopted nothing in either the ascertainment of facts and figures of the application of them. Is that your answer?

A. Yes, sir.

[Vol. 5. May 6, 1909. Direct Examination of T. B. Dixcy.]

Mr. McClintic: I will now present exhibit marked Defendant's Exhibit C-1. If the Court pleases, in Defendant's Exhibit C-1. we do not wish to present it in the exact form in which it 513 is here. I desire to make some changes in it and have the stenographer take the changes down.

On page 2, item for Brandonville, Kingwood & Evansville Road, $10,595.73; the item for the Clarksburg and Buchanan Road, $19,259.36; and the item for the Kingwood and West Union Turnpike company, $18,140.61, we desire to eliminate from 514 this report. With the permission of the other side, I will state the reasons.

Those three roads or turnpike companies were incorporated under the laws of Virginia, and after they had been incorporated and virtually built by these stock companies, the State appropriated those three sums, which I believe are correct in amount, for certain work, I believe, for macadamizing those three roads, which I believe, belonged to these private corporations; and we wish to reserve the question for argument as to whether there is any liability on us for those items.

Mr. Harrison: What do you mean by saying the State appropriated those three sums, and what do you refer to as the evidence of that appropriation?

Mr. McClintic: The evidence appears from the acts which appropriated that amount of money, which was expended on the roads belonging to a private company in the State of Virginia, as in the nature of a gift to those three companies. I do not think there is any doubt about the facts. It is a question of argument.

The Special Master: The only question is whether under the law and the decree it is an item to be properly taken into consideration in this connection.

Mr. McClintic: Yes; that is right.

Again on page 4, of that exhibit, there is charged to the Trans-Allegheny Lunatic Asylum at Weston, $125,000. We desire to ask that that be changed from $125,000 to $98,000 on the exhibit, and later, perhaps, to show by evidence that while that sum of money, $125,000, was drawn from the Treasury of the State of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, that $27,000 of 515 that sum was in the hands of the Treasurer of the Board of Directors of the Trans-Allegheny Lunatic Asylum, and had been expended; but was still the property of the State of Virginia; and in the summer of 1861 the restored government, which, as we claim, for all necessary purposes was the State of Virginia, took that money from the hands of the treasurer and used it for its own purposes, and the same was not expended on the building for which it was originally appropriated by Virginia. In other words, $98,000 instead of $125,000 was spent.

Mr. Anderson: It was expended in West Virginia, but it was expended in a different way.

Mr. McClintic: Yes; it was spent to have that ordinance passed and for other necessary things that were needed at that time.

With those changes, we desire to offer this exhibit Defendant's Exhibit C-1 in evidence.

(The exhibit was marked accordingly.)

Mr. McClintic: Please state if you made this exhibit?

The Witness: I prepared and made this exhibit.

The Special Master: Can you state in this connection the acts of the legislature upon which you rely in connection with the three things you have struck out, so that it will be in the record in that connection.

Mr. McClintic: With the kind permission of the other side, I will use the index of the other side and find out for your Honor in a moment.

Mr. McClintic: The Clarksburg and Buchanan Road—

Mr. Harrison: What page have you? 516

Mr. McClintic: I am on page 6 of Taylor's report. The Clarksburg and Buckhannon Road was incorporated March 9, 1848. Acts, page 219. In 1853, Acts of 1853, page 70, the moneys expended on the road were appropriated, or the Board of Public Works was authorized to borrow and spend that sum.

The Kingwood & West Union Turnpike Company was incorporates in 1848, Acts, page 216, and this other expenditure was authorized in 1853, Acts, page 11. I do not find in this exhibit the Brandonville and the other one. It might be under some other name, but I do not see it.

The Special Master: You can supply that later, then?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, I can supply it later.

The Special Master: And when you get it, I will have the stenographer put it in the notes in its place. It will be a great convenience to me in looking this thing over later, to have everything grouped together.

(The information referred to is as follows):

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. State, Mr. Dixcy, whether this exhibit includes all the 517 expenditures by direct appropriation made for roads in the West Virginia counties, the counties now forming West Virginia, and if any are omitted, if you know, why were they omitted?

A. It includes all the direct expenditures under appropriations for roads made by the Commonwealth of Virginia in the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia between March 19, 1823, and January 21, 1861.

Q. State about the expenditure on page 2, of the Moorefield & Allegheny Turnpike Company for building the stem to Petersburg. $4,500. Was there any other expenditure by that company, or on that road, either?

A. In addition?

Q. In addition to the sum of $4,500 for the stem up to Petersburg.

A. That is shown as the expense of building the stem to Peterburg.

Q. That was a direct appropriation, was it not?

A. Yes, sir; a direct appropriation.

Q. For a particular purpose.

A For that particular purpose, it is shown.

Q. Was that an incorporated company or a direct appropriation, the Moorefield & Alleghent Company proper?

A. That was a direct appropriation.

Q. I mean the Moorefield & Allegheny Turnpike Company proper. Was that an incorporated company?

A. The Moorefield & Allegheny Turnpike Company was an incorporated company.

Q. Is the value of that included in any exhibit made by you? 518

A. Yes; in under 7.

Q. I will examine you then under 7 in reference to it.

Mr. Harrison: What was the last question that related to 7?

Mr. McClintic: This Moorefield & Alleghent turnpike company. It is an incorporated company, except a certain sum, $4,500, appropriated to build what the State termed a stem to Petersburg; that is, a branch from the main stem.

Mr. Harrison: And he does not show on this schedule the expense of the stem to Petersburg?

Mr. McClintic: He only shows the expense of the stem to Petersburg.

Mr. Harrison: The $4,500.

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

Mr. Harrison: It does not show, then—

Mr. McClintic: It does not show what you might term the main construction of the line?

Mr. Harrison: That is shown somewhere else?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 3 of this exhibit there is shown the Abbs Valley and Tug road.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. State as to what percentage charged to West Virginia 519 what the percentage is on the exhibit you have?

A. As lithographed, it was 9.91. It has been changed on the original here and on the Master's copy, and I think on most of the copies, to 90.10. It was an error in typewriting which was corrected in reading back the proof.

Q. That road has been testified to as being wholly in West Virginia. What did your examination show as to that road?

A. It showed that something over 90 per cent., 90.10 per cent., was in West Virginia; the balance in Virginia.

Q. What county, if you remember? Tazewell County, if you will allow me.

A. I don't remember; no.

Q. As a matter of fact it is Tazewell County.

Mr. Anderson: The ten per cent. is in Tazewell County?

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item following that is the Allegheny Mountain Turnpike. State if you know whether that is in both States or not?

A. 55.55 per cent. in mileage, as we measured it, is in West Virginia.

Q. Do you know the counties that is in?

A. I don't recall them; no, sir.

Q. In the next item, the Berryville and Charlestown Turnpike, for which is charged the sum of $4,221.56 against West Virginia, out of $7,236.07, please explain to the Court the history of that road, if you remember it, as to how that charge came about?

A. That road was originally incorporated and the State 520 subscribed to the stock of it. Later it had to buy in the road for the amount that is charged there, $7,236.97, to protect its interests in the property.

Q. How was it sold, if you know, by any report or exhibit?

A. How do you mean?

Q. I mean who sold the road when the State had to buy it in? Was it a mortgage sale, a deed of trust sale, or what?

A. It was sold under a deed of trust.

Mr. Anderson: Which road is that?

Mr. McClintic: The Berryville and Charlestown.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. By whom was the deed of trust executed, if you know?

A. I don't remember.

The Special Master: It was sold for that sum?

A. $7,236.97.

Mr. Conrad: What year was that?

A. It was sold in 1858—the purchase was made in 1858.

Mr. Anderson: The State bought it in?

A. Yes; bought it in.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On the same page, 3, is the Northwestern Turnpike road, in which the total expenditure was $620,271.38, with which you charge the West Virginia $573,994.39. Please explain to the Master how that account was made up, what books were kept in relation to it, etc.?

A. Well, the account included the items stated in the note 521 on the road. It says:

"Includes tolls, &c., expended on the road, amounting to $173,670.39. The charge to Wythe, Virginia, excludes items which the construction books show as expended in the present State of Virginia, and include those which were expended in West Virginia, and a proportion on a mileage basis of items which were not designated in the construction books of the internal improvement fund as directly chargeable to either present State. These latter amounts are divided on the basis of the length of the whole road, 92.94 per cent. in West Virginia, the length of the Eastern Section, 61.05 per cent. in West Virginia, and the charge on 86 miles of the road west of Winchester, 80.03 per cent. being in West Virginia."

And the entire charge to West Virginia of those items on the basis above stated was $573,994.39.

Q. For the purpose of clearness, was credit given to West Virginia anywhere in this account for her proportion of those tolls—not on this exhibit, but on any other exhibit in this account, was credit given to her for her proportion of those tolls?

A. Are these tolls included in the cost?

A. Yes.

Q. I will have to look it up, Mr. McClintic, in the exhibit on which it appears.

By the Special Master:

Q. Your charge to West Virginia is almost $150,000 more than theirs?

A. That is accounted for very largely by these tolls that 522 were included in the road.

Q. Your idea is that they are not included as a credit in your item?

A. They were not included as a credit here. They are a charge here, but I do not want to state the amount of the credit on another schedule when it will be of record and I can state it exactly.

Q. They give the tolls as $162,679.26. Your statement is $173,670.39. Is that intended to be the same item, do you think?

A. We are not able to identify it exactly. There are a number of these accounts that we do not identify exactly.

Q. That is, that you are not quite certain whether when they state the tolls as $162,679.26, they are endeavoring to state the item you give as $173,670.39?

A. Yes. I don't know where the difference is exactly.

Mr. Conrad: Our statements take no account of tolls at all, either way.

The Special Master: Let me make this inquiry right here. Do I understand counsel for West Virginia to concede that this charge of $573,994.39 is correct?

Mr. McClintic: It is correct if the credit which we ask for in another place is correct.

The Special Master: I am asking about this entry here. Is this entry as it stands here correct?

Mr. McClintic: Yes; it is a correct item. 523

The Special Master: The other item will have to stand by itself, as to whether it is allowed or disallowed. So far as this item is concerned, I may take it as a concession on your part that it is correct?

Mr. McClintic: That is what the books show, as being the amount that went into the construction of the road. We took every dollar and every cent that went in. Your Honor will find several of these items are larger than was attempted to be charged by Virginia, because we had to take our own findings in the books.

The Special Master: Of course when I reach a question like that I am quite anxious to know just how counsel feel about it.

Mr. McClintic: We were very sorry to alarm you, but it could not change the facts. That was the position we had to take in that matter.

The Special Master: So far as your contentions are concerned, that would not disturb me any.

Mr. Hogg: There is a corresponding reduction by tolls.

The Special Master: That is another item, but quoad this point here, that is conceded to be correct.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 4, Mr. Dixcy, there is a road marked "South Branch of Potomac River to Brock's Gap, in Rockingham County, charging West Virginia with $411.80. State what you know of that division?

A. 29.41 per cent. was charged to West Virginia on a mile- 524 age basis. That is to say, 29.41 per cent. of the road lay in West Virginia.

Q. Did you make a personal examination in that case, or was that information furnished you by your assistants?

A. I didn't scale any of these roads.

Q. Who did scale them?

A. Mr. Clifford E. Scoville, my Chief of Staff.

Q. I wanted to ask you the general question a while ago, and I was interrupted. How were all these percentatges arrived at in reference to this class of roads?

A. By scaling the maps, by actual measurements, and from the engineer's reports.

Q. All the sources of information of that character that you could get?

A. All the sources of information that were available.

Q. The next item is the Staunton and Parkersburg Road. Please explain to the Master the sources of the charges made therein, of $288,807.56.

A. The whole charge of $388,936.97, includes tolls and the interest earned, amounting to $26,272.55 expended on the road; charge to West Virginia excludes items which the construction books of the road and the books of the internal improvement fund designate as chargeable to the present State of Virginia. It includes items which are designated as having been expended in West Virginia, and a proportion on a mileage basis of expenditures not designated 525 as chargeable directly to either present state. Such expenditures are divided on a basis of the total mileage of the eastern division, 40.48 per cent. being in West Virginia, and on the basis of the total length of the road, 73.40 per cent. being in West Virginia; and on the above basis there was charged to West Virginia, $288.807.56.

Q. To go back just a moment, on page 2 of this exhibit I find charge to the road for the Middle-Bourne & Pennsylvania road, $6,252. What total, if any, has the plaintiff filed that road under, if you know?

The Special Master: And on what page of their exhibit is it found?

A. I would have to see the exhibit.

Mr. McClintic: On their exhibit, if I have got the same road—I am not sure that I am correct. I want to see if they meant, on page 16 of Exhibit C-1 for the plaintiff, that that was the same road called Tyler County to Green County State road?

Mr. Harrison: Has he answered your last question? That is to say, what corresponding road our exhibit showed?

Mr. McClintic: That is what I am trying to see, whether he knew it or not.

Mr. Harrison: He has not answered yet.

A. I have no exhibit before me, and I could not identify it in that way. I would not be able to identify it as that road.

Q. You have on page 2 a road called the Morgantown to Beverly road, $12.000. Do you know whether there is any 526 road of that title in plaintiff's Exhibit No. C-1?

A. There is in the plaintiff's exhibit a road, and there seems to be some confusion between that road and what we term the Morgan and Beverly road, right above in our exhibit.

Q. Is there anything that corresponds, either in amount or name, with the one called the Morgantown to Beverly road on their exhibit, if you know?

A. I don't recall now find such a road. I looked for it and could not find it.

By the Special Master:

Q. Did you find the data from which you made this statement in the books of original entry?

A. Yes; the names given here are those of the Acts and are also reported in the books of original entry. Of course were their terms were different, we frequently could not identify just what property they were referring to; and that would be true of them in our case.

Q. Did you intend your designations here to be duplicates of the titles of the accounts that you found in the books of original entry?

A. Not always duplicates. We intended them to designate very specifically the road that was referred to.

Q. Why should they not be duplicates of the entries? If the name of the road is entered on the book, why should it not be carried forwards in the account?

A. They are practically so, to all intents and purposes. 527
They are very little changed?

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Mr. Dixey, if you have the dates when the amounts we appropriated and paid to the Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum at Weston, I wish you would give them.

A. I did not get your question, Mr. McClintic.

Q. I want the dates when the amounts were paid for the Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum at Weston—the month and the year, if you have it.

A. Then we will have to get the original papers.

Q. Is it in these papers here?

A. I haven't it her, Mr. McClintic.

Q. I mean is it in this box here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let your assistant get it for you. Have you found the amount?

A. Yes; the dates of the payments to the Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum were in 1858.

Q. Will you give the month, in the latter case, at least?

A. In 1858, $8,000; in 1859, $17,000; in the fiscal year 1860, $50,000; and in December, 1860, $50,000 more.

Q. That is all I wanted, the last date.

A. Making a total of $125,000.

Q. The last payment was made in December?

A. In December, 1860.

Q. Will you look at plaintiff's Exhibit C-1, Mr. Dixey, I want to ask some questions in relation to it. 528

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I find on page 3, I believe it is, of plaintiff's Exhibit C-1 Winchester and Potomac Railroad, which apparently charges to West Virginia $168,750. Please state to the court what those four charges there are for, if you know, amounting to $270,000?

A. $150,000 of that amount was a loan, and the balance, $120,000, was stock.

Q. Was the last item in 1838 a loan?

A. The last item in 1838 was a loan.

The Special Master: That is $150,000?

A. $1500,00.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. What do you mean when you say $120,000 was stock?

A. It was stock owned by the State in the Winchester and Potomac Railroad?

Q. Was the Winchester & Potomac Railroad Company a corporation under the laws of Virginia?

A. Yes, it was a corporation.

Q. A corporation under the laws of Virginia?

A. Yes.

Q. And the State purchased—
A. $120,000 worth of stock.

By the Special Master:
Q. And the balance of the $270,000, is accounted for by the loan of $150,000?
A. $150,000; yes, sir.
Q. Which of these items were payments on account of the stock?
A. The first three.
Q. Those were installments paid on account of stock? 529
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the other was a loan?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What became of the loan? Is it still outstanding?
A. No; the loan was converted into an annuity.

By Mr. McClintic:
Q. Go ahead, Mr. Dixey, and state the facts which appear from the record of Virginia in reference to that railroad, if you have them.
A. Well, the State—
Q. Do you desire this memorandum you made?
A. I would like it; yes sir.
Mr. McClintic: Here is a memorandum which he gave to me, if your Honor please.
Mr. Harrison: He can refresh his memory by looking at it, but we do not expect him to read the manuscript.
Mr. McClintic: No; I do not expect him to read it, but I expect him to refresh his memory as to dates and amounts, and things like that. This has all been done by manuscript.
The Special Master: The distinction in getting the result is not very profound.
Mr. McClintic: Not in a case of this kind, especially.
The Special Master: Mr. Harrison is perfectly correct 530 from a technical standpoint.
Mr. Spooner: He should not be allowed, perhaps to adopt as his testimony a memorandum, but he can read it.
The Special Master: I guess this witness is on to the method by which he can reach the result all right.
A. The Winchester & Potomac railroad was incorporated by the Act of April 8th, 1831, at a capital of $300,000 par value of $25 per share, a railroad from Winchester to some convenient point on the Potomac River at or near Harpers Ferry. Appropriations by the State: Under act of March 14, 1832, $75,000, the Act of January 31, 1833, $45,000, making a total of $120,000. That was paid as a stock subscription.

By the Special Master:

Q. Were these three sums that are stated in plaintiff's Exhibit C-1, installments paid from those two appropriations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are the sums covered by the appropriation?

A. Yes; $120,000. By the Act of February 13, 1838, a loan to the Company was made, of $150,000, making up that sum of $270,000. Then by the act of March 25, 1843, the capital stock was increased to $481,220, the whole amount to be taken by the State, the increase not to exceed the amount due the State for the loan, with interest on July 1, 1843, said increase to be reconverted into a debt whenever the company failed to pay a dividend of 3 per cent on the whole of the State stock, provided that such dividend did not exceed 6 per cent on the debt so converted, under the 531
Act. No dividend was received by the State, nor were there received any dividends, either before or after this Act. The companies paid only the interest on the loan of $150,000 in the years 1839 and 1840. By the Act of February 24, 1846, the State accepted an annuity of $5,000 in lieu of the interest in the debt and dividends on the stock, the collection of the debt to be postponed so long as the payment of the annuity was continued.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. How long was that annuity paid?

A. The annuity was paid in each year from 1848 to 1860, inclusive, a total of $65,000, and the last annuity was received on July 27th 1861, and was for the one due November 1, 1861.

Q. Subsequent to the 1st of January 1861, what was done with this matter by the State of Virginia, as shown by her books or her acts of the Legislature?

A. With the stock?

Q. Yes.

The Special Master: The annuity.

A. The stock was surrendered .

The Special Master: Surrendered by whom?

A. Just a minute.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Had not the stock been commuted into an annuity?

A. Yes. I might just as well go ahead with this memorandum I have made on it. On February 22, 1868, the State of Virginia passed an act providing that the sum of $83,333.33, which was 532 the principal sum owing, which seems to have been arrived at as the principal of the $5,000 annuity for one year at 6 per cent, together with all interest thereon, should be paid into the State treasury on or before January 1, 1868, such payment to be made in any bonds of the State at their par value, and upon such payment being made, the claim of the State against the Company shall be lifted and discharged, under this Act, there was paid into the treasury the following stocks. As to that the record is not entirely clear.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Mr. Dixey, let me interrupt you. Is not that date, February 22, which you called 1868, a mistake?

A. Well, it is 1868 here. I cannot give the date from memory.

Q. We will call it up again in another way.

Mr. Spooner: What was the date?

Mr. McClintic: 1866.

A. Under this Act there were paid into the Treasury the following, apparently: Old registered bonds, $45,000, and new registered bonds, representing the funded interest of $66,130.90, making $111,130.90, upon whichthere was due in accrued interest $7,387.22, making a total of $118,518.12. The principal of the annuity was $83,333.33, and the interest on the same would have been $35,184.79. There were 4,800 shares of stock, at a value of $120,000.

Q. State if you found anything else on the books of Virginia in relation to this?

A. This memorandum was made before we made further discoveries. The stock was actually surrendered, and it shows on the books it was surendered in connection with this annuity in consideration for the anuity, and it was wiped off. 533

By the Special Master:

Q. Was all the stock converted into an annuity?

A. Yes, sir; that $120,000 owned by the State.

Q. The amount of the State's original purchase was subsequently converted into an annuity?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the annuity you have been speaking of?

A. That is the annuity that is spoken of.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Does the Act show that the annuity was in the place of the loan as well as the stock?

A. Of the loan and the stock; yes, sir.

The Special Master: Then the loan and the stock were both merged in the annuity?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. There was interest paid on that $150,000 for two years, I believe. Was that 6 per cent interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, Mr. Dixey, so far as this charge is concerned of $168,750, being 62½ per cent. of the $270,000, that is a charge for something which Virginia has entirely disposed of herself?

A. Prior to this date; yes, sir. She had disposed of her 534 interest in it altogether.

Q. And all the proceeds from that disposal of that interest went to the State of Virginia?

A. Yes; West Virginia got no benefit from it, so far as we find in the record.

By the Special Master:

Q. That is, West Virginia did not get anything from the proceeds of the transaction?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Dixey, to what extent does the aggregate of these items you have in defendant's Exhibit C-1 differ from the similar aggregate in plaintiff's Exhibit C-1?

A. I cannot say. We have not been able to reconcile them . They cover different periods of time. Do you mean as a total?

Q. Yes.

A. They include in their items a great list of charges against West Virginia that we do not include at all. That is, they include stock companies in their exhibit that we do not include in our C-1 at all, so that a reconciliation of the account would really be the substitution of one account for the other.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Do you include in those items anywhere any of the items you are speaking of?

A. I believe they will be presented for consideration sometimes.

Q. I am asking you the question, do you include them?

A. Not in this exhibit. 535

Q. I understand that, but I ask you if you include them anywhere.

A. The stock of the Company?

Q. Yes.

A. I have told you we do include them, but not in this exhibit.

Q. When you say Exhibit C includes a great many items that you do not include at all, you do not mean to say you do not include them somewhere else?

A. I was talking of this exhibit.

The Special Master: What I wanted to get, as near as I could, was a concrete statement of the points of difference. Of course where there are no differences I have no worry. Where there are, then I have.

Mr. McClintic: All the stocks which they include in their No. 3, we eliminate from our No. 3.

By the Special Master:

Q. That takes care of all that class of items. Then as to the quoad other items do you disagree?

A. Yes, sir; frequently.

Q. If without any difficulty you can have a memorandum of the places where you disagree, I could have before me just where the elements of disagreement are.

A. Have you their schedule?

Q. Yes. 536

A. I can mark it.

Q. I wish you would do that—either that or make a separate statement.

A. Well, it would be very complicated and very long.

Q. Very well; you take their schedule.

A. And it is hard to reconcile it in any way that is intelligible, because there are so very many, many items of difference.

Q. But I have got to have this in the end, you know, so that I can have it in some concrete way, and see the points of difference. Then I will get the contentions of both parties upon those points.

A. Do you want the amounts or the difference?

Q. Give me the items and the amounts, yes, if you can do so without too much trouble. This is simply for my convenience later. When I come to state the accounts, I want to see what there is that is not disputed. Then I will take the disputes, and take care of them.

The hearing is now adjourned until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

(The hearing, at 5 o'clock P. M., was adjourned until Friday, May 7, 1909, at 10 o'clock A. M.

THOMAS BIRD DIXCY,
resumed the stand for further direct examination.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. When we closed yesterday, Mr. Dixcy, we were discuss- 537
ing Defendant's Exhibit C-1. Please state to the Commissioner whether you made up the details of that report, or only the totals thereof; and if you did not make the details, who did make them for you.

A. The report as to totals was examined and verified by me, The details going to make up those totals were not made by me. The details statements were made by Mr. Clifford E. Scoville.

Q. Mr. Scoville, I believe you said, was your chief of staff, or employe?

A. Yes, sir.

[Vol. 6. May 7, 1909. Direct Examination of T. B. Dixcy.]

[Mr. McClintic]: 577

There is another matter which we desire to bring up, regarding the Covington & Ohio Railroad, what is now the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad. We desire to offer (and also of which we will have typewritten copies made and filed for the benefit of your Honor and counsel) the Act of March 1st, 1866, of the State of West Virginia (page 127), incorporating the Covington & Ohio Railroad Company; the Act of February 26, 1866, (page 317) of the State of Virginia incorporating the Covington & Ohio Railroad Company; the Act of February 26, 1867, (page 102) of the State of West Virginia in relation to the same; also the act of Virginia of March 1st, 1867, relating to the same matter.

I thought I had an additional memorandum, but I cannot put my finger on it at this moment. Anyhow, also an Act of the two States afterwards ratifying a contract made and containing 578 a copy of a contract made between the Virginia Central Railroad Company and Commissioners appointed by the State of Virginia and the State of West Virginia in relation to the Covington & Ohio Railroad Company and the Virginia Central Railroad Company.

Mr. Conrad: Have you a copy of that in your hand?

Mr. McClintic: I had a memorandum of it a moment ago. Yes, here it is. The contract is dated on the 31st day of August, 1868.

The Special Master: Does not that refer to the Act?

Mr. McClintic: It recites the previous Acts; but there was a subsequent Act of the State. The Act of the Legislature of West Virginia was passed January 26, 1870, ratifying that, and the State of Virginia passed an Act ratifying it.

Mr. Anderson: What was the date of the Act in regard to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad?

Mr. McClintic: I think that was the Act of 1867.

Mr. Anderson: They were concurrent Acts of the two States?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir; I have called attention to the fact that the Acts are practically the same—and the same ratifying the contract.

The Special Master: You mean they were practically contemporaneous?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That will be admitted, then, so it will show on the record 579

Mr. Anderson: We object to it as irrelevant, to any account or—

The Special Master: In the absence of looking at the Acts, it may appear that all legislation subsequent to 1863 is objected to on the ground that it is irrelevant. I will admit it de bene because it is impossible for me to pass on it now.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Are you familiar with the details of the account of the Covington & Ohio Railroad; or was that made up by Mr. Scoville?

A. The details of that were prepared by Mr. Scoville.

[Vol. 6. May 7, 1909. Cross Examination of T. B. Dixcy.]

The Special Master: Now take up your next schedule 623

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. The third paragraph of the decree directs an inquiry as to all expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia since any part of the debt was contracted. Your statement filed as Defendant's Exhibit C-1 is responsive to that inquiry, is it not? I think it was C-1.

Q. It was prepared for the information of counsel.

The Special Master: Yes; it is Defendant's Exhibit C-1.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. It was prepared for the information of counsel under that inquiry?

A. I may say that Major Conrad and yourself objected to my offering anything responsive to the decree. I am simply avoiding that.

Mr. Conrad: Not at all. You are an accountant employed for that purpose.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You did not offer it. It has been offered by counsel for you.

A. It was prepared in accordance with the decree.

Q. The date from which you started the computation, as 624 you have explained heretofore, was March 19, 1823?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please state the difference in the result ascertained by your statement under that paragraph 3, and the result ascertained by Mr. Potter under the same paragraph?

A. You mean state it in dollars and cents?

Q. In dollars and cents. The result, I say.

The Special Master: You mean by that the difference in the total?

Mr. Harrison: The total; the difference in the result.

The Special Master: The difference between the aggregates found on your schedule and the aggregate found on the schedule presented by the plaintiff?

Mr. Harrison: That is right.

The Special Master: Let me see if I have it right. The aggregate in the Plaintiff's schedule, found on page 19, is $3,147,547.

Mr. McClintic: No, sir; that is the second part. The schedule is made in two parts.

Mr. Harrison: There are two parts. You will have to add the two.

Mr. McClintic: On page 3 of the Exhibit you will find $2,674,401.-04. You add those two together to make the total of theirs. If my addition is correct, it makes $5,821,949.01.

The Special Master: Without running back, I assumed that one schedule included them both.

A. In accordance with Virginia's exhibit the total is $5,821,949.01. The total in accordance with West Virginia's exhibit is $1,455,196.12. The difference is an excess on the Virginia ex- 625 hibit of $4,366,752.89.

Mr. McClintic: I call your attention to the fact, Mr. Dixey, that $25,000 was withdrawn from the West Virginia Exhibit, which would make that much further reduction and greater difference.

A. It should be added to that.

The Special Master: That would increase the difference.

Mr. McClintic: Yes; it would increase the difference $25,000.

The Special Master: He has stated it near enough for all practical purposes.

Mr. Harrison: There are possibly other items.

Mr. McClintic: Yes; there were three other items I had forgotten.

Mr. Conrad: Some roads.

Mr. McClintic: Yes; three roads.

Mr. Harrison: I prefer to take the statements as they are.

A. Well, on the statements as they are, it is as I have stated.

Mr. Harrison: In other words, according to the schedules prepared by yourself and Mr. Potter, respectively—

The Special Master: Before any change was made.

Mr. Harrison: Before any suggested changes were made in the West Virginia schedule, the Virginia exhibit shows that $4,366,752.89 was expended by Virginia in the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia in excess of the amount shown by your schedule. 626

A. Not before any suggested changes were made, Mr. Harrison: It was suggested when the schedules were originally submitted to Attorney General Anderson that counsel reserved the right to amend them either by elimination or division.

Mr. Anderson: That was stated to me in writing.

A. In writing; yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: When I said suggested changes, I meant suggested here.

The Special Master: Mr. Harrison meant the schedules presented here.

Mr. Harrison: I am talking about schedules presented here.

A. Before any changes were actually made in them, that was the difference.

The Special Master: The changes will show for themselves. A further inquiry will develop the other facts.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. In your statement of money expended in the territory of West Virginia, do you include amounts invested by Virginia in the stock of joint stock companies?

A. I do not.

Q. Which constructed works of internal improvement in the State?

A. I do not.

Q. Why not?

A. Under instructions from counsel. 627

Q. If the State spent, through the medium of a purchase of $500,000 worth of stock, to illustrate, $500,000 in the construction of a road, would not that be money expended in West Virginia?

A. Not by the State.

The Special Master: What was your question, Mr. Harrison? If the State spent that amount of money in the stock of the corporation that built the road?

Mr. Harrison: That built the road—if that would not be an expenditure by the State of $500,000 in the construction of that road, as much so as if it had been spent—

The Special Master: Directly?

Mr. Harrison: Directly.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You say you think not.

A. Not by the State. That is my interpretation.

The Special Master: He stated the account on the other hypothesis.

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Then your account of moneys expended by the State in the construction of works of internal improvement in the State of West Virginia through the medium of her purchase of stock in joint stock companies, is excluded from your computation?

A. All subscriptions to the capital stock of stock companies are excluded from this account.

Q. You show on page 4 of your schedule C-1 total expenditures on account of appropriations for turnpikes and roads 628 lying wholly within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia, of $425,418.35. That I understand takes no account of any other expenditure by the State of Virginia through stock subscriptions to joint stock companies that built the road?

A. It is direct expenditures under appropriations.

Q. Now, have you carried into any schedule the amounts invested by the State in stock subscriptions to works of internal improvement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under what schedule?

A. It is shown on our schedule No. 7, defendant's Exhibit G-1.

Q. So then on the threshold your statement of the account under paragraph 3 of the decree differs from Mr. Potter's in that you have not included moneys expended through the medium of subscriptions to the stock of joint stock companies?

A. That is essentially different.

By the Special Master:

Q. Does that account for the whole discrepancy?

A. No, sir; there are other variations, but that is the major part of it, by far.

Q. This I imagine could be reconciled by conference between the accountants?

A. Well, it takes in this matter of the beginning of the debt. It could not be done by a conference.

Q. Of course we understand that. 629

Mr. Anderson: There is very little of it?

A. There is very little of it, but I mean it could not be reconciled absolutely.

The Special Master: It would be reconciled in the sense of being agreed upon as to the items that were expended, and then disclosing those about which no agreement can be had?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I understand the difference, as you have just stated to the Master, growing out of the method of stating this account, in that you have excluded and Mr. Potter has included subscriptions to joint stock companies, constitutes the major difference between you in your statement under that paragraph of the decree?

A. That is true; yes, sir.

Q. Of course that difference applies in your recapitulation on page 4 of your statement to the second item, namely, total expenditures on account of appropriations to interstate roads. That same difference enters into that statement?

A. Interstate roads?

Q. I call them interstate.

A. Yes; I understand what you mean, sir. I am just locating the items.

Q. Look at your recapitulation.

A. Yes; I am looking at it. I want to identify it absolutely. Well, all that difference is not located there, not located in that item. 630

Q. I did not say all the difference was.

A. There is a difference there.

Q. But I say that difference enters into that.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Now, you show $900,577.77 as the total expenditures on account of appropriations for turnpikes and roads lying in the two States?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same difference enters into that computation as entered into the first item?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course there may be other differences?

A. Yes, sir; that is true.

Q. But your answer holds good as to that, that it is the major difference.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The third item in your recapitulation, page 4, shows $129,200 as the total expenditures on account of additional appropriations for purposes within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia. Of what items is that $129,200 made up? I simply want to get it on the record?

A. There are three items shown on that same page. Shall I state them?

Q. Yes.

A. Coal River Bridge, $3,000, Coal River improvements, $1,200, Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum, at Weston, for building, $125,000, as shown on the page. 631

Q. Making a total of $129,200?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the aggregate of those three items gives $1,455,196.12, which you report as the total amount of money expended by the Commonwealth of Virginia in the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia?

A. That is right; yes, sir.

Q. Now, as illustrating the method in which the two accounts were stated, I will call your attention to an item on your statement, page 2, of the Moorefield and Allegheny Turnpike Company, wherein you include an item of $4,500 for building that turnpike, or building what is called the stemp to Petersburg, in West Virginia. That is correct, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you will look at Mr. Potter's Exhibit C-1, on page 12, under that same item, Moorefield and Allegheny Turnpike, you will find that gives the total amount expended on that turnpike in the State of West Virginia at $13,279.78, made up of two items, one of $4,500, which you have on your statement, and the other of $8,779.78.

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, please state how that $8,779.78 is shown to have been expended by Mr. Potter's statement?

A. As shown to have been expended in 1850, $3,090; in 1851, $4,748.79; in 1852, $565.99; in 1853, $375.

Q. Those, then, are the several appropriations for stock in that turnpike?

A. It does not say that they are, in Mr. Potter's statement. 632

Q. Is it a fact?

The Special Master: Do you know whether they are or not?

A. I think they are; yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Where do you show those aggregate sums?

The Special Master: In Schedule 7.

A. I will refer to Schedule 7.

Mr. McClintic: He does not show that anywhere in the construction account.

Mr. Harrison: Let us see if he does not.

Mr. McClintic: At least, if he did, it was against my direction.

A. We show on page 4 of Exhibit 7—

The Special Master: No; Defendant's Exhibit G-1.

A. G-1; yes, sir. I beg your pardon.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. On what page?

A. On page 4.

Q. You have there Moorefield & Allegheny Turnpike Company, $8,779.78?

A. Yes; as the amount paid by the Commonwealth.

Q. That is precisely the same amount shown on Mr. Potter's statement under that item, is it not?

A. That is correct; yes, sir.

Q. So that you carry that into your item 7 as a stock subscription?

A. A stock subscription. 633

Q. To the stock of that company?

A. To the stock of that company.

Q. Paid for by the Commonwealth?

A. Paid for by the Commonwealth.

Q. So that when you say Mr. Potter's statement does not show that, you do not mean to say that is not true, whether it shows it or not?

A. No; I mean to say it does not show it as a stock subscription.

The Special Master: What he meant was that the statement does not show on its face that it was for stock?

A. Yes, sir; I did not mean to controvert the item at all. I mean to say it did not show, to me, that it was a stock subscription.

The Special Master: Mr. Harrison simply uses it as an illustration of the difference between the two statements?

Mr. Harrison: That is my object, to show the difference.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. On what theory of stating the accounts can you illustrate other differences between the two statements? You have accounted for the larger difference in this method of proving stock subscriptions?

A. The account in some items includes items prior to the period we have stated.

Q. That might be, but—

By the Special Master: 634

Q. Right on that point, does the account submitted by the plaintiff include some items prior to March 19, 1823?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you were to harmonize your account with that submitted by the plaintiff, what else would you have to do except to add such items as appear in that account of yours, so far as this exhibit is concerned?

A. There are some deductions from the plaintiff's exhibit for items added after January 1, 1861, and—

Q. I am referring now to quoad the beginning of the account. If you wanted to harmonize your account with the account submitted by the plaintiff, what else would you have to do with the exhibit now under discussion than to add the sums that appear by the report of the plaintiff's accountant to have been expended prior to March 19, 1823? That is, what other computations would it involve, if any, except the mere addition?

A. There are numbers, your Honor. We differ in a great many instances as to the amount that has been charged to West Virginia under 3. There are differences in scaling the mileage.

Q. That is not the question I am asking. The question I am asking you is this, Mr. Dixey. The plaintiff's account begins on October 1, 1819. Your account begins March 19, 1823. Now, as to the items that may appear in the plaintiff's account during that period, if you had occasion to accommodate your account to theirs, or to harmonize with them, what else would you have to do as 635 a matter of mathematical computation other than to add the accounts thus omitted to yours—anything in connection with this exhibit?

A. Well, there is nothing that occurs to me, but I don't want to commit myself absolutely on that. I don't know; but there is nothing that occurs to me.

Q. So far as you are at present advised, you would not have to do anything except to make that addition?

A. I think that would be all.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. In order to see what further differences there are between you, you say Virginia's account contains items up to 1861 that yours does not contain?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you show on your statement anything expended by Virginia for the Letart Falls & West Columbia Turnpike?

A. Under what schedule?

The Special Master: This particular schedule.

Mr. Harrison: Under 3.

The Special Master: Either in Defendant's Exhibit C-1 or Defendant's Exhibit G-1, which are the two exhibits including expenditures of this character.

A. What page is that on, Mr. Harrison?

Q. On your exhibit?

A. No; on the plaintiff's exhibit.

Q. On ours it is page 11.

The Special Master: Mr. Harrison is referring to page 11 of the Plaintiff's Exhibit.

636

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Yes; our exhibit. If you will look at page 11 of plaintiff's Exhibit C-1 you will find that $2,950 is charged there for money expended by the Commonwealth of Virginia in West Virginia for the construction of the Letart Falls and West Columbia Turnpike. Does your statement include any or all of that item?

The Special Master: What statement do you refer to, Mr. Harrison; Defendant's Exhibit C?

Mr. Harrison: I mean the corresponding statement.

The Special Master: Or do you refer to defendant's Exhibit G, or both?

Mr. Harrison: Exhibit C.

The Special Master: Whether that includes it?

Mr. Harrison: Yes; that is the one that deals with paragraph 3 of the decree.

A. That is a stock company, and no stock companies are included in this statement.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. None are included there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Look at your Exhibit 7 and see if you have an account of any others there? Exhibit G-1 I believe it is.

The Special Master: It refers to paragraph 7.

A. We show the—

Q. How much do you show?

A. Letart Falls and West Columbia Turnpike Company, 637 amount paid by the Commonwealth, $2,350.

Q. Then you have excluded from your statement there $600, have you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Shown by Mr. Potter?

A. Yes, sir; there is that difference of $600.

Q. Why did you do that?

A. That is shown in 1861 on Mr. Potter's statement. We did not include items of expenditure in 1861.

Q. Why did you not do it? It was an obligation contracted before 1861, was it not?

A. I will simply say, in regard to that, we did not include them by the instruction of counsel.

The Special Master: As I understand it, their statement stops right short on January 1, 1861?

Mr. Hogg: On the subject of expenditures.

The Special Master: Nothing appears up to that date to have been expended in connection with the particular item where it would not be disclosed by your item, whether it was expended afterwards or whether there was any prior obligation by virtue of which the expenditure was made?

A. That is true.

The Special Master: You are not reporting the liabilities. You are reporting the actual expenditures up to that time. Am I correct in that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That is what you wanted, Mr. Harrison?

A. Yes, sir; that is right. Counsel for West Virginia say they stop short with 1861, so far as expenditures were con- 638 cerned.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Do they go beyond 1861 in the matter of other transactions; do you know?

A. Our accounting stops at January 1, 1861.

Q. Both as to expenditures and everything else?

A. On all acounts, so far as the accounts are concerned.

A. Well, as far as any charges and disbursements direct and receipts are concerned, it stops in 1861.

Mr. Anderson: Except as to the statement you have sent for?

By the Special Master:

Q. As far as the charges and credits go which are predicated upon actual cash transactions, they stop on January 1, 1861?

A. No, sir.

Q. On both sides of the account?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: Did you include all payments made up to that date?

The Special Master: Do you mean by receipts?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

A. We included all in one account or the other—no; let me modify that. We excluded a large number of claims. They are all included in our general balance that we have offered here.

Mr. Anderson: Have you gotten that yet? 639

A. It had not arrived when I last heard, Major It will not take long to prepare it when it does come.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. I want to know if this was a part of your theory upon which your accounting has been constructed. If I correctly understand your testimony that has gone before, it sometimes occurred, where all payments had been made prior to 1861, that you excluded them because it appeared that in subsequent years, in the 60's or 70's, there has been some change or sale of the road, or stock, or what not. You therefore excluded the investments that had been made and paid before 1861 because of some subsequent change. Is that true?

A. I don't get just exactly the force of that, Mr. Harrison.

Q. Take some road. I cannot think of the name of it, but it has frequently occurred here that you have referred to the fact that a road had been sold after the War, or given to a county, a present made of it to the county. Therefore you took no account of what the State expended.

Mr. McClintic: Those were before the War, Mr. Harrison.

Mr. Harrison: Well, whether it was before the War or since the War.

The Special Master: Have you not in mind the Covington railroad?

Mr. Harrison: That is one.

The Special Master: That is the only one I had in mind as 640 to which they raised that question.

Mr. Harrison: There was a million or more dollars involved in the Covington & Ohio transaction?

The Special Master: Yes; that is true. That is the only item I have in mind as to which they raised a question of that character?

A. So far as actual records, actual cash receipts and disbursements, our accounting closed on January 1, 1861, or rather, at the close of business December 31, 1860. Where there were questions that affected the value of the property or West Virginia's interest in it at that time, affected by later evidence, we included these and showed them on the schedule.

Q. Now, look on your schedule C-1, page 3, at the Franklin and Monterey Turnpike. Do you see that?

The Special Master: The Franklin & Monterey Road. Is that what you mean?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir; that is what it is called.

The Special Master: There are so many light variations of these names, that we want to get them exact.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Bearing that item in mind, will you say whether or not you take account there of a draft for $305.91 given by the State of Virginia in payment of a subscription to stock of that company on the 1st of October, 1855? It may have been a direct payment. I do not know whether it was a stock subscription or not. I want to know if you took account of that draft?

A. Personally, I have no knowledge of that. 641

Q. You have no knowledge of that at all?

A. Personally, no sir.

The Special Master: Where is that item on your exhibit?

Mr. Harrison: Exhibit C-1, page 1, and our exhibit includes that draft, which was given October 1, 1855, and paid in 1861. I just simply want to present that.

A. What was the amount?

Q. $305.91. About that you know nothing?

A. No; not of my personal knowledge. I have a note here that I did not make personal.

Q. I only want what you know personally about it. Mr. Dixey, would you have any difficulty in ascertaining, in conjunction with Mr. Potter, the difference between your two statements, growing out of obligations contracted before 1861, but paid after 1861?

A. I think not.

Q. You would not have any difficulty in that?

A. No.

Q. It would not be a very material item?

A. There are only a comparatively few items.

Q. They would possibly be comparatively few, but would it constitute some of the difference?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you to say that some differences may exist in your two statements growing out of the mileage allowed for the improvements in the respective States?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That is, the manner in which the division of the item was made, predicated upon the mileage.

Mr. Harrison: Well, I think the division was made in the 642 same way, on a percentage division, was it not?

A. Frequently. Not altogether.

The Special Master: But the percentage upon which the result was reached. They may have adopted different lengths in their computations. That is what you have in your mind, is it not?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir. You would not have any difficulty in harmonizing that, between you and Mr. Potter, would you?

A. In a great many cases both were scaled to maps, and it was largely a matter of individuality. They were both doubtless done carefully, and it is the difference between one man's judgment and another man's judgment. I think those could be reconciled.

By the Special Master:

Q. You had the same original sources of information?

A. Yes, sir; we did have.

Q. And two experts together ought to be able to reach a result.

A. I think there will be no difficulty about reconciling those percentages.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. The difference might have depended, as you say, upon the judgment exercised by the man who did the scaling, and by the care with which he performed that work, but you think they could be readily ascertained and reconciled?

A. I think there would be no difficulty. There might be a 643 little give and take on each side.

Q. The differences, then, between your statements, which are so widely different in their results, grow out of the methods in which you stated the accounts respectively, as you have detailed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any more discrepancies in actual figures?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That is, the details are negligible, but in the differences there is a great bulk of it that comes from the accounts stated?

A. That is right.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Mr. Dixcy, Mr. Potter includes in his statement C-1, showing moneys expended in West Virginia, the moneys expended for the construction of the Covington & Ohio Railroad?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a very large item?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. It runs over a million dollars?

A. Yes. We do not include that.

Q. You have not included that anywhere?

A. No, sir.

Q. You said you did not include that, on the instructions of counsel?

A. That is right.

Q. There is another considerable item that will help to 644 make up the difference, the Winchester and Potomac Railroad, which Mr. Potter includes, amounting to $168,758.

A. That was excluded. We excluded that.

Q. You have excluded that entirely from your accounts?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: In all the schedules?

Mr. Harrison: In all of them.

Mr. McClintic: Mr. Dixcy testified to that yesterday. That was one that Virginia dealt with herself before the War, or just after the War, and got paid for it.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You excluded that upon the instructions of counsel?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: That is their theory.

Mr. Spooner: It is not very much of a theory.

Mr. Harrison: Yes; it is altogether a theory.

Mr. McClintic: We think it is a demonstrated fact.

Mr. Conrad: I was counsel for that road a long time, and I have derived a great deal of information about it.

The Special Master: Do I understand it is the contention of the defense that the counsel was sold with the road?

Mr. Conrad: He has been badly sold on these statements that he has learned here.

Mr. McClintic: They are in your Virginia books. We have to take them, right or wrong.

Mr. Harrison: I just want to know the facts from this witness, that he knows no facts in connection with that, but included it under the instructions of counsel. 645

The Special Master: I understand him to so testify.

The Witness: I said it was excluded under the instructions of counsel. That is true; but we are in possession of facts in connection with it.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. When you say "we," whom do you mean?

A. I mean we have it in our papers. I am not personally familiar with it at all.

Q. Has anything of that sort come in? I don't remember it. I am in the dark.

Mr. McClintic: Which road is that?

Mr. Harrison: The Winchester and Potomac, he is talking about. He says they are in possession of papers.

Mr. McClintic: Mr. Dixey testified to certain facts in connection with it, from a memorandum which his staff had made in relation to it, on yesterday.

Mr. Harrison: You call those facts?

The Special Master: The circumstances under which the road was disposed of, according to the contention of the defendants. That is what you mean, Mr. McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir. The Winchester and Potomac is still in existence, leased to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, but the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad got it in 1866 or or 1867.

Mr. Anderson: The Baltimore & Ohio was the lessee of it for a great many years.

Mr. McClintic: I think it is the lessee yet.

Mr. Anderson: Yes; but it owns a majority of the stock. 646

Mr. Conrad: It was the lessee for sixteen years without any authority from the Legislature of Virginia to lease or to hold it.

Mr. Harrison: Do I understand, Mr. McClintic, that your contention is that Virginia disposed of the road or gave it away, or did something, in 1867?

Mr. McClintic: Prior to that time, in 1846 or 1847—I cannot state the exact date—she passed an act commuting this stock and loan into an annuity, which was paid for a series of years, and then she sold the annuity. In the first place, we deny that we are responsible for loans made by Virginia to any municipality, incorporation or individual. We do not call that money spent in West Virginia, if that individual happened to live in West Virginia.

The Special Master: In the next place, you contend the loan has been subsequently paid?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

[Vol. 6. May 7, 1909. Direct Examination of C. E. Scoville.]

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. We have filed here Defendant's Exhibit C-1. Please state, if you know, the charges made therein, of your own knowledge, or items entered, would be better, perhaps? 697

A. (Mr. Scoville) I do know as regards each and every item appearing on the schedule. That schedule I find charged— 698

The Special Master: On what page?

Q. (Continuing) On page 2.

"Brandonville, Kingwood and Evansville Road, $10,595.73." Please state the character of that charge and what it was for, and if there is any other thing in relation to that road, please state it.

A. The road was originally incorporated as a stock company in 1837, and in the following year the State made an appropriation for subscriptions to the stock. In 1847 and in 1857 additional appropriations were made.

Q. Were those additional appropriations for stock purposes?

A. They were for stock purposes, amounting in all to $18,000.

Q. What sum of money was paid out on that road for stock, if you have it there, and what for direct appropriation for work done?

A. The amount paid by direct appropriation—

By the Special Master:

Q. What do you mean by that, direct construction?

A. Direct construction on the road, as shown by the books, was $10,595.73.

Q. Was the State at that time a stockholder in the road?

A. The State was at that time a stockholder to the amount shown on the books; as to the amount paid on the stock subscriptions, it was $2,193.46.

Mr. Spooner: You mean by the State? 699

The Witness: Paid by the State on their subscriptions.

The Special Master: Is that the total amount that appears to have been paid by the State on its subscription?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Right at that point, what do the books show as to these stock subscriptions, as to there being other stockholders?

A. It does show that there were other stockholders.

Q. Do the books show whether these subscriptions for stock were paid by calls from directors of the Company, or in what way?

A. I think it can be said that in every case where the appropriation was made for the purchase of stock of any improvement company the payments by the State on account of that subscriptions were to be paid pari passu with the payments of individual stockholders.

Q. Now, take the next item below that, the Clarksville and Buchannan Road. Was that a road incorporated?

A. It was an incorporated company.

Q. And did the State spend some money thereon in addition to the stock it purchased?

A. It did.

Q. An amount stated on this exhibit?

A. The amount expended for other purposes than stock was $19,259.36, which was on account of an appropriation of $20,000 for macadamizing the road.

Q. I will next go to the item, "Kingwood and West Union Turnpike Company. What was the condition as to that, as 700 to its being an incorporated company, and the State also making a direct construction appropriation?

A. The Kingwood and West Union Turnpike Company was an incorporated company, and the State subscribed to its stock and also appropriated as a direct expenditure on the road $18,140.61.

The Special Master: Expended also, as well as appropriated?

The Witness: Expended that amount. It appropriated more than that sum, but that was actually expended.

Mr. Harrison: How much by direct appropriation and how much by stock?

The Special Master: $18,140.61 was the total direct expenditure, as I understood it.

The Witness: That is correct.

The Special Master: He had not stated the amount of stock.

Mr. Harrison: I thought he stated them separately.

The Special Master: No; he did not.

The Witness: The total amount paid on the stock subscription was $8,769.48.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. How much was subscribed by the State?

A. $12,000

Q. On page 2, you have a road called the "Morgantown to Beverly Road, $12,000. Can you reconcile that charge with any charges made on Plaintiff's exhibit C-1?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please do so.

The total expenditure of $12,000 which we include under the title of Morgantown to Beverly road on West Virginia's exhibit is shown in two amounts on Plaintiff's Exhibit C-1,$2,724.

The Special Master: At what page? 701

The Witness: On page 5. Under Beverly and Clarksburg road; it is the fourth item from the bottom of the page.

The Special Master: What other item is that connected with?

The Witness: And an item on page 7, amounting to $9,276, under Monongalia County to Beverly and Clarksburg Road. That is the fifth amount extended into the total column, counting from the bottom of the page.

The Special Master: That seems to be page 11?

The Witness: I should have given the number as 11.

The Special Master: And those two make $12,000?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You also have an item, page 2, Middlebourne & Pennsylvania Road, $6,252. Can you reconcile that with any charges made by Mr. Potter?

A. I cannot, no, sir.

The Special Master: Are not these items items that the two accountants could take up and reconcile?

Mr. McClintic: There is some confusion of the names of the companies.

The Special Master: They can do better sitting down and discussing it between themselves, probably.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 3 there is an item, South Fork of South Branch 702 of Potomac River to Petersburg and Hardy County Road; and on page 4 is the South Branch of Potomac River to Brock's Gap and Rockingham County road. Could you give an explanation of those two roads?

A. Yes, sir. The first road that you have referred to, on page 3 of our exhibit, South Branch of South Fork of Potomac River to Petersburg in Hardy County, on which there was expended $900, is wholly within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia. The other item, South Branch of Potomac River, page 4, to Brock's Gap in Rockingham County, on which the total expenditure was $1,400, is in West Virginia, on a mileage basis, 29.41 per cent. I might say that is the full amount of the appropriation, and it is charged to the roads for which it was appropriated. Originally it was given to commissioners to be expended on these roads, and charged to the accounts of these commissioners, and carried that way on the books of the internal improvement fund for a number of years. Then, some time prior to 1861—between 1850 and 1860—they closed the accounts of those commissioners and opened new accounts under the titles of these roads, and in doing that they charged the $1,400 appropriation and expenditure to the road under that title "South Fork of South Branch of Potomac River to Petersburg in Hardy County" and the $900 to the other road. So that at the present time, on the books of the internal improvement fund, the $1,400 shows as expended on the south fork of South Branch of Potomac River to Petersburg in Hardy County Road: whereas it should show, as charged to the road through Brock's Gap, as shown on page 4 of our exhibit.

The Special Master: In transferring the items they got 703 them transposed?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: The road was through Brock's Gap to what point?

The Witness: South Branch of Potomac River to Brock's Gap in Rockingham County.

Mr. Anderson: Part of it would be in West Virginia?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: And this report you have made is in accordance with the original entries and does not follow it after the transposition here made.

The Witness: That is it exactly.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 3, the Abbs Valley and Tug Road, $4,450; is that partly in Virginia and partly in West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir. Abbs Valley is in Tazewell County, in the present State of Virginia.

Q. This charge made by you here is the correct charge in your opinion?

A. It is.

Q. You made this division yourself, did you?

A. I made this division personally, yes, based on a mileage basis.

Q. The next item is Allegheny Mountain Turnpike, which has been wholly charged by Mr. Potter's account to West Virginia. Please state what you know about that?

A. I will have to refer to papers to get the location of the 704 beginning of that road.

(Continuing after reference to papers.) In the year 1834, there was an appropriation made to construct a road from Pendleton County to Pocahontas County. Both counties at that time were in the present State of West Virginia. The route laid out for that road is as follows. On the route of the road located from Stanton to Parkersburg, from Heevner's Store in the County of Pendleton, to Greenbrier river in the County of Pocahontas. From an inquiry which was made as to where Heevner's Store was located, we found that it was in that part of Pendleton County which in 1847 became Highland County, Virginia; so that the road is partly in both of the present States.

Mr. Anderson: If it is the same Heevner's Store that I know about it is now called Hightown.

Mr. McClintic: Yes, that is it.

Mr. Harrison: How long is that road?

The Witness: The reports of Volume 7 of the Board of Public Works gives the length of that road as 17 miles, 68 chains; and we were informed by individuals that reside along the road that it was eight miles in the present Highland County, Virginia.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 4, there is a charge, Trans-Allegheny Lunatic Asylum at Weston, $125,000. Did you examine some books I brought here a few days ago, from West Virginia, called the books of the restored government?

A. Those books were examined under my direction.

Q. Did you find anything as to the sum of $27,000 being 705 repaid into the treasury of the State?

A. The journal of the restored state of Virginia shows that $27,000 was paid into the Treasury of that State.

(Continuing after referring to book.) The $27,000 which has been referred to, and was deposited, according to the journal of the restored State, on July 22nd, 1861, one half in the Northwestern Bank at Wheeling, and one half in the Merchants' and Mechanics' Bank at Wheeling.

Mr. McClintic: On that same point, at this moment, I want to introduce as evidence the Auditor's report.

The Special Master: You had better have him read the entries that appear.

Mr. McClintic: Yes, we will have him do that.

The Special Master: The entries read as follows, appearing on page 4, under date of July 22, 1861. This is Wheeling, Virginia?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, Wheeling, Virginia, then.

The Special Master; Under the head of Wheeling, Virginia, July 22, 1861, appear the following entries.

The Witness: (Reading)

"Northwestern Bank at Wheeling.

"To certificate, John List, No. 7, Weston Asylum, $13,500."

The next entry reads as follows:

"Merchants and Mechanics Bank, Wheeling.

"To certificate, John List, Weston Lunatic Asylum, $13,500."

Both of those amounts are shown as deposited in the account kept in the ledger with those two banks. 706

By the Special Master:

Q. They are charged in the account for the two banks, and each bank is debited on that same date with the sum of $13,000?

A. That is correct.

Q. In the ledger account?

A. In the ledger account.

Mr. McClintic: I desire to introduce the auditor's report, Wheeling, October 1st, 1861, signed by the then Auditor of Virginia, Samuel Crane, in which appeared the following items: (Reading)

"From the Lunatic Asylum, West of the Allegheny Mountains, $27,000."

That is under the head of receipts. The whole report I desire to offer, but that is the only item I have.

The Special Master: That is the only item in the book to which you propose to refer?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Referring to plaintiff's Exhibit C-1, I find charged on page 1 thereof, Covington & Ohio Railroad, total, $1,212,354.85. Have you made any investigation of the amount expended on the Covington & Ohio Railroad by the State of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please take the statement handed you. Was that made by you?

A. (After examination.) Yes, sir; this was made by me personally.

Q. Please state the total amount that you believe should 707 be charged to the amounts expended, if the court should decide that any amount was proper.

The Special Master: You mean by that, I suppose, what he finds by his investigation that the books show?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir. What he believes to be correct from his examination.

A. After analyzing each account appearing in the construction books of the Covington & Ohio Railroad as closely as the records and entries would allow, and applying all expenditures which these construction books show were for money expended in what is now the present State of West Virginia, and dividing on a mileage basis only such items as could not be applied direct, I have arrived at a charge against West Virginia of $1,146,462.52.

Q. And do you in that statement charge the whole Western Division to West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Beginning at what section and going west, do you charge all to West Virginia?

The Special Master: Is that an item that the two experts can reconcile in all probability? I am referring to the details.

Mr. Anderson: I think they ought to be able to do it.

Mr. Harrison: I think they can; I don't think there is any doubt about it.

Mr. McClintic: It is about between $65,000 and $75,000, 708 there is a difference of that much between them.

The Special Master: If they are unable to agree on any detail, cannot they give me the concrete facts in connection with the detail, so I can pass upon it?

Mr. McClintic: I think so.

The Special Master: If they can, that would save us a lot of time.

Mr. Harrison: Before you go on, I think it would be well for the witness to answer the last question, that is, as to what section he began with.

The Special Master: Well, you will have access to his memoranda.

The last question was repeated by the stenographer, as follows:

"Q. Beginning at what section and going west do you charge all to West Virginia?"

The Witness: I do not see it now, but we have it without doubt.

Mr. Harrison: You are not able to give it now?

The Witness: No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Did you make any examination of what appears, after the State of West Virginia was formed, on the books of West Virginia as to any sales made by the State of Virginia of its stock in the Blue Ridge Road, or any of those items?

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. What, if you know, was paid the State of Virginia by the Virginia Central or the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad for the Blue Ridge Road?

Mr. Anderson: That is wholly in Virginia. I do not see 709 what it has to do with this inquiry.

Mr. McClintic: It has a good deal to do with the inquiry on our theory of the Covington & Ohio Railroad.

The Special Master: I will hear it de bene. Of course I cannot pass upon the force of it until I have all the facts before me. I will let it go in de bene.

Mr. Anderson: We merely enter an objection to it as irrelevant.

Mr. McClintic: I take it that all testimony is allowed on that theory. We have not objected many times for that reason.

The Special Master: Yes.

The Witness: The present State of Virginia received in 1870 from the Blue Ridge Railroad, $625.348.08 in State bonds and accrued interest on the State bonds.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. From whom?

A. From the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company.

Q. State, if you know, whether the State of Virginia was relieved of any guarantees on bonds of the Virginia Central Railroad by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad or the Virginia Central Railroad; and, if so, please state the amount?

A. The State of Virginia was relieved of the guarantee of bonds of the Virginia Central Railroad, amounting to $100,000; and it was relieved by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, taking up those bonds.

Q. State, if you know, the par value at least of the stock of 710 the Virginia Central Railroad Company owned by the State of Virginia on the 1st of January 1861.

Mr. Anderson: We object to that. He does not know the value.

Mr. McClintic: I am simply asking for the par value.

Mr. Anderson: All right, if it is the par value.

A. I can't state what the par value was. I can only state that the State of Virginia had paid up to the 1st of January, 1861, $1,927,382.57 for stock in the Virginia Central Railroad. She had paid that much on her subscriptions to the stock of the Virginia Central Railroad Company.

Q. What, if anything, did the Virginia Central Railroad owe the State at that time, if you know?

A. The railroad company owed the state $90,000 that had been loaned.

Q. Returning to Exhibit Plaintiff C-1, and referring to page 3, there is a road charged as the Strasburg and Capon Turnpike. Please explain, if you know, whether that road, or any part of it, is in the State of West Virginia?

A. The Strasburg and Capon Turnpike Company was incorporated in the year 1856. The route of the road was from Strasburg in the Shenendoah County and the present State of Virginia, to some point on the Winchester and Moorefield Road, at or near Hoff's gate. There was no report filed by that company which gave the exact location of the road. To get into the present State of West Virginia the road would have had to have gone over the Great 711
North Mountain, and on the maps which we had access to there is no such road shown. The road was to go from Strasburg in Shenendoah County, to some point at or near Hoff's Gate on the Winchester Road, and there is a road on the maps which I consulted, running from Strasburg to this Winchester and Moorefield Road, which would make this road entirely in the present State of Virginia.

The Special Master: You took it to be that road?

The Witness: Yes. I do not think the road went to Capon, which is in Hampshire County, and the present State of West Virginia, because the road to Capon from the Moorefield and Winchester Road was built by the latter road.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. In that connection, did you examine the Board of Public Works Report, 1857, page 215?

A. I made no particular note of that. I made no note of information gotten from that report.

Q. You have no recollection on that subject?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have no memoranda showing it?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On the same page, Mr. Scoville, appears the Winchester and Potomac Railroad, charging West Virginia $168,750 (referring to plaintiff's Exhibit C-1), and dividing it into four items. Please explain those items as to stock or loan or their character or 712 nature.

The Special Master: Is that page 3 at the bottom of the page?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

A. The first three items, aggregating $120,000 were paid by the State on account of its subscription to the stock of the Winchester and Potomac Railroad Company.

The item of $150,000 was loaned to the company.

In 1846 the Commonwealth of Virginia passed an act accepting in lieu of dividends on stock and interest on the loan, an annuity of $5,000. That annuity was paid in every year up to and including the year 1860. The ledger account, which carries the subscription of $120,000, to the stock, was closed on the books of the internal improvement fund with the explanation that the stock had been surrendered for the annuity.

After 1861, I think in 1866, the State of Virginia passed an act agreeing to accept stock or bonds of the State of Virginia in settlement of the principal of that annuity, and the State of Virginia did establish the principal of $83,333.33, which was the principal sum producing $5,000 annually at six per cent; the State accepted State bonds of Virginia for the $83,000 odd as principal, and the unpaid annuity up to the time of the settlement, amounting in all to $118,000.

Mr. Anderson: To satisfy the State bonds?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Anderson: That is bonds of the old State?

The Witness: Bonds of the old State. 713

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Were there any notes, so far as you know, given to the State of Virginia for that loan, or how was it evidenced as a loan, if you remember?

A. The only evidence that I have seen is an entry of it on the original books kept by the second auditor, which shows the money as being received. Just what was given for it I do not know.

Q. So, the State's interest in that consisted of $120,000 worth of stock and $150,000 worth of loans?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was settled, as you say?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On page 4, I find the item, James River and Kanawha interest. Please tell the court what you know about an item there of $100,000 charge, called bonds to Kanawha Board, in 1860?

A. Under an Act passed by Virginia on March 23, 1860, the State agreed to loan to the James River and Kanawha Company for the use of the Kanawha Board, which had been established to carry on the improvements of the Kanawha River, $200,000 in State bonds. I did not find that the $200,000 or $100,000, as shown on plaintiff's exhibit, had been turned over to the James River and Kanawha Company prior to January 1st, 1861.

Q. How much did you find had been turned over, if any sum, to the Kanawha Board?

A. $60,000.

Q. That was bonds of the State of Virginia under the Act 714 of March 23, 1860?

A. Yes, sir, as a loan to the James River and Kanawha—

By the Special Master:

Q. What date was the $60,000 of bonds turned over?

A. I haven't the exact date, but it was prior to January 1st, 1861.

Q. It was during the year 1860?

A. During the year 1860.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. That was only a loan to the James River and Kanawha Company, was it not?

A. Only a loan.

Q. The plaintiff has charged under that head something over $300,000; for Kanawha River, $91,666.72; extension of Kanawha Turnpike, $87,285.36; 82 per cent Kanawha turnpike, $144,772.86; Gauley Bridge, $1,167.68. Those were, if payments at all, only payments by the Company, were they not, for the purpose of construction or something?

A. Those payments, without attempting to say whether the amounts there are correct or not, were on account of the improvements of the James River Canal proposition made by the State, improvements carried on by the State, and expenditures made by the State. But under an act passed in 1832 the State surrendered its interest in the improvements, on the James River Canal to the newly incorporated James River and Kanawha Company for stock in that company. So that these payments are not charges against West Virginia as direct expenditures, but became during the period under examination investments in the stock of the 715
James River and Kanawha Company.

Q. By the State of Virginia?

A. By the State of Virginia.

The Special Master: First they were investments, and afterwards converted into stock?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Were these particular investments made before 1832; were they not made long after 1832?

A. I can't say as to that; but I think they were made before 1832. They expended large sums before 1832.

Q. But were those large sums expended out yonder in West Virginia before 1832?

A. A very small proportion of the large sums were expended in West Virginia.

Q. Before 1832, was anything expended in West Virginia?

A. Yes, sir; they commenced.

Q. In West Virginia?

A. Yes, they commenced on the Kanawha Road before 1832.

Q. Have you investigated these particular charges here made and just read, as to the date when they were expended, and time, and so forth?

A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Have you the working papers that show them?

A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Could you get them immediately or later? 716

A. (After searching among papers.) 2I have them here.

Q. Please state, if you know, when those sums were expended, or such of them as were expended, as far as your papers show?

A. I cannot testify as to when it was expended without further papers. I find I have not the papers here which give the dates.

Q. Sometime later I wish you would make me a statement to that effect, and if we have opportunity we will show it.

Mr. Harrison: Do you know when the Act incorporating the James River and Kanawha Company became operative? It was passed in 1832, was it not?

The Witness: It became operative in June, 1835.

Mr. Anderson: That is, the Company was organized then?

The Witness: Yes, the Company was organized then.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 11, I believe it is, of Plaintiff's Exhibit C-1 (Defendant's Exhibit G-1), I find the item of $2,500 in 1847, charged on the Plaintiff's Exhibit, Morgan County road, from Bath to St. John's River, $2,500. Do you know anything about that?

A. That money was loaned to the trustees.

The Special Master: What is that item?

Mr. McClintic: Page 11, Exhibit Plaintiff's C-1; Morgan County road from Bath to St. John's River. It is a similar loan to the town of Bath to the one shown in our Exhibit G-1. I wanted to prove the fact by Mr. Scoville.

The Witness: The money was loaned to the trustees of the town of Bath, and had not been paid back into the Treasury 717 of the State prior to January 1st, 1861, and on that date stood as a loan against the trustees of the town of Bath.

Mr. Harrison: It was for the purpose of building that road, was it not?

The Witness: I don't know what the purpose was. I know it was a loan to the trustees of the town of Bath.

Mr. Harrison: Did not the record disclose any purpose at all?

The Special Master: What page is that found on in your exhibit G-1?

Mr. McClintic: It is noted on page 2, and then it is noted somewhere else later on.

The Special Master: Yes, I find it.

Mr. McClintic: Also on page 9. It is noted again on page 9.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 11 of Exhibit C-1, Louisa Fork of the Sandy River Road, $1,000. Did you find any such road in your examination?

A. I did not find any such road in the whole State of Virginia. I did find that that road was in the present State of Kentucky.

Mr. Harrison: How did you find that; what source of information did you have?

The Witness: I don't think I mean the present State of Kentucky; I would like to withdraw that answer and consult the papers here.

Mr. Anderson: There is a Louisa Fork and a Levisa 718
Fork. The Levisa Fork is in Buchanan County, Virginia.

Mr. McClintic: The same fork depends a good deal on map. Sometimes it is "Louisa," and sometimes it is "Levisa."

Mr. Mollohan: When was that made?

The Witness: The appropriation was made in 1823. That road runs through Buchanan, Russell and Tazewell Counties, all in the present State of Virginia, being in the southwestern part of the State.

Mr. Harrison: What is the terminal point?

The Witness: This road was made in connection with a road built by the State of Kentucky, and the entire road, including what was built by Kentucky in Virginia, was intended to run from Mt. Sterling, in Kentucky, by way of Prestonburg, in the direction of Tazewell Court House, to intersect the main western road leading from Richmond to Abingdon. The Commissioners who had charge of the building of that road were directed to construct the road from the latter point, that is the road leading from Richmond to Abingdon, thence up the Louisa Fork of the Big Sandy River, through the most practical route, through the rich lands of the Clinch River.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. What act was that?

A. January 15, 1826.

Q. Have you got the page of the act?

A. Yes, sir; page 81.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 19, Mr. Scoville, I find charged the balance of 719 interest on bonds of the City of Wheeling, $15,115.64. State, if you know, whether that item was paid to the State of Virginia, and if so when?

A. That item was paid to the State of Virginia in the year 1867, with interest, which amounted to about $6,000, as shown by the books in the Auditor's office, the auditor of public accounts.

(Informal discussion followed, about the question of holding a night session, at the conclusion of which, at 5:40 o'clock P. M., a recess was taken until 8 o'clock P. M.)

783

[Vol. 6. May 7, 1909. Direct Examination of C. E. Scoville.]

The Special Master: Of course I have no objection to proceeding in this way, but as long as that understanding is practically entered into I think you will make more satisfactory progress by letting them in the first instance undertake to weed it out. With that exception are you through, Brother McClintic, with this witness?

Mr. McClintic: Just one moment. (Continuing after consultation among counsel.) I want to prove in some form, so as to get it into the record, the amount of tolls or dividends, dividends, I should say, paid in by these stock companies to Virginia prior to January 1, 1861. I mean all the road companies, the navigation companies, the bridge companies and things that paid dividends.

The Special Master: Have you a schedule?

Mr. McClintic: I haven't it prepared in such a way as to put it in as such.

The Special Master: Then why do you not have your experts prepare it in the interim?

Mr. McClintic: That can be put in, then, without going over in detail the items with this witness?

The Special Master: How is that?

Mr. McClintic: I say I can have the experts, Mr. Dixey and 784
Mr. Scoville, make a statement of that by roads and companies, showing the companies that did pay dividends, and a statement that all others did not pay dividends. There are only a few that did pay dividends.

The Special Master: Of course, when we suspend, we shall have to suspend for the purpose of having another hearing, because there are reports that have to be made by these experts. Brother McClintic, you may have prepared your statement, and as soon as you get it prepared submit it to the other side, so they will be prepared to criticise it if they have occasion to do so.

Mr. McClintic: I do not now think of anything that I want to ask at this time. There are some things we will have to go into when we get this in.

Mr. Spooner: I would like to put one or two questions upon a matter concerning which you testified. I would like a little fuller information referring to these corporations, to the construction of turnpikes, and bridges, and the like, navigation companies, and all that. I understood you to say that in no case—I mean those that are set forth in these schedules—did Virginia subscribe for more than three-fifths of the capital stock, and in some cases two-fifths, and in other cases two-fifths.

The Special Master: And in some cases one-fifth.

Mr. Spooner: Some cases one-fifth.

The Witness: I do not think I made that statement.

The Special Master: Mr. Dixey made that statement.

785

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Well, two-fifths or three-fifths. Did you testify, or did I incorrectly understand you, that in no instance did the State of Virginia own all of the outstanding stock in any of those corporations?

A. I do not recall any instance where the State of Virginia did own the entire outstanding capital stock.

Q. Where the State owned two-fifths, were there majority stockholders owning the other three-fifths?

A. There were.

Q. And where the State owned three-fifths, there were minority stockholders owning the other two-fifths?

A. There were.

Q. Did you testify, or did you mean to be understood as testifying, that Virginia, in either case, made no payments upon the stock subscriptions until the other stockholders had made payments on their stock subscriptions?

A. I intended to convey just that impression.

Q. Was that by statutory provision?

A. It was. It was provided in the Acts making the appropriations. It was the general rule and custom.

By the Special Master:

Q. That is, the payments were made upon call upon all the stockholders?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The State paying in the same proportion that the private stockholders paid?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Virginia did not pay until the private stockholders had paid; is that what you stated?

Mr. Conrad: No, he did not state that. He is not a lawyer, 786 and he misunderstands it. As the Master suggests, it was simply a call.

Mr. Spooner: I understand—

Mr. Conrad: I know you understand, but he will do himself an injustice.

The Special Master: The question now is, whether the payment of the private subscribers was antecedent to the payment by the State.

The Witness: If the payments were made according to law, they were not antecedent. They were pari passu with the private subscriptions.

Cross Examination.

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. You have been examined upon this Auditor's report of Auditor Crane. We will offer it in evidence at the proper time. Now, as you have been examined on it, I want to ask you what you found in the course of your examination, what you found out about this report of Auditor Crane, made November 25, 1862.

Mr. Harrison. What auditor?

Mr. Conrad: Auditor of Public Accounts of the restored Government of Virginia.

Mr. Mollohan: The State of Virginia. There is no restored in it.

Mr. Conrad: I will read this. (Reading):

"It has about $400,000 worth of stock in the Northwestern bank at Wheeling standing in the name of the Commonwealth, part in the name of the Board of Public Works, and part in the 787 name of the Literary Fund. The State has $50,000 of stock or loans in the name of the Literary Fund in the bank at Fairmont, and from $50,000 to $70,000 in the Exchange bank at Weston, making about $500,000 in all. She is also a stockholder in the improvements of the Kanawha River, how much the Auditor does not know. The State is the owner of several important turnpike roads in the northwestern part of the State, and is a stockholder in many other turnpike and bridge companies. The power to control and use the stock before and pending the settlement with the old State: Some legislation, therefore, upon the subject will be necessary."

Did you have occasion to look into this item of $500,000 made up of these stocks referred to in this report?

A. Yes, sir; that has been covered.

Q. You have covered it with the amount of $500,000?

The Special Master: Covered in what?

The Witness: In the testimony that I have given this evening.

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. To this amount of $500,000?

A. As to the Northwestern Bank, $450,000 par value, all of which is not paid in cash. As to the Fairmont Bank, $50,000 paid in cash.

Q. I am referring to what the auditor says—

Mr. McClintic: That is the auditor of Virginia reporting to Virginia, is it not? 788

Mr. Conrad: To gratify you, I will assent to that statement.

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. I ask you if you have any further explanation to make of that.

The Special Master: Does the testimony you have given in connection with that cover all you have to say about that?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Conrad: We will at the proper time ask to offer this report in evidence. That is all I have to ask you, sir.

(The witness under examination, Mr. Scoville, was accordingly excused from the witness stand.)

Mr. Conrad: There is another statement contained in another auditor's report, which, if the Court will permit me, as it is very brief, I would like to read. This is a very noble aspiration.

(Reading):

"If, however, we succeed in making a new State, new expenses will be necessary."

All this will be necessary! 789

"When all this has been completed and the red line put down, the citizens of the new state will be one of the happiest people upon the Globe. No large State debt to pay; no oppressor's hand upon them; the tree of liberty to shade them; the flag of the Union to cheer them, and the providence of God to bless. Who would not rejoice to dwell in such a state?"

[Vol. 7. May 6, 1909.] 734

MR. CLIFFORD E. SCOVILLE
resumed the stand for further direct examination.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Mr. Scoville, please tell the court about the two items for Gauley Bridge, charged one under the James River and the other a direct charge to Gauley Bridge in Defendant's Exhibit C-1, as to whether or no those were both James River expenditures or not, and whether or not the State got stock for it.

A. The first item is on page 4 of Plaintiff's Exhibit C-1, 735 under James River & Kanawha interests. The item reads "Gauley Bridge, $1,167.68." I have not been able to find where Mr. Potter obtained that figure, but I presume it came from the analysis of some account in the James River expenditures.

Mr. Mollohan: Did you find the date?

A. Mr. Potter gives a reference here—"J. R. Journal," meaning James River Journal, "B page 464," but that item does not show on page 464 as an item in itself.

Mr. Harrison: I will say to the witness, in explanation, that that reference was not intended to include Gauley Bridge. It applies to the items above Gauley Bridge, and you were misled by it. It is a typographical error.

The Witness: It is bracketed all the way down.

Mr. Harrison: Yes; it is bracketed all the way down, but the bracket ought to have stopped before it included the Gauley Bridge item.

The Witness: The second charge on account of the Gauley Bridge is on page 8 of the Plaintiff's Exhibit C-1, and amounts to $1,419.45. The third item extended into the total column from the bottom. That amount was extended under an act passed in 1837, and was paid to Joseph Blair and William Shields. The date of the act is March 6, 1837, page 291, and is for the balance due for construction of bridge over Gauley River. That is not a direct charge against West Virginia, but is an additional amount paid on account of James River improvements, for which the State received stock under an act passed in 1832.

Mr. Harrison: You mean it was a stock subscription and 736 not a direct expenditure?

The Witness: Yes, sir; practically that.

By the Special Master:

Q. The money was paid to these two men of whom you speak, who did the work on the bridge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But for the disbursement the State received stock?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: But was it a stock subscription?

A. Not primarily. It was a part of the James River improvements built by the State, but all of those improvements were turned over to the James River & Kanawha Company for stock in that company. So in that way it becomes a part of the cost of the stock which was received by the State.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Mr. Scoville, there was charged on page 13 the Northwestern Bank of Wheeling, $450,000. Please explain to the court—

The Special Master: Is that the same bank to which this certificate relates which you have just put in?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Please explain to the court how much of that sum of $450,000 was paid in money by the State.

A. Of the total stock, amounting in par value to $450,000, there was paid in cash by the State $425,091.33. The balance due on the State total subscription, amounting to $450,000, was paid by dividends on the stock which had been subscribed for by the State, which accrued before the subscription was fully paid for, and from those dividends, which amounted to exactly $33,000, there 737 was a deduction of an interest charge against the State, which left the net amount left them on dividends $24,908.67.

The Special Master: Which made up the balance of the $450,000?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. State to the court how many branches that bank had, if you know, and where they were situated?

A. The Northwestern Bank of Virginia was authorized to establish a great many branches that it never did establish. From reports which can be found in the documents of the House of Delegates of Virginia, we found that the following branches were actually established: One at Wellsburg, one at Parkersburg, and one at Jeffersonville, in Tazewell county, in the present State of Virginia.

Q. State next the sale of a part of the stock of the Northwestern Bank prior to January 1, 1861.

A. In the year 1857 the Commonwealth sold 1,082 shares of Northwestern Bank stock for $113,671.42, and turned the proceeds of that sale over to the Sinking Fund. That transaction is shown in the books of the Commonwealth—the original books.

Q. State what other stock, if any, the State of Virginia acquired in that Bank, and how?

A. We referred, first, to stock in that Northwestern Bank, amounting to a par value of $454,000. That is the total amount of stock which the State of Virginia purchased in that bank. $400,000 of that was purchased through what was known as the Commonwealth or General Fund, and $50,000 was purchased through the Literary Fund. 738

Q. Was there any bonus stock given to the State in that bank?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Conrad: I wish you would explain what you mean by bonus stock.

Mr. McClintic: It is a franchise stock. Both Mr. Potter and Mr. Dixey explained it.

Mr. Spooner: Do you mean payment for the franchise?

Mr. McClintic: Yes; the franchise tax you might say, as I understand it.

Mr. Conrad: Do you mean it was stock in addition to the entire stock of the corporation?

Mr. McClintic: The State exacted from the corporation so many shares of stock for nothing.

Mr. Conrad: Of its authorized capital stock, the State required that so much should be turned back to it for the stock.

The Special Master: That is, in addition to the stock subscribed and paid for?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: So that in a sense the State would have stock on its hands without having rendered any compensation therefor except as it was credited to the franchise and the price of the franchise of the bank.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. How many shares of stock were there in this case?

A. There were 326 shares, of the par value of $100 each, amounting to $32,600. 739

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. Do you find it called bonus stock in any Act of Assembly?

A. Yes, sir; I am quite sure it was invariably referred to as bonus stock.

Q. In the Acts of Assembly?

A. Yes, sir; I am positive of that fact.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 2 of plaintiff's exhibit C-1, and on page 3 of defendant's exhibit C-1, is the Northwestern Turnpike Road. You made a thorough examination of those books yourself, I believe?

A. I did; yes, sir.

Q. Please explain the facts in relation to that charge, stating how much money was paid, how you arrived at it, and the tolls and other questions connected with it.

A. The Northwestern Turnpike Road was built entirely by the State, and separate construction books were kept of the expenditures. From those books we analyzed the various accounts of the expenditures, and applied as far as possible all expenditures which could be applied directly to either the present State of Virginia or West Virginia, and items which the books did not clearly record the localities on, we divided on a mileage basis, and on that plan we arrived at a charge against West Virginia of $573,994.39, and that amount includes tolls and I think small amounts of other income.

Q. What page of defendant's exhibit C-1 do you find that? 740

A. Page 3. It includes tolls and other income amounting to $173,670.39, the total amount of which went back into the road, was expended on the road.

Q. Have you given credit to West Virginia for her mileage proportion of those tolls?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On exhibit F-1?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please look at page 4 of the same exhibit, C-1, of the defendant.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Before you do that, if it does not interrupt you, I would like to ask him a question, to explain it a little more fully. You have included in that charge tolls and other charges, you say?

A. Tolls and other income.

Q. I should have said other receipts, amounting to $173,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, can you state without any special delay whether the corresponding exhibit filed by the plaintiff and prepared by Mr. Potter includes tolls and those other items of credit you speak of?

A. I cannot state, Mr. Harrison, but if I am not mistaken, it has been testified by Mr. Potter that the tolls were not taken into account either way.

Q. He shows a charge against West Virginia under that item of $426,053, as against $573,994.39, and I simply wanted 741 to develop the fact that the difference is accounted for by the fact that Mr. Potter took no account of tolls and the other credits that have been included there.

A. That does account very largely for the difference. The difference between Mr. Potter's statement and our statement on that road is $153,920.22; but on our defendant's exhibit F-1, we take credit for $171,194.10 for a proportionate toll on a mileage basis, so that the difference after allowing for those tolls is $2,726.12.

Q. Eliminating the tolls, then, the only difference between yourself and Mr. Potter is some two thousand and odd dollars?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which you spoke of, which is classified under the head of other credits, or at least described by you among other credits.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. In the $151,000 you included both the tolls and the other credits?

A. Oh, yes.

The Special Master: So that there is really a discrepancy of a little over $2,000?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

The Special Master: That is one of the matters they will have to reconcile.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You say the tolls coming in from the operation of the road were extended along with any other operating fund for 742 the maintenance of the road?

A. And other purposes; expended on the road; yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: That is all I want to ask.

The Special Master: I suppose they were expended for maintenance and operating expenses, were they not?

Mr. Harrison: I take it they were.

By the Special Master:

Q. Did I understand they were for new construction or simply operating and maintenance expenses? What is the fact about that, Mr. Scoville?

A. They were for both. In other words, I don't think it would be possible to say just how those tolls were applied, what was the exact application of that money; but it went back into the road, and at the time it did go back, they were under construction expenses as well as operating expenses.

Q. At the time it went back, they were constructing the road then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were constructing additional road?

A. Oh, yes; and they were also operating a part of it.

Mr. McClintic: The road was several hundred miles long, your Honor.

The Special Master: Yes; I did not know what the fact might be. I do not know that it is of any significance, anyway.

743

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You say it would be impossible for you to tell for just what purposes the money derived as tolls was applied?

A. I don't think it would be possible.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On page 4, the Staunton & Parkersburg Road. Please explain in a general way about that. That is defendant's exhibit C-1, page 4.

A. The Staunton & Parkersburg Road was also built wholly by the State, and construction books were kept, in which the expenses on account of that road were recorded and the accounts appearing in those books were closely and carefully analyzed and treated exactly the same as the Northwestern Turnpike accounts were treated.

The Special Master: The Northwestern Turnpike Road was also built wholly by the State?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Have you there, Mr. Scoville, plaintiff's exhibit D-1?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: I would like to ask Mr. Scoville a question. Right there, if Mr. McClintic will allow me?

Mr. McClintic: Certainly.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You show as a charge against West Virginia under the Staunton & Parkersburg Road item, $288,807.56, do you not?

A. Yes, sir. 743½

Q. Turning to the plaintiff's corresponding exhibit dealing with that item, on page 3, plaintiff's exhibit C-1, the amount charged against West Virginia is shown to be $284,232.64?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or within about $4,000 of the amount shown by you?

A. Yes, sir; but in connection with that Staunton & Parkersburg charge on our exhibit, we also take credit on our exhibit F-1, which covers receipts for $18,952.90 for West Virginia's proportion of tolls on a mileage basis; so that after applying that, it makes the difference considerably larger.

By the Special Master:

Q. It makes your sum smaller instead of larger?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, if you struck a balance?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Taking a credit for tolls?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the tolls handled in that case as they were in the Northwestern Turnpike Company case?

A. Just exactly the same.

The Special Master: The money went on to the road for its maintenance and operation and construction?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Spooner: It was self-supporting to that extent.

836

[Vol. 7. July 1, 1909. Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit C-1.]

[The Special Master]:

The next is Paragraph 3 (reading from the decree):

"All expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia since any part of the debt was contracted."

Mr. Anderson: I now submit this exhibit, marked C-1.

(The exhibit referred to was filed with the stenographer, and marked "Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit C-1.)

Mr. Harrison: We submit what we call Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit C-1.

The Special Master: I am not at all particular about the language, but I think we had better have consistent language throughout. I am willing to call them all revised schedules or substitute schedules. My own notion was that we might substitute these for the others, but if you prefer the other method, Brother Harrison, very well. 837

Mr. Harrison: No, not at all—

The Special Master: The Plaintiffs submit Plaintiff's Substitute Schedule C-1. I will say that of course when we come to make up this record there will not be any occasion for showing that several schedules in reference to the same subject have been submitted. There is no occasion for the record disclosing how we reach the agreement, where we do agree. This is the Plaintiff's Substitute Schedule C-1. Now, am I to understand that the computations appearing on that schedule as to amount are agreed to by Virginia and West Virginia?

Mr. McClintic: I understand not.

Mr. Carlisle: There is a statement there which shows, I think—

Mr. Harrison: Substitute Schedule C-1 that you hold in your hand shows in complete detail the points of disagreement, both as to amounts and as to classification.

Mr. Carlisle: And as to everything else except what is enumerated as disagreement, there is an agreement.

Mr. Harrison: I would not make it as broad as that.

The Special Master: Let us make it just as it is. We will not have anything the result of inadvertence or misunderstanding if we can help it.

Mr. Dixey: There are some adjustments yet that have not been entirely agreed to. There are some differences in figures that appear when we go to check up the statements. I think the differences can be reconciled, but as I understand it, they are not yet all reconciled. 838

The Special Master: Then, why do we not have these reconciled before we agree on it? If it is probable that the experts on both sides will later, at some time, be able to submit to us a complete schedule of agreement under this paragraph, would it not seem to you, Mr. Carlisle, that we had better suspend this until then?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: How does that strike you, Brother Anderson?

Mr. Anderson: Our information was that there was an agreement as to amounts. Of course there is not an agreement as to the classification—

Mr. Dixey: I think it could be adjusted in a few hours.

The Special Master: Very well. Then, suppose we suspend on this for the present in the hope that the experts may be able to agree on the items?

Mr. Harrison: We were not aware of any disagreement ourselves.

The Special Master: Well, I will ask Mr. Dixey and Mr. Potter to get together at the intermission and see if they can reconcile that, and if they cannot during that time, we will see if further time will be needed.

The Special Master: We now come to Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit C-1. 874

Mr. Harrison: That is suspended. That is still open.

The Special Master: You have not any evidence, so far as you know, if the experts agree on the figures, that you wish to put in; you have not any additional evidence? 875

Mr. Harrison: No, sir.

965

[Vol. 7. July 2, 1909. Plaintiff's Substitute Exhibit C-1.]

Mr. Anderson: C-1 we had better put in first, I reckon. That has been modified somewhat. We wish to substitute this for the one filed. We will withdraw the other and put this in (indicating).

Mr. McClintic: We do not want any withdrawals.

The Special Master: No; they are all in. Plaintiff's Substitute C-2. Am I correct in my understanding that all the computations that appear on this schedule are agreed to as being correct in amount (referring to Substitute Exhibit C-1).

Mr. Dixey: Not all the computations, because that includes certain amounts which the plaintiffs charged to West Virginia. 966

The Special Master: What I want to know is this: whether the items are correctly stated as to amounts.

Mr. Dixey: As to the totals, yes; not that proportion chargeable to West Virginia.

Mr. Carlisle: You agree upon the aggregates, but you do not agree upon the proportions.

Mr. Dixey: That is it.

The Special Master: What are the items as to which you disagree about the proportions?

Mr. Dixey: There are a great number. They are all in this schedule and marked here (indicating).

Mr. Anderson: What schedules?

Mr. Dixey: This is C. All the items that are marked in this last column, defendant's Exhibit G-1, and there are a great number of them; there are 138 items on the schedule. I believe we agree as to this amount in the total column. There is no agreement as to the amounts in the right hand column marked "amounts chargeable to West Virginia."

Mr. Harrison: You do agree upon the percentage?

Mr. Dixey: On the percentage of the property in West Virginia; not the percentage as a charge.

Mr. Anderson: You object to the classification.

Mr. Dixey: We do not agree about that at all, as to amounts, because we have not verified it.

The Special Master: This is under Paragraph 3, page 4. 967
Let me take one item. Here is the total, under the No. 1, Abbs Valley and Tug Road. This schedule shows the part of the improvement in West Virginia to be 90.1 per cent. Now, what I want to know is whether that percentage is agreed upon.

Mr. Dixey: We agree to that item in its entirety, because that is on our Exhibit C-1. It is only those that are on our Exhibit G that we do not agree to.

The Special Master: The third item, Berkeley & Hampshire turnpike, part of improvement in West Virginia, 42.96 per cent. Is that percentage agreed upon?

Mr. Dixey: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: The total there is $16,572. Is that agreed upon?

Mr. Dixey: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Then comes the amount chargeable to West Virginia, $15,322.47. Is that agreed upon?

Mr Dixey: No, sir. We do not agree on that.

Mr. Harrison: In what respect do you not agree?

Mr. Dixey: We do not agree that there is a charge there of any amount. That still has to be determined.

Mr. Harrison: That is not for the accountants to determine.

The Special Master: Let me find out right here where we are. Your contention is that it is not chargeable at all, but if chargeable, would it not be 92.46 per cent. of that amount?

Mr. Dixey: I don't know; it depends on what basis the charge is made upon. Is is true that 92.46 per cent. of that 968 property in mileage lies in West Virginia; but whether that would be a proper charge or not I would not say.

The Special Master: That is for me to say.

Mr. McClintic: And if you charge to us that sum, what is the stock worth; that is the question for you to decide.

The Special Master: You must all bear in mind that when I come to pass upon this I shall pass upon it as it appears in the record. When I take this item here to illustrate, the total, $16,572, you agree upon that, and then it is said that that percentage of that item is in West Virginia. Well, if I charge it on the basis of percentage, I will charge West Virginia with $15,322. I do not say now, of course, what I would do. But I understand that you agree on those figures. But you do not agree that it is chargeable on that basis.

Mr. Dixey: We agree that that percentage of the physical mileage is in West Virginia.

The Special Master: Then the question comes up whether that is a proper way to estimate that charge.

Mr. Carlisle: In the bill of Virginia against West Virginia and in this case there is a charge that West Virginia received from the State of Virginia under the Acts of 1863 certain stocks, and a claim is made for stocks that are worth millions of dollars. They also claim in that bill that West Virginia is chargeable for all the money that was expended in paying for those stocks.

The Special Master: I understand your position is that that is a duplicate charge?

Mr. McClintic: And your Honor has to decide under which 969 one of these charges these things have to be met. The accountants cannot settle that question.

Mr. Harrison: That is what I said.

Mr. Anderson: We do not propose to anticipate the argument, but my friend entirely misstates the fact about it.

The Special Master: But you are not embarrassed by that; that will not affect you at all.

Mr. Carlisle: I did not make any argument; I just stated the situation.

The Special Master: I am glad to have counsel make any suggestions; but there is not a single thing that counsel states, a single suggestion, that will have the slighest weight with me in reaching my conclusions. I am going to wait for the argument before I begin to make up my mind at all. Of course, I do not mean to say that I do not like to have suggestions from counsel; but anything that is said now will not influence me one way or the other in making up my mind.

Mr. Anderson: I want to say that they either have to stand on the Wheeling ordinance, or not stand on it.

Mr. Carlisle: So do you.

The Special Master: You are both either on or off.

Mr. Anderson: Under the Wheeling ordinance West Virginia is to be charged with all the expenses made in the territory constituting the new State.

The Special Master: The only thing I am interested in now is this. In the first place, to get this schedule so I will know what it means. There are some of these items as to which Mr. Potter 970 claimed a certain sum was expended in West Virginia on the basis of a certain mileage, and Mr. Dixey claimed another sum on the basis of another mileage. If they have reconciled the thing so that they agree on their mileage and total amounts, and agree on the percentage that would follow, that is all I want to know.

Mr. Harrison: That is true.

The Special Master: Now, what weight I will give to that is another question.

Mr. McClintic: It is a small matter, but referring to item 16 on the next page—

The Special Master: Just a moment. Do you get the significance of my suggestion?

Mr. Carlisle: Certainly.

Mr. McClintic: We do not agree to that seventeen per cent. there, in item 16, Mountain Lake and Sulphur Springs turnpike.

The Special Master: Let me make inquiry right now. Here are under the first heading 22 items. Am I correct in my understanding that the amounts stated in the column under the heading, "Part of improvements in West Virginia," are agreed upon by both sides as being accurately stated?

Mr. McClintic: Except item 16.

The Special Master: Except item 16. Am I correct in understanding that in Plaintiff's Revised Exhibit C-1, or substitute Exhibit C-1, on pages 4, 5 and 6, including 22 items, that the parties are in agreement on all of the sums appearing in the column, "part of improvement in West Virginia," except item No. 16. Do I state that correctly? Mark that down in the record. 971

Mr. Potter: Do you want to summarize the first division of this? If you do, on page 8 is the total.

The Special Master: I guess I am right where I want to be. I will get your suggestions as I go along. I am going to clean this schedule up in its logical order, and when we agree to anything we will settle that. Am I stating that right?

Mr. McClintic: As I understand it you agree on column 1—

Mr. Anderson: I haven't got it before me.

The Special Master: Just answer my questions. Do the parties agree on all the claims mentioned in the column headed, "Part of improvement in West Virginia," except as to item 16?

Mr. McClintic: I think so.

Mr. Harrison: Let us see what the disagreement is about that.

The Special Master: I will attend to that. You cannot make any progress unless you proceed logically.

Mr. McClintic: Now, take the next claim.

Mr. Harrison: 16, you say, is not agreed on?

The Special Master: One moment. Do the parties agree on the sum stated in the column marked "Part of the improvement in West Virginia," with the exception of item 16?

Mr. McClintic: I understand so, yes.

The Special Master: Very well. Mark that down, that the parties do so agree. 972

Mr. Conley: We are not agreeing that we owe it.

The Special Master: No, that is not implied at all.

Mr. Conley: But the record does not show that.

The Special Master: Have the record show that the Master inquires whether they agree on the amounts stated.

Mr. Conley: How easy it would be for the Court, not understanding what is going on here, to understand from the record that we agree that that is a proper charge.

The Special Master: Well, let me state it in the record again, that there is no agreement that has yet been made, or intended to be made, that will be intended to bind or will bind—and this is the fourth or fifth time I have stated this—either party as to their classification or as to whether they are or are not a proper subject of credit. The agreement only goes so far as to fix the amount. A record might be so construed that there would be some misunderstanding, and you are perfectly right, Mr. Attorney General, to have it distinctly understood that no agreement that has been made or that will be made in connection with any of these items in any of these schedules binds either party as to their classification, or as to whether they are or are not a proper subject of credit. That will be distinctly understood, and I think is now clear upon the record.

Mr. Conley: You stated that broadly on yesterday; that was my understanding also, but I wanted it to appear so clearly on the record that there would not possibly be any doubt about it.

Mr. Anderson: That was stated a half a dozen times.

The Special Master: Well, it does not hurt to have it stated 973 again. Now, as to item 16.

Mr. McClintic: I took the deposition of a witness on that question, and we claim it should be 16-2/3 per cent. instead of 17.39 per cent.

Mr. Harrison: Do you not agree, Mr. Dixey, with Mr. Potter on that?

Mr. Dixey: No, sir.

The Special Master: It is either 17.39 or—what is the other figure?

Mr. McClintic: It is either 17.39 or 16-2/3 per cent.

The Special Master: There is a difference, then, of about one per cent. Do you want to waste any time on that?

Mr. Anderson: No.

Mr. McClintic: It is merely a matter of proof by my witness. I can prove that by my witness.

The Special Master: Well, shall I put in 16-2/3 instead of 17.39?

Mr. Harrison: We have been acceding and conceding—

The Special Master: You do not have to accede to anything. The question is, will Virginia agree to that being 16-2/3?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir; we will.

The Special Master: Let that go into the record that way, then.

Mr. Anderson: That would be less than $48.

The Special Master: On page 6 I notice, "Revised figures, June 30, 1909, construction charged to West Virginia, page 5, $465,732.11," and other pages there, there being six totals in all. 974

Mr. Dixey: That all relates back, if you will look at the preceding page, to the Northwestern turnpike.

The Special Master: The computations are agreed to, are they?

Mr. Dixey: As I understand it, they are, yes, sir.

The Special Master: Now, take up page 7. Do those summaries also result from the previous computations?

Mr. Dixey: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Then they are agreed to. Now, let us take up page 8.

Mr. Harrison: That is part of what you have already been considering.

The Special Master: Page 8 is?

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

The Special Master: Some of the items already considered?

Mr. Harrison: No, that is a continuation.

The Special Master: Very well. Let me take those. Beginning on page 8, and running to 15—

Mr. McClintic: Page 8 ends the first division.

The Special Master: Oh, yes. Now, page 8, those are the figures, the computations, appearing in the three columns, "Part of improvement in West Virginia," the total, and "Amount chargeable to West Virginia;" and the amounts agreed upon as correctly stated.

Mr. Anderson: There is a change in the total, but that is made in another place. 975

The Special Master: Where there is an error in computation, that can be fixed. Are those amounts agreed upon?

Mr. Dixey: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: They are agreed upon, and let it be so marked in the record. Now, beginning at page 9 and running to page 15, the amounts of various items that appear on those pages; are the amounts of the various items as appearing on those pages agreed to?

Mr. Dixey: 8 to 15, inclusive, all with the exception of the last item, marked 112 Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum, are agreed to.

The Special Master: Where is the item?

Mr. Dixey: 112, the last item, Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum.

The Special Master: We can take care of that. All of the items on page 9 to page 15, under the column of "Amount chargeable to West Virginia," it is agreed that the amounts are correctly stated; the parties still agree. Now, as to 112, Trans-Alleghany Lunatic Asylum, $125,000, is it or not agreed that that is the correct amount, without respect to whether it is chargeable or not?

Mr. Carlisle: There is $27,000 difference there.

The Special Master: There is $27,000 difference there. What gives rise to that difference?

Mr. Dixey: The $27,000 that was returned from the Lunatic Asylum to the State.

The Special Master: Am I to understand that you agree 976 that in the first instance there was $125,000 appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. Dixey: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: And was it turned over to the Lunatic Asylum Fund?

Mr. Dixey: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Then afterwards, your contention is that that was returned to the State?

Mr. Dixey: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: And therefore the $125.000 should be stated as minus $27,000?

Mr. Dixey: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: What do you say to that, Mr. Attorney General?

Mr. Anderson: Our friends are mistaken as to the facts. The facts are these. The $27,000 was paid to the Northwestern Lunatic Asylum and turned over to the Board of Directors. A military raid was made from Wheeling and that was taken from the Northwestern Lunatic Asylum. They were afraid the Confederates would get hold of it, and so that money was taken to Wheeling, and every dollar of it was expended on the Northwestern Lunatic Asylum in West Virginia.

The Special Master: What do you say to that, Brother McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: That is absolutely wrong. The money was paid into the treasury in the summer of 1861 and spent by the restored Government of Virginia for the purposes of government, spent by Virginia, by the State of Virginia.

The Special Master: Is not this the item as to which you produced some books here at the last hearing showing the $27,000 accounted for in some way? 977

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

The Special Master: Well, is there anybody that can supplement that in any way?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir. The books show that that money was put back into the treasury of the Lunatic Asylum.

The Special Master: If that is so, the books will show it. Have you any evidence in addition to the books, Brother McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: No, sir.

The Special Master: Have you any evidence, any testimony, Brother Harrison, that you can submit to me, in addition to the books already in?

Mr. Harrison: That book is in.

The Special Master: Well, have either of you anything supplemental to that?

Mr. Harrison: No, sir.

Mr. McClintic: No, sir.

The Special Master: Then there is no reason why these two experts cannot say to me what the books show. You stated $125,000 on the assumption that all went in, and they undertake to account for it in this way. Now, what I want these experts to do is to get together and show me what the books show as to this item. If they cannot get together, I will get an expert of my own to dig it out. It is not worth while to discuss that any longer. Now, what about this last, this page 16, Literary Fund Disbursements?

Mr. McClintic: That is a schedule of a total that is already 978 in.

The Special Master: Are those amounts correctly stated? I understand that that is agreed upon.

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

[Vol. 7. July 2, 1909. Relating to Winchester and Potomac R. R.]

The Special Master: Defendant's Revised Exhibit C-1.

Mr. Carlisle: This is page 8, left-hand column. I will simply state we do not agree to that, of course. It is not part of the account. The item of the Winchester & Potomac Railroad, I have item No. 25. Mr. Potter has inserted this on his account:

"Excluded by defendants because it is stated that the loan of $150,000"—

The Special Master: Excuse me; the statement that Mr. Potter makes as to the reasons as given by the defendant is all well enough from his point of view, but it does not foreclose the defendant.

Mr. Carlisle: Here is another statement (reading):

"The Second Auditor pursued a course in dealing with these two items on his book not contemplated in the act authorizing the annuity, the result of which made it appear that the State had surrendered $270,000 for $83,333.33. The State intended to postpone the collection of the loan of $150,000 while and only so 998 long as the annuity was promptly paid by the company. and no reference is made in the act as to the disposition of the stock amounting to $120,000."

The Special Master: As to those items, I shall reach a conclusion that is predicated on the evidence in the case. Mr. Potter's conclusion will not have the slightest effect on the Master at all. There is no particular harm in his stating what his contention is, and whether Mr. Potter's conclusions are correct or not depends on what the acts of the Legislature and the record evidence in this case shows; and while the Master has not any objection to the suggestion of Mr. Potter, it will weigh nothing with the Master in reaching his conclusions. I will hear you all on that before I make my finding.

THE DIVISION OF THE ORDINARY EXPENSES OF GOVERNMENT IS MADE BY THE PARTIES TO THIS CAUSE AS FOLLOWS:

PLAINTIFF:

"The Average Total Population" including slaves is construed to mean the average for each decade determined by averaging the census at the beginning and at the end of that decade. The average total population so found determines the proportion in which the Total Ordinary Expense for that decade is to be charged to the two States. (See page 3 for details.)

The average population and the percentages are as follows:

Between March 19th, 1823 and 1830 (estimated)	Virginia	996,340	85.9789%	West Virginia	162,479	14.0211%
1830 and 1840	"	1,024,871	83.6218%	" "	200,731	16.3782%

1850 and 1860	"	1,169,489	77.5014%	" "	339,501	22.4986%

The Ordinary Expenses of Government divided by Decades on the above percentages:

March 19th, 1823-September 30th, 1830,	Total	$ 3,367,513.89	Virginia,	$ 2,895,351.40	85.9789%	West Virginia, $ 472,162.49	14.0211%

"The Average Total Population of Virginia, with and without Slaves, as shown by the census of the United States" is construed to mean the average of the five censuses from 1820 to 1860 both inclusive; and the proportion of the total ordinary expenses of Virginia for the period from March 19th, 1823, to December 31st, 1860, chargeable to West Virginia on the above basis, is determined by dividing the said total Ordinary Expenses on the ratio which the average total population of Virginia with and without slaves bears to the average total population with and without slaves of those counties which were created into the State of West Virginia:

Virginia:
Census of 1820	Population with Slaves	928,558		Population without Slaves	518,529

Certified Correct:

ARTHUR G. POTTER, PRICE WATERHOUSE & CO.,
For the Plaintiff.

STATEMENT "C".

(Concluded.)

Other Evidence and Proceedings Relating to Paragraph IV of the Decree.

After Recess.

TESTIMONY ON BEHALF OF COMPLAINANT UNDER PARAGRAPH IV OF THE DECREE.

ARTHUR G. POTTER,
testified as follows:

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Mr. Potter, please take that statement marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1—

The Special Master: Does this relate to paragraph 4?

Mr. Anderson: Paragraph 4; yes, sir.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Please examine that statement and state what it is a statement of, what it embraces, and state your knowledge in regard to the items which make up that statement, as well as to the correctness of the figures and the facts mentioned in it.

A. The schedule is the statement of the ordinary expenses of Government—

The Special Master: Of Virginia? 62

A. Of the State of Virginia between 1820 and 1860, both inclusive. It contains information which I took from the public reports of the Auditor of Public Accounts for the State of Virginia. The totals were taken off by myself personally and verified by my assistants, and I believe it to be correct.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. You say the totals were taken off by yourself personally?

A. By myself personally and were verified by figures taken by my assistants.

The Special Master: Have you computed the proportions as required by Paragraph IV?

Mr. Anderson: Yes. sir; that is responsive to paragraph IV. It shows the proportions with and without slaves.

By Mr. Spooner.

Q. Does that embrace the items?

A. It embraces a summary statement of the items, not the individual details. That gives the total of the various classifications, without the items that make them up.

Mr. Anderson: I wish to say to the Master and to counsel that that statement embraces items embodied in a large number of subsidiary statements, one or two hundred pages, with which I do not think it is necessaary to encumber the record at present.

The Special Master: Do I understand that you offer the details from which this summary was compiled?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: And it is admitted de bene, and to be 63 turned over to the other side, receipted for by them, and to be used by them as the other details are to be used in connection with item I?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: We will mark that right now, Plaintiff's Exhibit D 2, if that contains all the details, so that we will have it identified, offered and admitted.

Mr. Spooner: Is that the one you are offering in evidence?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir. I do not wish it to go into the record unless you desire it.

Mr. Spooner: All we want is to have it where we can get at it. The question as to what is an ordinary and what is an extraordinary expense is a question of law, and we want to see what the statement contains.

The Special Master: I want this to go into the record and be identified. Then I will turn it over to counsel for West Virginia, and take their receipt for it. This is marked, "Plaintiff's Exhibit D 2." When you give me your receipt for the other papers, you can include this in it. All questions as to the ordinary or extraordinary character of the expenditures can be raised later.

Mr. Spooner: That is the reason it will be necessary for us to examine them.

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. Please state your knowledge as to the correctness of the statements embodied in this exhibit, Plaintiff's Exhibit D No. 1, in general and in detail, and to what extent you have verified 64 that record from the public records of the Commonwealth.

A. We have relied almost exclusively on the published reports of the Auditor of Public Accounts, in so far as that portion is concerned that applies to the expenses of government for the Commonwealth disbursed by the Treasury. Included there are two statements, one of the Board of Public Works and one of the literary fund, for miscellaneous expenses. Those were taken, in the case of the Board of Public Works, from the published reports, verified by the Second Auditor's ledger. In the case of the Literary Fund, they were taken directly from the Literary Fund ledgers and journals, verified by myself and my assistants conjointly, and I believe them to be correct.

By Mr. Spooner.

Q. If I understand you, that statement is based upon public records. You stated you had based it almost exclusively upon published reports?

A. Public printed records in the proceedings of the Board of Public Works.

Q. That leaves a margin—"almost exclusively." What is the rest of it?

A. That portion of it relating to the Literary Fund, which we took from the ledgers and journals of the Literary Funds, and not from published reports.

By the Special Master:

Q. But with that exception they are based upon the published reports?

A. Yes, sir. 65

By Mr. Anderson:

Q. You believe them to be correctly deduced from those records?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: I will ask to have these papers filed.

(The papers referred to, entitled "Commonwealth of Virginia vs. State of West Virginia. Ordinary Expenses of Government. Article IV," are filed herewith, marked, respectively, "Plaintiff's Exhibit D 1" and "Plaintiff's Exhibit D 2.")

Mr. Anderson: That is all we desire to introduce in response to the fourth paragraph of the decree. Do our brethren on the other side desire to ask any questions?

Mr. Spooner: Not at this time.

Mr. Anderson: I understand you do not intend to estop yourself from future cross examination. We will pass to the next one.

This relates to the general subject, and is an alternative statement, really under the same general direction.

[Vol. 4. May 5, 1909. Cross Examination of A. G. Potter.]

[By Mr. Carlisle]:

Q. We will take Exhibit 4, Schedule 1.

The Special Master: The way the exhibits are numbered, as I have them on my desk here, is "Plaintiff's Exhibit A-1, B-1, C-1, and so on.

Mr. McClintic: This is Article 4 of the ordinary expenses.

The Special Master: What is the exhibit? 223

Mr. McClintic: D-1, as we know it.

The Special Master: As a matter of convenience in tracing out the record, we had better have these exhibits referred to by the name they bear in the record. Then we can trace the record without any difficulty. Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1 is the one you have in mind now?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: What page do you refer to, Mr. McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: The fourth page of Schedule 1, in the upper right hand corner.

Mr. Carlisle: The first entry in this is "General Assembly," $4,130,064.55.

Mr. Anderson: What page is that, Mr. Carlisle?

Mr. Carlisle: On the very first page.

The Special Master: It is really the third page of Schedule 1. It is the third page in the chronological order.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. How did you ascertain that amount, $4,130,064.55?

A. By taking the forty items under that heading, in the forty annual statements in the auditor of public accounts.

Q. When you say the forty items, you mean the forty totals?

A. The forty totals.

By the Special Master:

Q. Beginning with what year?

A. The fiscal year 1820. 224

Q. And running up to 1861?

A. To January 1, 1861.

Q. This aggregate here is the result of forty aggregates?

A. Yes; taking the annual statements for those forty years.

Q. The aggregates given in the annual statements make this amount?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Then you did not go back to the books of original entry in any year, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. To see whether the published statement as to the account of expenses on that account was correct or was not correct?

A. I did not compare them.

The Special Master: That is, you mean whether the aggregate for any particular year would agree with the totals added up?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, I ask him whether he went back in any single year and examined the original books to see what was included under this head of expenditures on account of the general assembly?

A. No, sir; I did not.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. So all you did on that subject was that you found certain figures in the annual report?

A. Yes, sir. 225

Q. Whether those totals included things which were not properly expenditures on account of the General Assembly, you do not know?

A. I have not verified it; no, sir.

Q. Now, one or two others. I will not take up time by going into each item. Take "Officers of the Government, "$3,595,102.14. What have you to say about that?

A. The same statements are true regarding that.

Q. The same statements as to that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not know what items compose these totals which you took from the books?

A. No, sir.

Q. No, "Criminal charges?" $1,750,732.11.

A. The same is true as to that?

Q. You do not know what items compose it, do you?

A. I have not gone back to the original records to verify the statements.

Q. You do not know whether anything was or was not included in that which did not belong there properly? In other words, you have no information except what you saw on the official printed reports?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think that is a proper way to ascertain the expenditures of the State for the purpose of litigation? I ask you now as a public accountant.

A. As we had a balanced cash statement—

Q. Can't you answer the question? I will put it this way. If you were employed by the State of New York to ascertain 226 the total expenditures of that State for a period of years for different purposes, would you or would you not go to the original books to ascertain it, or would you take what you would find in the printed reports of the officials?

The Special Master: With reference to direct answers, I will make this suggestion. I think it is quite proper for the witness, perhaps, to make his answer as direct as he can; but at the same time, if the witness desires to do so, he has a perfect right to add, by way of explanation, anything he likes. The regular and ordinary way is to get the direct answer, and then if he has occasion to make any explanation, he can make it at the same time, if he likes.

Mr. Spooner: The best way is the usual way. If the question is susceptible of a direct answer, it should be given.

Mr. Harrison: He has a right to answer the question in his own way, though.

The Special Master: Certainly.

Mr. Carlisle: Provided he answers it.

The Special Master: I simply make that suggestion to the witness. Witnesses all have that trouble. They are quite likely to make the explanation before they answer the question. The better way is to answer the question and then make such explanation as they think they ought to make.

Mr. Carlisle: The witness can make his statement in his own way after he has answered the question, but he must answer the question.

The Special Master: I have just had a week's experience in regard to that matter. 227

(The question was read, as follows):

"Q. If you were employed by the State of New York to ascertain the total expenditures of that State for a period of years for different purposes, would you or would you not go to the original books to ascertain it, or would you take what you find in the printed reports of the officials?"

A. I don't think I can answer that question directly, because it would depend on what the particular purposes were.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. You know what the purposes were here?

A. Various purposes, you say.

Q. You had the decree of the Supreme Court before you, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That showed you for what purpose the examination was made, did it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were to ascertain certain things?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As specified distinctly in that decree?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course you knew you were to be a witness, and were to come on the stand and testify. Do you think it was a proper thing just simply to take the printed reports, without verifying the items contained in the totals as shown in those reports?

A. I do.

Q. Why? 228

A. Because they were the published reports of the State. They were made for submission to the General Assembly and other officials. They were made by a competent auditing authority in the State, and I believe they furnished a very good record.

Q. You thought you could tell from the totals stated in the official reports whether they did or did not include the things which are separated distinctly in this decree? For instance, you might find in some total—we will take the general assembly—something which, if you had gone back to the books of original entry, did not properly belong in that account, but belonged in some other account—public improvements, educational purposes, or something of that sort. You relied, then, upon the judgment of the officials alone, and not upon your own investigation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you did not distribute any of these accounts in any way, as required by this decree, unless the officers of the State had distributed them in that way in their reports?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is that the fact?

A. Yes, sir: that is the fact.

The Special Master: That is, he assumed, without further investigation, that the aggregates made by the officers were accurate?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes.

The Special Master: That is what it comes down to. He proceeded upon that assumption.

Mr. Carlisle: That is substantially what he says; yes, sir. 229

By the Special Master:

Q. Is that true of all the items you have in schedule 1?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: I asked that simply to save time.

Mr. Carlisle: That saves time; yes, sir.

The Special Master: So that all these are of the same character and proceed on the same assumption.

Mr. Harrison: It is schedule 1, item 4, in Exhibit D-1.

The Special Master: Schedule 1 in Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Schedule 1 ends, as I understand it, on what is called the second page, and the aggregate is $21,209,952.03. Am I right about that?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: So that you proceeded on the same assumption with reference to all the items making up that aggregate that you did in connection with the General Assembly, in the items about which you have testified?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That cleans up that schedule.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. On Schedule 9 of D-1—

The Special Master: I think, for convenience of reference, I will have all these schedules paged, so that we can refer to the pages in the schedule. Then we can trace it out without any 230 difficulty. Schedule 9 is on the last page of Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1, as I have it. Am I right about that? That is the schedule you are inquiring about, Mr. Carlisle?

Mr. Carlisle: D-1.

The Special Master: It is on the last page of Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, sir; the last page.

The Special Master: I will ask Mr. Potter to page his schedules, in all these schedules we have here, so that we can make reference by pages as well as by schedule, and we will not have any difficulty in tracing them out later on, when we have occasion to examine the facts.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. On that page you include in your account, as a part of the ordinary expense of the State of Virginia during the period which you were directed to investigate, the sum of $20,606,229.24, for interest paid on the public debt. From that you deduct certain credits, which reduces the amount of that item to $18,024,358.62. What did you find about that in the books, in what books, and where did you get it?

The Special Master: That is, on what books of original entry did he find these entries?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; what official books. I ask the general question.

The Special Master: Either books or reports?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes.

A. All items of interest on the public debt paid by the board 231 of public works, I took from the board of public works original books.

By the Special Master:

Q. You mean you found it entered there as a charge of interest?

A. As a charge of interest, yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. That is, the $5,834,000?

A. Yes; those first two items.

Q. Now, the next one?

A. Third item I got from the reports of the auditor of public accounts, and did not refer to the original books.

Q. What was that bank debt? Did you investigate it to see what it was?

A. It was an issue of bonds for the purpose of a subscription to the Northwestern Bank of Wheeling and the Exchange Bank of Norfolk, if I remember rightly. I can tell you the amount of it.

Q. Did you find that on the books of the Board of Public Works?

A. No; not that account. That was paid by the treasurer of the Commonwealth, entered through the books of the auditor of public accounts.

Q. Out of what we call the Commonwealth fund?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next one is interest on the public debt, C. & O. Canal, paid by the treasurer of the Commonwealth, $270,479.25. Where did you get that?

A. From the published reports of the Auditor of Public Ac- 232 counts, Commonwealth books.

Q. I will get you to state to the Master whether that was a direct indebtedness upon the part of the State of Virginia, if you examined that question, or whether it was only in the form of a contingent liability, guaranteed?

A. Just a moment. I will have to examine that.

The Special Master: Do you mean whether the State paid it as guarantor, or as principal?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; we say the State paid it as guarantor, and the Company owed the State the money.

The Special Master: Your inquiry is intended to disclose what the fact is?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes.

The Special Master: Whether the Commonwealth paid it as a guarantor, or whether it paid it as a part of its principal debt;—its own indebtedness?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; that is what I want to get at.

A. I believe the State issued the bonds, $250,000.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. You say you believe. Did you examine the question?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you find it to be a fact that the State issued the bonds?

A. I did.

Q. Have you a memorandum to show when the State issued the bonds? 233

A. They were authorized by Act of February 20, 1833.

Q. Authorized?

A. And issued under that Act.

Q. Now, I want to ask a question on that very point. When you found an act of the legislature authorizing the expenditure of money for a certain purpose, did you trace it up to see whether they actually did expend it or not? In other words, I will put it in this way, to make it shorter. Did you not, when you saw an act authorizing the expenditure of a sum of money, just assume that it had been expended, and charge it?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not go to the books?

A. We started at the other end. We took the expenditure and worked back to the Act authorizing it. We did not go to the Act first, and find out what was authorized, and then find out what was spent under it.

By the Special Master:

Q. You mean you found the charge on the books and then traced it back to see what legal authority there was for the expenditure, and therefore landed on the Act in that way?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you examine all those acts?

A. I can't say we examined all of them.

Q. You did not personally examine the acts?

A. No.

Q. Or your assistants under your direction? 234

A. But we did not take the acts of the assembly and go through them. We referred to the acts when it was necessary to get authority for a payment.

Q. "Interest on public debt paid by the sinking fund," December 21, 1860, of $11,762,509.04. Where did you get that item?

A. From the sinking fund original books.

Q. Can you state what date that was paid or a part of it was paid? Just state generally what that debt was, what it was created for, if you know?

A. Well, that was the interest paid—I can't answer that question without reference to my original papers.

The Special Master: You mean, Mr. Carlisle, the purposes for which this public debt was created? Is that what you want him to state?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; I want to know whether he can state what it was for.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. "Interest on the James River and Kanawha guaranteed bonds, paid by the treasurer of the Commonwealth," $617,542.62. Did you examine the books of original entry for that?

A. No sir; we took that from the published reports. I would like to qualify my statements to this extent, that between October 1st and December 31, 1860, it was necessary to refer to the books of original entry in the commonwealth accounts. Otherwise we depended on the published reports, for that was the division of the year.

Q. The first of the year was September?

A. Yes, sir; the year ended on September 30, 1861. We 235 had to examine the books from the first of October, 1860, to December 31, 1860, to get the amount applicable to that year.

Q. That is, just one year you went to the original books?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, a part of one year?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Special Master:

Q. That brought you up to the 1st day of January 1861?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. I understand from that that in cases where you took the official printed report as the basis of your entries in the report, you took them by the fiscal years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which began on the 1st day of October in each year?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So any figures which you got from the official reports for the year 1820, we will say, went back to the 1st of October, 1819, did they not?

A. I think there was a change in date of the fiscal year along in 1820 or 1821. It was approximately, though, the first of October. I won't state positively that it was that date.

Q. Whatever you took from the official books for the fiscal 236 year 1820, took you back to the year 1819, did it not?

A. Yes; the latter part of 1819.

Q. And you could not discriminate so as exclude anything that occurred in 1819, any expenditure made then or any receipts then, from the receipts or expenditures which actually were made in the calendar year 1820?

A. We did not.

Q. Therefore your account begins back in 1819?

A. Yes; it begins with the fiscal year ending September 30, 1820?

By the Special Master:

Q. Your account is predicated upon the fiscal rather than the calendar years?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Was any part of this public debt created in 1819, so far as you found?

A. There was no part of the public debt; no, sir.

Q. You read the decree, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which said you must take the account for the period during which this debt was created?

A. There was no part of the public debt, as stated in the schedule. There were obligations by the State which antedated 1819.

Q. I do not mean antedated it. Were there any in 1819. Antedated would be 1818 or 1817, or sometime along there.

A. There was an obligation on the part of the State to pay interest or an annuity to Washington and Lee College, with 237 respect to $50,000 worth of old James River Stock, which was presented by General George Washington to the College and that obligation was later exchanged for a manuscript bond. That obligation was in existence in 1819.

Q. Whose obligation was it?

A. The obligation of the James River Company, guaranteed by the State of Virginia.

Q. Guaranteed by the State of Virginia?

A. Yes.

Q. When was that issued?

A. We have not been able to find the date of the issue of that stock.

Q. Then why did you go back to 1819 to begin your accounts?

A. The primary reason was that the first issue of State bonds under the name of James River Loan No. 1, for $161,600 was dated in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1820.

Q. It had a specific date on it, did it not?—some day of the month?

The Special Master: What date was it?

A. The loan was authorized by an act of February 17, 1820.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. The calendar year 1820?

A. Yes, sir; the first certificate was issued—

Mr. Spooner: Is that one of the certificates you have there?

Mr. Conrad. No. Let him answer.

Q. State your answer in your own way. I will ask you 238
this question—

The Special Master: Do you want that question answered, when the first certificate was issued?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes.

The Special Master: Well, give that.

A. July 15, 1820.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Now, Mr. Potter, if you did as you say you did, if you took the official report for the fiscal year 1820, which took you back to September 30, 1819, and made that the basis of your accounting, when the decree says that you shall simply take these accounts during the period when the debt was being created, is not your whole account vitiated by that basis which you have assigned—if you are wrong? If you have done what you say you did, and if the decree excluded everything prior to September 1820—is not your entire account permeated by that error, and are not all your totals affected by it?

Mr. Conrad: What error is that?

Mr. Carlisle: By beginning in 1819?

Mr. Conrad: But that is assuming what does not exist.

Mr. Carlisle: Well, I am assuming. I say if that is wrong.

Mr. Harrison: That is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Carlisle: But I am taking what he says.

Mr. Conrad: If you will pardon me, that is not exactly what he says. He says he started here with an appropriation made under an Act of February, 1820. That was the foundation. You assume that he started with an appropriation made in the year 1819, and speak of it as an error that pervades all of this settlement. If you will pardon me, I do not think that is quite fair to the 239 witness.

Mr. Carlisle: The witness, I suppose, thinks he took the proper date to begin with. I ask him, if you did not get the proper date and went back and included in your accounts charges against West Virginia and credits to West Virginia, and amounts of ordinary expenses and other things which are covered by this decree, during a period which the decree did not authorize you to take, is not your whole account affected by that error, if it was an error?

A. If there were errors, of course—

The Special Master: The question is if you began your account at a too early date, and it turns out later to be erroneous for that reason, whether that error would pervade your whole account. That is the substance of the proposition. It is not for you to say, whether you did begin too early or did not, but assuming that you did begin earlier than you ought to have begun, the question is does that error, if it is an error, pervade the whole account, and would it disarrange your final result?

Mr. Carlisle: All his totals.

The Special Master: Yes; all your totals?

A. It would disarrange them to the extent of the expenditures and receipts between the date at which I started and the date at which I should have started if I did make an error in starting.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. That would affect your entire account?

A. It would affect the totals, yes, sir. 240

Q. It would affect all the totals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you to say, as a matter of fact—

By the Special Master:

Q. I want to ask you this right here. Would it be necessary, in order to get a correct result, assuming that you began too early, and for that reason the account is erroneous in the record, to recast the whole account?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not think you would have to do that?

A. I know I would not.

Q. You think you could eliminate the erroneous items, and reach a result without recasting the whole account?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Will you state to the Master just how you would do that. These erroneous sums, if they are erroneous, would be carried into every total you made up. Would you not have to revise all your totals?

The Special Master: Mr. Carlisle has in his mind now items of expenditure from the various counties also predicated upon this early date, and that would enter into the final total.

Mr. Carlisle: All the charges against West Virginia, credits to West Virginia, ordinary expenses,—everything covered by the decree which involves an accounting would be affected.

The Special Master: The simple question right here now 241 is, assuming there was an error in the record, whether he could rearrange his accounts without recasting them, and eliminate those errors.

A. I could; yes, sir.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Would you not have to revise everyone of your totals? If you have included there something which ought not to be included would you not have to take it out of every one of your totals, every item?

A. Every total in which any of those figures enter.

Q. By totals, now, I mean for the purposes of this hearing, these items which you have stated here, which I have just read from. Take the $5,000,000 first, then the $1,000,000, and the $360,000 on this paper. Would you not have to revise each one of those?

The Special Master: You refer to the interest items in schedule 9?

Mr. Carlisle: Schedule 9, Exhibit D-1.

The Special Master: The question is whether you would not have to revise all those items of interest in case you began at a too early date—that is, whether or not those items do not in some way enter into those aggregates of interest?

A. Yes; but it would be no difficult matter to eliminate the items between the date at which I did start and the date at which I should have started.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Let us see if there is no difficulty about it. I would 242 find it very difficult. Would you not in order to eliminate those items have to go to the books of original entry in each instance, because you took the aggregates from the published reports?

A. If we started in the middle of the fiscal year, I would have to go to the books of original entry.

Q. If it started in the middle of the year?

A. Yes.

Q. I am talking about the first year, the basis if your accounts. Would you not have to go back to the original books of entry, ascertain the exact date, and the amount of each item during the period you have mentioned?

A. I don't understand your question.

Q. To show you what I mean I will take this item—"Officers of the general Government," $3,595,102.14. If it should turn out that you had included in that item, which you took from the official reports for that fiscal year, something which ought not to have been included, under the decree, would you not have to go back to the books of original entry to find what that was?

A. It would depend entirely on what it was.

Q. You could not find out what it was, could you, until you went back to the original books?

A. I don't know. It would depend on what you said it was. For instance, if you asked me to take out all of the expenses of the first fiscal year, which I included in that total, I could do that. If you asked me to take out one half of the expenses of the fiscal year, I would have to analyze the books, to find out what that one-half consisted of. 243

Q. Suppose I ask you to take out of that account all the items now included in it which belonged to the calendar year 1819—leaving out the fiscal year now, but during that calendar year. Would you not have to go to the original books to find what to take out?

A. I would.

Q. That is what I mean exactly. Then you would have to make a corresponding change all through your accounts, would you not, because your basis then would be wrong? I mean the basis you have adopted here?

A. We would have to make changes in every account affected by the figures in that year, but it does not necessarily follow that all the accounts were affected.

By the Special Master:

Q. Would that be feasible without a recomputation; or could you make a recomputation and make a deduction and get an accurate result?

A. Yes, sir; I could.

Q. You think you could take an item back prior to 1819 and reach your conclusions that would be involved in connection with these other items, and simply make a deduction at the end instead of recasting and recomputing?

A. Yes, sir; prior to 1820.

Q. I mean prior to 1820.

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That is what you wanted, was it not, Mr. Carlisle?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes. 244

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Mr. Potter, will you state to the Master why you included the interest on the public debt as a part of the ordinary expenses of the State of Virginia?

A. Out of deference to the opinion of the attorneys for the Virginia side.

Q. That is what I supposed. You were advised to do that.

The Special Master: You were so instructed. That is about it.

Mr. Conrad: He was so instructed, and we have authority for it, sir.

Mr. Carlisle: It is not necessary to raise that question now. The question as to what are ordinary expenses, we think, is a question of law for the court.

The Special Master: Up to the present time the Master is advised that the State of Virginia has one contention in reference to that matter, and West Virginia another.

Mr. Carlisle: Certainly. The business of the Master is, under the decree, to ascertain facts, and then we will discuss the law, if we are able to do it, before the Supreme Court.

The Special Master: I do not apprehend there is much difficulty about that.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Suppose you carried your accounts beyond the proper period under the decree—assuming that, now—if you carried your accounts to a date which was not required or authorized by 245 the decree, how would you correct that?

A. By deducting the amounts in the same manner as I would in the matter explained.

Q. By deducting the amounts which were corrected after the—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would involve as much labor as the other?

A. No, sir; not quite.

Q. I wish you would describe that certificate or whatever it was which you say was issued in July, 1820?

A. The only description I can give you at this time is that it is certificate No. 1 of James River loan No. 1, issued under authority of Act of Legislature February 17, 1820.

The Special Master: Certificate No. 1, issued when?

A. Certificate No. 1 was issued on the 15th of July, 1820.

Mr. Harrison: Under authority of the act of February 17, 1820?

A. Yes, sir.

By the Special Master:

Q. Have you any of those original certificates?

A. No, sir; this one is a blank certificate under that law.

Q. This certificate you have just shown me relates to an act of the legislature of 1821. It could not very well have been issued in 1820?

A. I think you will find two dates on it, both February 17, 1820, and February 20, 1821.

Q. But how are you going to get that into a printed docu- 246 ment in 1820?

A. That must have been a later print of the certificate that was issued.

Q. Is the certificate which you refer to as having been issued in July, 1820, a certificate by the Commonwealth or a certificate by the railroad company?

Mr. Conrad: By the James River Canal Company.

The Special Master: By the railroad Company?

Mr. Conrad: The James River Canal Company.

Mr. Anderson: The navigation company?

A. It was issued by the James River Company.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. You said you had a certificate issued under the act of 1819, certificate No. 1.

The Special Master: 1820.

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, but issued under that act of February 17, 1820, entitled "An Act to Amend an Act entitled 'an Act to improve the navigation of the James River.'" Did you examine that certificate?

A. I never have seen certificate No. 1; no sir.

Q. Then how do you know it imported an obligation on the part of the State of Virginia?

A. I have consulted the register. That is the first bond entered in that register. I presume you mean if this is—

Q. How do you know that certificate to which you refer, which was issued in 1820, was an obligation upon the part of the State of Virginia, either in substance or in form?

The Special Master: Directly or indirectly.

Mr. Carlisle: Yes; directly or indirectly. 247

The Special Master: While he is looking for that, has any one here the Act of 1820, or a copy of it, so that I may have it before me as he is being examined?

Mr. Anderson: Yes; I have a copy of it.

Mr. Conrad: It is not that certificate you have there, Mr. Potter?

Mr. Potter: No. I understand.

Mr. Anderson: I call your Honor's attention to the fact that there are several obligations there. In the first place, there are appropriations authorized to be made for this company. Then there is a guarantee of the stock of the company, up to $12,000 a year.

The Special Master: I want to get the section under which this certificate was issued, so that I can have it before me when you are examining him.

Mr. McClintic: It could not very well be a guarantee of the stock.

Mr. Anderson: Of the dividend—12 per cent. for 12 years, and 15 per cent. forever thereafter.

The Special Master: The Act itself will disclose what the obligations were, of course.

(The pending question was read, as follows):

"Q. How do you know that certificate to which you refer, which was issued in 1820, was an obligation upon the part of the State of Virginia, either in substance or in form, directly or indirectly?"

A. Because it was funded by the State on the 12th day of November, 1873. 248

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you see that certificate at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know that that Act of 1873 refers to that certificate?

A. I don't know that there is an act of November 12, 1873. There is a funding transaction on the books of the second auditor which recites that that particular bond was refunded under that act.

Q. You see, you do not understand me. I am trying to get at the origin. I am trying to find out whether the certificates which you assumed was a debt of Virginia was at that time a debt of the State of Virginia—that is, when it was issued on the 17th of February, 1820, or whatever the date was.

The Special Master: No; July, 1820.

A. July 15, 1820.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Did you look into it to see whether it was at that time a debt or a part of the debt of the State of Virginia?

A. This issue of bonds was referred to repeatedly in various reports, and it was mentioned on the books. It appears in the books of the Second Auditor's office as a part of the debt of the State of Virginia.

Q. Then you supposed that certificate was a bond, did you?

A. I made no assumption in regard to whether it was a bond or stock? 249

Q. You must have made some conclusion in regard to it?

A. I considered it as an obligation.

The Special Master: It is important to us to get exactly what the witness knows. The question is when you made your account and started with this item, whether you made any investigation of the original sources of information, so as to satisfy yourself as to what kind, if any, obligation, the State of Virginia was under in connection with the certificate. That was the point.

Mr. Carlisle: That is what I mean.

The Special Master: Did you make any investigation that enables you to state the kind of obligation the State of Virginia assumes in connection with this certificate, issued under these circumstances, and if you did, state what it was. If you did not, that settles it.

A. I did make such an investigation and satisfied myself that it was an obligation of the State of Virginia, but I can't state at this time from memory just the extent of my investigation.

The Special Master: Refresh your recollection, and be able to state that after recess. Give us the original sources of information from which you reached that conclusion as distinguished from the subsequent reports.

Mr. Carlisle: As I understand, he did not see this certificate.

The Special Master: What you want is what the witness did find, if he found anything, that did indicate any obligation on the part of Virginia as to this certificate. I rather infer that there may be more or less reference to the acts of the legislature in connection with this account from time to time, and I 250 would suggest—I do not know whether this suggestion is a wise one or otherwise—that it would be a good thing if we could all have duplicates of the particular acts and sections of the Acts to which these accounts relate, so that I may have them right here without looking all over a long act. I will then have the sections upon which Virginia relies, for instance, and the sections, if any, upon which West Virginia relies, for ready reference. If I could have the acts of the legislature where I can look at them, while this examination is going on, it will help us. I hope counsel on either side will arrange about that. These things are undoubtedly familiar to you all, but they are not quite so familiar to me.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. Not having seen that certificate at all, as you testified, 251 did you suppose it was a bond, or did you suppose it was a certificate of stock in the James River Company the interests and dividends on which you say were guaranteed?

A. I never considered that point very much. We called them certificates, but they are in the schedule of Bonds. I never considered whether they were stock or bonds. I considered them as an obligation because the term stock and bond was used rather interchangeably in those early days. They called all bonds State stock.

Q. Yes, I understand; but I am trying to ascertain whether you found any bonds there or any certificates of stock issued by the James River Company the dividends on which were guaranteed by the State. Did you examine the papers held by the Literary Fund.

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you look there for a certificate or bond or certificate of stock?

A. I don't know that this bond is in existence. It was refunded and placed on file with the Treasury, and a new stock issued.

The Special Master: Well, you did not find it?

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Carlisle: When we get the papers we will see what it was.

The Special Master: He says he did not find anything of the kind.

By Mr. Carlisle:

Q. You treated it as an obligation of the State debt?

A. Yes, sir; as a part of the State debt.

Q. And then you made your accounting because you 252 thought that was the beginning of the debt of Virginia?

A. Because I thought what?

Q. Because you thought the issuing of that certificate, whatever it was, was the beginning of the creation of the public debt of the State of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what you thought?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if that was not any part of the public debt, then your accounting was erroneous?

A. If that was not the beginning, yes.

The Special Master: Are we to understand that the guarantee only related to the dividends—

Mr. Anderson: No, sir; as to both.

The Special Master: Both the principal sum and the interest on the principal sum?

Mr. Anderson: The State appropriated money indirectly to the extension of that improvement and also guaranteed 12 and 15 per cent dividend on the stock of the Company, and the State has paid enormous sums under that obligation from that time 253 down?

The Special Master: From a hurried reading I doubt whether section 14 goes as far as you think, Mr. Anderson. You may be correct, however; I only read it hurriedly. There is a proviso at the end of the section that limits the liability to $12,000 per annum.

Mr. Anderson: That is it, sir.

The Special Master: Do you mean by that they were to pay $12,000 per annum of the income?

Mr. Anderson: No, the State to pay $12,000 per annum whether anything was earned by the Company or not.

The Special Master: And no more.

Mr. Anderson: But still that was an obligation equal to $200,000 capitalized.

Mr. Spooner: No. We will contend, and I think we will be able to demonstrate, that it was no obligation at all in the sense of being a State debt, and I rise merely to suggest that there are four acts. They are splendidly drawn, as all the acts in the early days of Virginia were splendidly drawn. They are somewhat complicated, and you cannot take a certain section or an extract from a single section, and solve the question by the light from that section or extract; and as long as it will be a concrete thing which we must discuss, I think it will tend to the better elucidation of it if we take the testimony as to what this witness did, and why he did it, and discuss later this question of law—for that is what it is.

The Special Master: That is quite agreeable to me.

Mr. Anderson: And satisfactory to us. 254

The Special Master: But in the meantime you will appreciate the importance of my having these various sections where I can see them and become familiar with them.

Mr. Spooner: And after recess we will have before you the various acts.

The Special Master: Typewritten copies?

Mr. Spooner: No, printed copies, and your attention will be drawn to various sections which touch the subject.

The Special Master: You may proceed with your cross-examination, Mr. Carlisle. Mr. Carlisle's purpose now, as I understand it, is to detail the facts, and get those on the record, and later we will have oportunity to discuss the legal questions.

[Vol. 4. May 5, 1909. Cross examination of A. G. Potter.]

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. I will now refer to Exhibit D-1, first page of Schedule 1— 362

Mr. Harrison: Beginning with item 4 of the decree?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

Q. (Continuing). In these ordinary expenses, did you charge any buildings?

The Special Master: Money expended for the construction of buildings?

Mr. McClintic: That is what I mean, yes.

The Special Master: If so, what. I suppose that is what you mean?

Mr. McClintic: Yes; I was going to follow that up if he said there were any. I don't know whether there were any or not. I wanted to find out.

A. Excuse me a moment and I will see if I can answer positively. I find one item, penitentiary, enlarging, and repairs. Part of that was for building—enlarging the penitentiary. I do not recognize any other items in this account at the present time as covering buildings.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Do you know whether or not you did charge buildings?

A. I don't remember positively whether any buildings went into this account or not.

Q. Did you intend to charge buildings; do you remember whether you did or did not? If you absolutely did not, there is no use of going into it; but if you did, I would like to know what they are. 363

A. If you will allow me to look I can tell you in a moment. "Deaf, dumb and blind institution." That may have been for building.

Q. I will ask you another question. Where did you get these accounts?

The Special Master: Do you want him to finish his answer to the other question? He was undertaking to ascertain whether the deaf, dumb and blind institution was for building.

A. (Continuing.) The item is under "Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institution, and I don't know whether it covers building or not.

The Special Master: You are not able to state.

The Witness: No, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Where did you get these items from, mentioned in Schedule 1, Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1?

A. From the published reports of the auditor of public accounts.

Q. Did you analyze any of them to see what they were for?

The Special Master: We went over that this morning and he said he did not, and unless there is some change to be made—

The Witness: No; there is none.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The third item is "General Government, $8,495.63" (Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1, first page of Schedule 1). Can 364 you tell us what that means, what is it for?

A. I think it is in the nature of petty cash items not chargeable to other accounts, merely general expense items not otherwise classified.

Q. Expenses for what?

A. I don't know. Charged up under that heading in the annual reports, and we put them in under that heading.

Q. You have another item, "Pensions." Pensions for what?

A. I don't know. They may have been State employees, but I have no absolute knowledge as to what class of individuals they apply to.

Q. You have an item there called "Expenses of representation." Do you know what that means?

A. No, sir.

Q. "Public arsenals?" Do you know what that means?

A. Only in a general way. I know there was a guard maintained in Virginia at that time.

Q. I am not asking about the public guard; I am asking about the arsenal.

A. They had to have an arsenal, I presume, for taking care of the arms.

Q. You mean by an arsenal a building?

A. No; I don't know that it means that. I think it is the expense of maintaining an arsenal.

Q. Do you know that, or are you conjecturing? 365

A. I don't know it, no.

The Special Master: That is, do you know anything about it outside the entry you have made from the books?

The Witness: No; we have not gone back of the entry.

The Special Master: He said he did not go back on any one of them.

Mr. McClintic: Now, schedule 2—

The Special Master: In the same exhibit?

Mr. McClintic: The same exhibit.

Does the same answer apply to all those, that you took those from a book and did not look back as to the divisions of that?

The Special Master: In detail?

Mr. McClintic: In detail?

The Witness: Well, with respect to the expenses, mileage of the board, and expenses of inspection, we did analyze them, as I have explained in the preceding exhibit.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. As to all the others, then?

A. Otherwise we did not make any further analysis than the books showed.

Q. On the next page, Schedule 3, you charge maps, $42,529,98. Did you analyze that account and get details?

A. No; those were charges appearing in the annual reports, as shown by the next number, under references, which means the references in the annual report.

The Special Master: How much of that did you charge for 20, 21 and 22 added together?

The Witness: $30,000.

By Mr. McClintic: 366

Q. Of the $42,000?

A. Of the $42,000.

Q. And the next item, "Surveys, Salaries and Expenses, $110,369.47," how did you arrive at that?

A. In the same manner, taking the items appearing in the board of public works annual reports.

Q. How much of that is charged in items 19, 20 and 21?

A. $7,373.81.

Q. I understood you to say that you excluded from these all the items you charged under 3 of the direct charges?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. McClintic: If your Honor please, I cannot speak of the decree as No. 3. C-1 I believe it is.

Mr. Harrison: You mean item 3 of the decree?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On schedule 4 there are certain items amounting to $891,435,66, called the literary fund disbursements. Where did you get those, as to detail or not?

A. From an analysis of the Literary Fund books—journals and ledgers.

Q. You analyzed those books?

A. Yes, sir. We had no published reports of that and were compelled to go back to the books.

The Special Master: So you went back to the original items? 367

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. Hampden-Sidney College, at the bottom of the page, $25,000. What was the nature of that expense?

A. I don't know. It was merely a payment to the college as shown by the books, but for what purpose I don't know.

Q. Do not the books further show an investment in land and buildings up there?

A. I cannot say at this time.

Q. There is an item there, medical college, $5,000. What is that for?

A. I don't know.

Q. I thought you said you analyzed these expenses.

A. We analyzed them and found the charge and the payments to the medical college.

Q. What medical college?

A. I cannot say offhand. I don't know whether it is connected with the University of Virginia or not.

Mr. Anderson: It was connected with Hampden-Sidney, and I suppose it was $25,000 for building it, although I don't know. The State owns it.

Mr. Carlisle: Does the State own it?

Mr. Anderson: Yes; and still makes an appropriation for it.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Was that the only appropriation ever made for it, the $25,000?

A. I think it was during that period, yes.

Q. Up to 1861? 368

A. Yes.

Q. You charged next there an item "Davis' book on criminal law, $12,000." Was that item put in there at your volition or upon direction of counsel?

A. I did not ask counsel about it.

The Special Master: What is the basis of it?

The Witness: The cost of publishing that or purchasing a supply of them.

The Special Master: Was the State buying the book or publishing it?

The Witness: I could not tell you.

The Special Master: That is, did the State own the copyright, or was it simply buying a number of copies?

Mr. McClintic: He says he does not know.

The Special Master: Then that exhausts that.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Is the buying of a book on criminal law in your opinion an ordinary expense of goverment?

A. The buying of it is not. If it was bought for distribution among the State officials, then it would be such an expense.

Q. Was it done or not. The witness is going on to suppose a certain state of facts?

Mr. Harrison: No; you asked him for his opinion and he is giving it and now you say you don't want it.

Mr. McClintic: I want him to answer the question, but I do not want it on a supposed state of facts.

The Special Master: Mr. McClintic's question is whether on the facts that came to his knowledge this is an item that is properly charged to ordinary expenses.

(The stenographer repeated the last question of Mr. 369 McClintic and the answer thereto as above recorded, on request.)

The Witness: It would depend entirely on the purpose for which it was bought.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. What has the literary fund got to do with the sale of slaves and expenses of free negroes, an item of $827.73?

A. All I know about it is I found the item on the book, "Expenses in connection with the sale of slaves and free negroes."

Q. You find charged here as an ordinary expenses, "State claims against the United States," $2,722,82. What is that for?

A. Expenses in connection with the collection of State claims. My recollection is that the Literary Fund had the handling of some of those claims and it cost that much to collect them.

Q. Did you find that from the books?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the same taken out of the amount collected?

A. I don't know.

Q. What does the book show on that?

A. I cannot tell you offhand. I have it among my papers. It was an original entry of expense and we so considered it. 370

Q. Did you consider every item of expense that the State went to for any purpose, shape or form, an ordinary expense—every expenditure of money?

A. Any expense that did not appear to be an extraordinary expense I would call an ordinary expense of government.

Q. Will you kindly define the distinction between ordinary and extraordinary?

A. I merely use that word in the sense that it would be used in connection with any business. It we had a fire and burned the house down, it would be an extraordinary expense. I did not run across any item of that kind. Others I would consider ordinary expenses.

Q. Would the building of this building be an ordinary or extraordinary expense?

The Special Master: Do you mean this building where we are now sitting?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

A. I would rather not pass an opinion on that.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Well, is the building of an asylum at Williamsburg an ordinary expense or an extraordinary expense?

A. I think an ordinary expense if the lunatics of the State need it.

Q. Then when it is built in West Virginia it is an extraordinary expense and when it is built in Virginia it is an ordinary expense?

A. I don't think there is anything of that nature in here.

Q. Haven't you an item of that kind charged? 371

A. No, I think not.

Q. They have built buildings out of this fund, which you have charged as ordinary expenses, have they not?

A. We would probably have to have the reports from the asylums to determine what they have spent it for.

Q. You made no attempt to analyze that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have an item here "Taxes on salaries, $217.23." What is that?

A. The literary fund paid the salaries of the employees, clerk and bookkeeper, and charged those salaries to expenses.

Q. You mean the State of Virginia?

A. The State of Virginia.

Q. Taxes on the salaries of their employees?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: An income tax?

The Witness: I don't know. And the board of public works did the same thing.

The Special Master: It was practically an addition to the salaries of the employees?

The Witness: Yes; sort of a special compensation.

By the Special Master:

Q. I do not quite understand this item about State claims against the United States. Do you know anything about that except what you find on the books, as to how it comes about and what the basis of it is?

A. What is that item? 372

Q. State claims against the United States, $2,722.82. How does that happen to be an item of charge?

A. I stated that the Literary fund held some of those claims that possibly had been assigned to them; or at least they held them, and it cost $2,700 to collect the claims.

Q. That was for the collection of these claims against the United States?

A. Yes; I think that is the explanation.

Q. What was the nature of these claims?

A. I think they were Revolutionary, half-pay claims. The Government paid for soldiers' half pay.

Q. And the literary fund took the claims and prosecuted the claims against the United States?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this item got in in that way?

A. Yes.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You have an item here "Expenses account of purchase of stock by J. Bauer." $902.23.

A. I think Mr. Bauer was commissioned to go to New York or Philadelphia and buy some bonds for the Literary Fund and his expenses on that trip or trips amounted to that much.

Q. You have here commission on United States debt, $4,199.92.

A. I cannot tell you offhand what that is. It appears in the Literary fund books as an expense. 373

The Special Master: And under that head, I suppose?

The Witness: I believe so, yes.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You have here "Judgments and commissions on escheats, delinquent and redeemed lands, $26,029.48." What does that mean?

A. I think it is an expense of the Literary Fund for that department in getting judgments in connection with delinquent and redeemed lands.

Q. Did they not get the money that came from those 374 things?

A. I think probably they did; yes. I am not entirely clear as to the make up of that item. I could explain it later.

Q. Was not that proper against the money collected, like the other items were?

A. I don't know that it was.

Q. What was that University of Virginia, $649,874?

A. I think it was an annual appropriation to the University, with such other sums as were appropriated by special act during that period.

The Special Master: The Act gave all the appropriations for the forty years?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You have just below that, put Deaf, Dunb and Blind Institute, $40,821.02. Are there any buildings in that?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you analyze it any further than the total?

A. We took the figures from the data on the books, and I don't know whether it covers buildings or not. I will have to look at the books to tell. I have the information among my papers.

Q. Please look and see by to-morrow. What is the item Virginia Military Institute, $28,500?

A. I believe it is the same as the appropriations to the University of Virginia.

Q. Do you mean an annual appropriation of so much?

A. Various items appropriated for the suppoprt or equipment.
or other purposes of the Virginia Military Institute? 375

Q. Do you mean that they were appropriated occasionally, a certain amount, or was it all appropriated in one sum, divided in the forty year period?

A. I can't tell you that offhand.

Q. On schedule 9, the last page of this exhibit, is an item "Interest on James River and Kanawha Guaranteed Bonds paid by Treasurer of the Commonwealth, $617,502.46."

Mr. Carlisle: Is there any date to that?

Mr. McClintic: That is the whole for the period. No date is given.

By Mr. McClintic:

What period does that cover?

A. I don't know. I can't tell you from these figures.

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Have you any memoranda by which you can tell when that began?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what period it covers?

A. Yes; I can get that if you wish.

Mr. Spooner: Yes, do that.

By the Special Master:

Q. The time when it ended and when it began.

A. Beginning with the year 1843 and ending in December, 1860.

Q. It began when?

A. In 1843.

Q. And ended when?

A. In December, 1860. The last payment was in December, 376
1860.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Was not all that interest converted into stock of the James River and Kanawha Company by the Act of Assembly of the State of Virginia, and the acquiescence of the Company, and received by Virginia ?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did not the Act of March 23, 1860, provide for that?

A. I am not familiar with that Act of March 23, 1860.

Mr. McClintic: I believe that is all, your Honor, on section 4.

[Vol. 6. May 7, 1909. Direct Examination of T. B. Dixcy.]

Mr. McClintic: If your Honor please, we now desire to offer Defendant's Exhibit D-1.

The Special Master: Very well. 537

(The paper referred to is filed herewith, marked "Defendant's Exhibit D-1.") 538

Mr. McClintic: On the bottom of page 5 of that exhibit there is an item marked "Primary Schools, out of income $2,400,331.11. We desire to withdraw that item from this exhibit as a part of the ordinary expenses of Virginia, for the reason to give notice to the other side— that this literary fund out of which this income was derived was a fund already accumulated before the beginning of either period, either their period or our period in this case, and this expenditure was made alone, as I understand it, out of the income or interest which arose from the investment of that fund, which belonged to the State of Virginia before 1819, and was not paid out of money raised either by bonds or by taxes, or in any other way, during the period, but was wholly raised out of this income or from the investment of this literary fund.

The Special Master: Well, it came from assets accumulated anterior to the period in controversy, and has no relation to either indebtedness or taxation during the period, or since?

Mr. McClintic: And the fund was kept by the State of Virginia at the end of the period.

The Special Master: Do they have any parallel item in their schedule?

Mr. McClintic: They charge that item under the head of $863,000 of direct expenditures which arose from that fund.

The Special Master: That $863,000 is a part of the $2,400,000?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir. We put it under one head, and they put it under another. We now desire to withdraw it 539 from this heading, and claim no part of it. It is a question of law rather than fact, as I understand it.

Mr. Spooner: We object to this being included in the other.

The Special Master: Yes; but I know from him, of course, the relation of one item to the other.

Mr. Anderson: If your honor please, we of course make no objection to counsel on the other side withdrawing this item from the statement, but—

The Special Master: I understand you have no objection to their withdrawing the item, but you do not waive any rights you have in relation thereto.

Mr. Anderson: But we do not concede the statement of fact made by the other side. The literary fund is a continually growing fund in Virginia, all fines and escheats going to it.

The Special Master: If there is any question of fact involved about the literary fund, that of course will raise an issue between you.

The Special Master: So I understand the item of $2,400,331.11 is withdrawn?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: It is not objected to by the counsel for the State of Virginia, although the State of Virginia does not waive any rights it may have in that regard.

Mr. Anderson: We do not concede the statement of fact or the proposition of law either. 540

Mr. McClintic: We will present that here to your Honor, before the case is closed, through a supplementary statement.

The Special Master: Certainly. This seems to leave West Virginia in the position she would have been in if she had not included the item, and it does not preclude the rights of either party in connection with this exhibit.

Mr. McClintic: No, sir.

The Special Master: You may proceed with the examination.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Take Exhibit D-1, Mr. Dixey, and state to the Court if that was made up under your supervision?

A. That was made up my supervision and direction, and signed by me.

Mr. McClintic: I would state, for the further information of the Commissioner, that the withdrawal of that item will necessitate our later making a new proportion to go in the front of this paper.

The Special Master: Precisely. In other words, you desire to file a supplementary statement to defendant's exhibit D-1, a restatement of the statement?

Mr. McClintic: A restatement of the proportion.

The Special Master: In order to harmonize with the items you withdraw?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Is this statement, Mr. Dixey, a correct one, including 541 the item as it stands before we withdrew this $2,400,000 item?

A. It is a correct statement of the amounts of such expenses as are included in it—such disbursements and expenditures as are included in it.

Q. The proportion on page 2—

The Special Master: It is made up from information derived from books of original entry?

A. Books of original entry; yes, sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. As I understood you, all the information and all the exhibits so far filed have been derived from books of original entry in each and every instance?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Yes.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The proportion on page 2 was made by you, was it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is correct on the face of it, as it then stood?

A. Yes, sir; it has been verified.

Q. And likewise the proportion on page 3?

A. The percentages on page 3 were made by me. With the exception of the $620,029, that is, the average of the population without slaves for Virginia, and the averages with and without slaves for West Virginia, everything else on that sheet was furnished by the United States Census Bureau.

542

By the Special Master:

Q. Did you make any revision of their computation?

A. I checked their computations. Those are simply averages.

Q. My question is whether you recomputed, so as to see whether the computations made in the Census Bureau were accurate or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what you mean by checking?

A. I have their original letter here.

Q. When you say you checked their computation, you mean you compared your computations with theirs?

A. Yes, sir; I verified them.

Q. And found theirs correct?

A. Yes, sir; I found their computations correct. Of course the figures as they gave them I accepted as being correct. That is, the Census of 1820, for instance, as they give it, I accepted as being correct. Their totals and their divisions I verified.

Q. In other words, you did not go back to the Census yourself just for the purpose of ascertaining whether the total was correct?

A. I did not. Their letter states that it is an extract from the United States Census, and the letter is signed by Mr. North.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On pages 4, 5 and 6 of this Exhibit, Mr. Dixey, we find various items and various figures. Were those all examined by you?

A. As to totals; yes, sir. 543

Q. Under whose direction or by what direction did you put these various items in this exhibit?

A. By direction of counsel for West Virginia.

Q. As to the details making up each of these totals, I understood you to say you personally did not originally make them?

A. I did not examine every item; no, sir. If there was any question of policy or application, such matters were examined and passed on by me, but I made no attempt whatever to examine every item in the routine work of analysis.

By the Special Master:

Q. That is, you passed upon items as to which the application was not obvious?

A. Yes, sir; when there was any question in the mind of the gentleman who was in direct charge of the work.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Were any buildings which were erected in what is now the State of Virginia included in this exhibit?

A. In this exhibit?

Q. Yes; defendant's exhibit D-1?

A. There are no buildings; no, sir.

Q. No buildings were included?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were any purchases of land in what is now the State of Virginia included in this?

A. No, sir; there are no purchases of land. I may qualify that by saying that there are repairs to buildings included within it.

Mr. Spooner: That is different.

A. But no original investments. 544

The Special Master: No original construction?

A. No original construction.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Mr. Dixey, on plaintiff's Exhibit D-1—have you a copy of that there?

A. I haven't it here, Mr. McClintic.

Mr. Anderson: I will lend him mine, gentlemen.

The Special Master: What page?

Mr. McClintic: Page 4.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Are you familiar with the items on this schedule 1, page 4, of plaintiff's Exhibit D-4, which were not allowed by your exhibit? For instance, the third and fourth items, general government and pensions. Did you personally examine as to what those were for?

A. I don't find it here, Mr. McClintic.

Q. It is on page 4 of the whole exhibit, as marked here, schedule 1, entitled "Commonwealth of Virginia vs. State of West Virginia, analysis general expenses of Government, summary." Look on the preceding page.

A. I have it.

Mr. Anderson: It is headed "Schedule 1."

The Special Master: Page 4 is a continuation of page 3. What is the question, Mr. McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: I ask him whether he knows personally the details of the third and fourth items sufficiently to explain to the Court what they were for? 545

The Special Master: The third and fourth items on page 4?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

The Special Master: That is transportation of free persons of color.

Mr. McClintic: No; General Government and Pensions is the one.

The Witness: It is on page 3 in my statement here.

Mr. McClintic: This was paged for us by the gentlemen on the other side.

The Special Master: What page are you looking at?

Mr. McClintic: Page 4 of Exhibit D-1.

The Special Master: What item have you in mind?

Mr. McClintic: The items General Government and Pensions.

The Special Master: That is on page 3 of my copy.

Mr. McClintic: It is page 4 here.

The Special Master: Let me have that repaged right now. You follow my paging. I have got to have some opportunity to work this out myself. The first page of Exhibit D-1 is page 1. Have you that, Mr. McClintic?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Page 2 is headed "Commonwealth of Virginia vs. State of West Virginia, ordinary expenses of government. Article 4." Make that page 2. Now, page three is headed, "Summary, analysis of general expenses, Schedule 1." Page 4 is a continuation of it. Page 5 is headed "Schedule S." Page 6 is headed "Schedule 2." Page 7 is headed Schedule 3. Page 8 is headed Schedule 4. Page 9 is headed Schedule 9. Are you 546 correct now?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir. Mr. Potter's assistant paged this, and I did not know anything about it except what I found here.

Mr. Anderson: It is just accidental. There was a leaf put there. That is the reason for that.

The Special Master: There must not be any additional leaves put anywhere unless they are put into all the copies. I cannot allow confusion in this. Now, take your item, Mr. McClintic—General Government, $8,495.63. What is the inquiry?

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Do you know what that means, what it is for?

A. Do I know what it means and what it is for?

Q. Yes.

A. As to the details?

Q. Yes.

A. I am not familiar with all the details.

Mr. McClintic: We will examine Mr. Scoville on that question later on.

The Special Master: All right.

[Vol. 6. May 7, 1909. Cross Examination of T. B. Dixey.]

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Now, Mr. Dixey, we will go to item 4 of the decree.

The Special Master: That is Defendant's Exhibit D-1?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, sir. The paragraph of the decree requires an ascertainment of such proportion of the ordinary expenses of the Government of Virginia, since any of said debt was contracted, as was properly assignable to the counties which were created into the State of West Virginia, on the basis of the average total population with and without slaves, as shown by the Census of the United States. Will you please look at your exhibit D-1 and the plaintiff's exhibit D-1, and state the difference in the totals 647 arrived at respectively by the two accounts.

The Special Master: You want to get the totals in each exhibit?

Mr. Harrison: Yes; the totals in each exhibit.

The Special Master: Are they not found on page 6 of Defendant's Exhibit D-1, and on page 2 of the Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1?

Mr. Harrison: I believe they are. Yes, sir; that is right.

A. The total on plaintiff's Exhibit D-1, page 2, is $40,023,287.79, and on Defendant's Exhibit D-1, page 6, $20,638,825.13, an excess on the plaintiff's Exhibit of $19,384,462.66.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. How is that difference accounted for?

A. It is accounted for by items included in the plaintiff's exhibit, which are not included in the defendant's exhibit.

The Special Master: The principal of which is interest on public debt, $18,024,358.52. Is that right?

A. That is the largest individual item, and practically a very large percentage of the difference.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. The largest item is that the plaintiff's exhibit includes interest on the public debt, amounting over $18,000,000?

A. Yes.

Q. The rest of it is accounted for how, in the period from 648 which you started to reckon the accounting?

A. Partly that; yes, and by the exclusion of some other items from our account.

Q. Well, they would be more or less negligible, would they not? The other items you speak of, the two larger items, I imagine, would be the interest on the public debt and the difference in the period of time from which the record commenced.

Mr. McClintic: And there are items which you have included in yours which we do not admit to be an ordinary expense, and we include some in ours which you have not in yours.

Mr. Harrison: They could not be very material, because the major portion of this difference is covered by the interest on the public debt.

A. The difference is both ways.

Mr. McClintic: There are a great many in yours that are cut out of ours.

The Witness: The actual difference is larger than the balance.

The Special Master: I will ask counsel for the plaintiff this. Do these items of interest rendered here on page 2 of Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1 represent amounts of interest actually paid during the period, or are they computations?

Mr. Anderson: They were actually paid.

The Special Master: The $18,024,358 is shown by the books to have been actually paid by the State during the period?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir; actually paid. 649

The Special Master: And so as to all the other items?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Was not something said yesterday or this morning about your striking out from your exhibit, D-1, an item of over $2,000,000 on account of primary schools?

A. Yes; that was struck out, but that is not a difference as appears in the figures that I have given you. I assumed that you wished me to handle this in the same way I handled the other.

Q. What do you propose to do with that item if you strike it out? Are you going to include it anywhere else?

A. Counsel will tell you that.

Q. You will have to refer me to counsel about that?

A. I will have to refer you to counsel; yes, sir.

The Special Master: You give the result and it is up to the attorneys to discuss it. Is that your position, Mr. Dixey?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. When you undertake to ascertain the just proportions of those items of ordinary expenses on the basis of the average total population of Virginia, please explain the method which you pursued.

A. I took the census of the United States, as shown by its records, from 1820 to 1860 by decades. 650

Q. By decades?

A. By decades, and added them together and divided them by five, there being five censuses in the period, to determine the average census.

By the Special Master:

Q. That is, by decades covering the period covered by the account?

A. Yes, sir; and then determined the proportion of Virginia's average census to the total of both States, or to the whole entire State, and the proportion of the West Virginia Census to the population of the entire State.

Q. That method is set out in detail on page 3 in Defendant's Exhibit D-1?

A. Yes, sir; and I applied those percentages to the entire amount of the ordinary expenses, as shown by the schedule.

Q. Defendant's Exhibit D-1, page 3, shows the details of that computation?

A. Yes, sir; that information was furnished us by the United States Census Bureau. I have the letter of the director, giving those statements.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Does your statement show the percentage of the whole on the basis of both total population and white population exclusive of slaves?

A. Yes, sir; you will find the percentage on page 3, Mr. Harrison.

By Mr. Anderson: 651

Q. You estimate it on the basis of the total average population for the five decades?

A. As called for by that section of the decree.

Q. As you understood it?

A. Yes, sir; it shows the average total population as shown by the Census of the United States, with and without slaves.

Q. The question was whether that meant the average for the period of forty years, or the average so as to strike the period of June 20, 1863.

The Special Master: The question is whether the term "average" relates to the period over which the accounts were running?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: That is, whether you would have the parallel of average with the parallel of accounts. In point of time, are they both coterminus; have they the beginning and ending at the same time?

Mr. Anderson: That is very likely what is meant—to average each decade.

Mr. McClintic: We will have to make a supplemental statement, then, by reason of taking out the $2,400,000, as I said this morning.

The Special Master: I understand that. That simply throws the amount out of joint. Is that all you want to ask him about this?

Mr. Harrison: I think so.

748

[Vol. 6. May 7, 1909. Direct Examination C. E. Scoville.]

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Mr. Scoville, on page 3 of plaintiff's exhibit D-1, there is charged what is termed an analysis of general expenses of government, and there is the word "summary" under that.

Mr. McClintic: If your Honor please, I would like to make a statement to make myself clear as to what I want in there. I want to call it to the special attention of the Master, in view of what you said. There is a very large number of items which they have marked apparently on here as ordinary expenses of government, and it is necessary in some way to get the matter into the record, so as to show to you what each of those items is, in order that you may see whether or no it is pertinent to the words "ordinary expenses." I am not wholly advised as to the best method by which that can be done. The only method I know of is to examine Mr. Scoville, who has examined them, and let him state what they are, unless your Honor can suggest some better way.

The Special Master: Do you object to them all?

Mr. McClintic: No; not to all on that page, but a great many I object to, and the difficulty lies in the fact that the 749 mere word there does not explain anything.

The Special Master: Do you object to the classification? For instance, do you object to the general assembly item as being an ordinary expense?

Mr. McClintic: No, sir; not inherently.

The Special Master: But you have objection to some of the items that make up that aggregate?

Mr. McClintic: No, not as far as I know of; not anything on general assembly.

The Special Master: I was using that for an illustration. That is all. I do not know that you can make any better progress than to take each item, unless he could prepare a statement in detail in relation to all these items, and then later on have that submitted. How long would it take him to go through with this?

Mr. McClintic: It would take some little time. I don't know how long.

Mr. Spooner: It is an important matter.

The Special Master: Yes; certainly. We are only discussing the question as to the most feasible way of getting it in. Has he his details all prepared?

Mr. McClintic: No; it is a question not of figures, but of information as to what the figures mean. In other words, take the words "general government," the third item there, $8,495.63. That does not mean anything to your mind unless you know what it is.

Mr. Spooner: It has to be proven by testimony. It cannot be proven by exhibit.

The Special Master: I guess you had better take it and go along with it, item by item.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. State, Mr. Scoville, if you know, to what the third item under "general government," $8,495.63 refers, and what it is. 750

The Special Master: What expense it is. What character of expense.

A. In that account there was charged the expenses of the War of 1814 as recorded on the books, and not what might be termed current expenses during our period.

The Special Master: Do I understand that the whole item $8,495.63 is predicated upon the expenses of the War of 1814?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Now go right along with the next item.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is pensions, $88,548.74.

Mr. Harrison: What is his authority for the statement he made just now?

Mr. McClintic: The original entries on the books.

Mr. Harrison: Did you find $8,495.63?

The Witness: I am not attempting to testify as to the exact amount, but the character of items that are included under that caption.

By the Special Master:

Q. Did you find an account on the books denominated "general government?"

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you ran that account down to the items of which it was composed?

A. Exactly. 751

Q. And found this result to which you testified?

A. Those items are for war expenses for the War of 1814.

Mr. Conrad: 1812.

Mr. Hogg: It is sometimes called 1814 and sometimes 1812.

Mr. McClintic: We all know what he means.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item, Mr. Scoville, is pensions, $88,548.74. Tell the court if you know what that is for; if you have been able to find out?

A. The books of original entry and all of the records which we had access to, and searched, did not disclose just what pensions those were, but the original entries for each individual disbursement do record them as payments for pensions; but whether they are Revolutionary War pensions or Government Employe pensions is not shown as far as I can find.

The Special Master: Or 1812 pensions?

The Witness: No sir.

Mr. Spooner. Is there no legislation that shows?

The Witness: I could not find any information.

Mr. Anderson: About what years was that; do you recall?

The Witness: That runs through the entire period, payments every year.

The Special Master: There must have been some statute under which those pensions were conferred. However, he did not find anything.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. On the same page, farther down, we find the words 752
"expenses of representation," $24,120.17. Will you please explain if you know what that is?

A. Those are election expenses for representatives in Congress.

Q. What is that; election expenses for representatives in Congress?

A. Yes, sir; comparing polls, etc.

Mr. Anderson: Expenses of Federal elections?

The Special Master: The regular biennial expenses involved in Congressional elections?

The Witness: They are regular expenses; yes, sir.

The Special Master: Regular biennial Congressional expenses; that is, expenses in Congressional elections?

The Witness: I won't say biennial. They occur regularly.

Mr. Harrison: They run all the way during the period?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: You say they do run all the way during the period?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: What do they consist of?

Mr. Anderson: They are in both accounts, are they not?

Mr. McClintic: Yes, sir. I thought they were not. That is the reason I asked the question.

The Special Master: Then there is no controversy over 753 that.

Q. The next charge is "public arsenals," $96,709.63.

A. The charges to that account are included in Defendant's Exhibit D-1.

Q. Under the head of "military establishment?"

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Do they aggregate the same?

The Witness: No, sir; they do not, for one reason, on account of the difference in the period.

Mr. Harrison: They run from 1820.

The Special Master: Yes; I understand. You cover three years and four months more than they do.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Do you find the item of "warrants on account" and "general appropriations?"

By Mr. Spooner:

Q. Are those expenses recurring expenses from year to year?

A. The arsenal expenses?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir; we include those in our statement of ordinary expenses.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Take that next item, "warrants on account" and "general appropriations," $746.087.72. What is that?

A. That account includes a varied class of expenditures, and does not appear in any of our exhibits, because we analyzed all expenditures which were grouped under that head, and applied them to the proper individual accounts to which they were chargeable.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Do they not appear in the books of the Commonwealth under that head? 754

A. There is such an account; yes.

Q. You disregarded it, though.

A. We did not disregard it. We analyzed it and found what was in the account, and applied it to the proper accounts.

By the Special Master:

Q. In so doing, did you take all the items included in the original account and apportion them to some account, or did you leave some unaccounted for, undistributed? That is, when you got through with your analysis of that account, had you attributed to some account that you made up all the items contained in that account?

A. We did, with the exception of a small amount of about $11,000, which we called miscellaneous expenditures, and a part of that came from those warrants on account.

Q. Did you have an item of miscellaneous expenditures?

A. We have on our exhibit, under ordinary expenses, an item of miscellaneous expenditures, which we explained by saying that there are other unclassified expenses.

Q. And in that item you included the $12,000?

A. Yes, sir; part of which came from these warrants on account.

Q. So that everything included in that account is distributed in some other accounts you have made?

A. Unless it has been excluded under instructions from 755 counsel.

Mr. Harrison: Has that been done?

The Special Master: Has anything been excluded? That is what we want to get at.

Mr. Harrison: Whether anything has been excluded is what we want to find out.

The Special Master: If the whole item is accounted for in some of the various accounts you have made, as the result of your analysis, that takes care of it. On the other hand, if there is anything unaccounted for, what is unaccounted for and what is it?

A. I cannot tell that without referring to some of our detailed papers. I think it is safe to say some were excluded.

Mr. Harrison: How much was it?

The Witness: I cannot tell right here how much it was, but our papers will disclose that.

The Special Master: Make a statement of that, so the other side will have an opportunity to criticise it.

Mr. McClintic: The other side did not give us any details so that we could criticise. We had to take everything there was. They are the plaintiffs, and they are making up this statement that we could not do anything with except by taking it as it was.

Mr. Harrison: You ought to have analyzed the accounts yourselves.

The Special Master: Of course they rest on their general 756 statement, and if you are able to successfully attack any part of it, or appear to, it is open to them to reply as best they can. There is no question about that. What is your next item.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. "Slaves transported and executed," $611,351.23. Please explain that, Mr. Scoville.

A. The account "slaves transported and executed" covers the amount paid by the State for slaves executed and transported. Under the laws of Virginia if a slave was executed or transported, the owner of that slave was paid an appraised value, and in this account to which we are referring were included expenditures on that account.

The Special Master: What is meant by "transported?"

The Witness: Transported beyond the limits of the United States.

The Special Master: He was exported at the time he was transported?

The Witness: There is a credit against that account for slaves sold.

Mr. Harrison: Has the witness answered whether that item appears on the corresponding schedule of West Virginia—$611,351.23?

Mr. McClintic: I did not ask him that, but I think it does.

The Special Master: No; he did not ask him that. What is the fact about that?

The Witness: It does not appear in our exhibit.

Mr. Harrison: Why not?

Mr. McClintic: I expect it is because counsel told him 757 otherwise.

The Witness: I just thinking how to frame that. That is the fact. Under instructions from counsel, that item was omitted.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is "gun carriages," $14,317.05. Is that included in your exhibit?

A. We include that in Defendant's Exhibit D-1, under "transportation of arms." Gun carriages in that account means the carriage of guns. Transportation of arms is the proper title, we think, for it.

Q. Yes; I should think that would be better than "gun carriages."

A. It does not mean the carriages the guns were carried on.

Mr. Anderson: It means transportation of guns, does it not?

The Special Master: He has explained that item. He says it means the carriage of guns.

Mr. Conrad: The State had an armory here and one at Lexington, and it may be that arms were transported.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. There is an item below there "revision of laws," $4,500. Do you know what that is?

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. What item in your accounts did you say that gun carriage item appeared?

A. Defendant's Exhibit D-1, page 5; under "military establishment, transportation of arms."

By the Special Master:

Q. It makes up another larger item?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is not by itself? 758

A. No, sir.

Mr. McClintic: It is detailed to itself. It shows what it is. It is detailed under the account "military establishment."

The Special Master: But this is $14,307.05. You have it $12,160.08.

Mr. McClintic: There is hardly a single item that agrees, even when you have to take the same item on account of this period. They all disagree. Under this head everything disagrees.

The Witness: I cannot say just where the charge there for "revisions of laws" appeared in our own accounts, if it appears at all. It does not appear under that caption.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Do you know what it refers to?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you find anything in the books of original entry to show under which it comes?

A. No, sir; there is no account of that caption.

Q. The next is a small item of $71.10, for seines. Do you know what that is?

A. I am under the impression that that is prior to March 19, 1823, and that it is a refund.

Q. The next item is "public warehouses," $35,722.00.

A. To that account there was charged the expenses of the Warehouse Commissioners, and it is a proper reduction 759 from receipts from warehouses.

Q. But there is no corresponding item in your account?

A. On Defendant's Exhibit D-1, page 6, we show a credit to West Virginia of $389,694.91 for an item called "inspectors of tobacco," and from that amount the expense of Commissioners is deducted.

The Special Master: On page 6 you have that, have you?

A. Yes; under "less the following receipts."

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is "tobacco sales," $454.91.

Mr. Harrison: What is the difference between that item on your account and the plaintiff's corresponding account?

A. I suppose it is on account of the difference in the period. The difference is not very large.

The Special Master: The aggregate in the Plaintiff's Exhibit is $35,722.00, and the total credit you give is $36,570.00, which is more, but that includes the other item.

A. That includes two other items.

The Special Master: The $23,626.96 is a corresponding item?

Mr. McClintic: Yes.

The Special Master: What is your next item, Mr. McClintic?

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Take the item "Tobacco sales $454.91." Do you know 760 what that is, Mr. Scoville?

A. I am not familiar with that expenditure.

Mr. McClintic: Is that in your account, General Anderson?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: It is, yes.

Mr. McClintic: What do you mean by that?

Mr. Harrison: I could not explain that.

Mr. Anderson: I suppose it means sales at warehouses.

Mr. Harrison: The State had something to do with the sale of tobacco, in the way of inspection and commission and all that.

The Witness: I think that item is for the payment of burnt tobacco at the warehouses. That accounts for its being an expenditure. The title here, "Tobacco sales," under expenditures is not quite clear.

The Special Master: You allow $2,639.30 for burnt tobacco?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Is that a corresponding item?

The Witness: That comes in another item further on, the first report here in the Plaintiff's Exhibit.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. You have, next, "Armory, manufactory and repairs of arms, $243,015.60. Have you any corresponding item to that?

A. That is in Defendant's Exhibit D-1, page 5, under mili- 761
tary establishment; repairs of arms is the last item, and the manufacture of arms is the fourth item under military establishment.

Mr. Anderson: Transportation of arms?

The Witness: No.

Mr. McClintic: Armory and manufacture and repairs of arms. Is there anything included by the plaintiff in there for anything of that character, or do you remember about that?

The Witness: I think not in connection with that.

Mr. McClintic: The next item is "Sale of slaves, $99.26."

Mr. Anderson: The armory was built long before 1820.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is "Sale of Slaves, $99.26. Do you know what that is?

A. No; I do not.

Q. The next item I refer to is Revolutionary claims agent, $3,861.67. Have you any knowledge of that?

A. That expenditure is for commissions of the agents.

Q. Collecting revenues.

A. Yes, sir; from the United States Government.

Q. The next item is "administrators of J. Merryweather and R. Graves, $11,067.33." Do you know anything about that.

A. We do not include any such item and I don't know what that is.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You have no memorandum about that?

A. Not under that heading. 762

Q. Well, under any other heading?

A. I cannot identify it, no, sir. That is, in our account it is in under its proper title, if it is there at all.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is "Clerk hire and so forth, on account of delinquent lands, $18,374.27." Did you include that?

A. That is included in Defendant's Exhibit D-1.

Q. Under this heading, or under the head of officers? I looked for it and did not see it.

A. That is included in our account under officers of the Government, inasmuch as that account includes the salaries of officers and clerks.

By the Special Master:

Q. You say you include it under the title of officers of the Government?

A. Yes, sir; on page 5.

Q. And the aggregate there is $3,190.633.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you include the latter item in that aggregate, so far as you know?

A. So far as I know, yes.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is Buckingham furnace lands, $771.72. What have you to say about that?

A. I might say first these furnace lands were in Buckingham County, Virginia, and they were sold, and there were claimants to part of the proceedings, and that amount of about $900 is the amount which was paid to these claimants, plus com- 763 missions out of the amount which was received from the sale of the Buckingham lands. We do not take credit for the sale of the lands, and that is a proper charge against the sale.

Q. You do not charge that anywhere in your accounts?

A. No, sir.

Q. On the next page, the first item is "Transportation of free persons of color to Liberia, $26,103.50." Do you allow that in your account?

A. It is not included in our account.

Mr. Conrad: Why not?

The Witness: Under instructions from counsel.

Mr. Hogg: It is neither an ordinary expenditure nor an extraordinary expenditure.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. Further down the page (page 4 of Plaintiff's Exhibit D-1), we find "Unexpended postage returned to treasury, $53.13." How could that be a charge?

A. We have not any such account in our exhibit. I think that might be better explained under some other title. I do not know why it is there.

The Special Master: You do not know anything about that?

The Witness: No sir.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item on this page to which I will call your attention is "Penitentiary: Hatcher vs. Commonwealth, $12,897.96. Do you know anything about that?

A. I do not. 764

Q. Do you find any item like that on the books of Virginia anywhere?

A. I do not recall the item at all.

Q. The next item to which I will call your attention is "Ferriage of troops during late war—"

The Special Master: Referring to that other item, have you looked for it?

The Witness: No, sir.

The Special Master: When did you begin your examination of this plaintiff's Exhibit D-1.

Mr. McClintic: I don't know that he ever begun it.

The Witness: No, I have not.

Mr. McClintic: He went over the books and took out all items. and it is from that knowledge that he is testifying.

The Special Master: But you have had this exhibit since last November, have you not?

The Witness: But we were very busy with our own exhibits.

The Special Master: Are we to understand that you have not put in any time at all examining these exhibits of the plaintiff for the purpose of testifying in regard to these figures of theirs?

The Witness: We have just finished with our own exhibits.

Mr. McClintic: What is the fact about that, Mr. Scoville?

The Witness: We have no special examination of the 765
Plaintiff's Exhibits, with the exception of No. 3. We made an examination, not a thorough examination, but a superficial examination, as to the difference between their charges for these roads and our own.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Am I to understand you to say that you knew nothing about that item at all, the item of the penitentiary; Hatcher against the Commonwealth?

A. I do not recall it. I do not mean by that that it is not in our account, but I do not recall it under that title.

Q. You do not recall that the books of original entry show the payment of a judgment for that amount?

A. No, sir; I do not recall the item at all.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. I understood you to say that you had taken up the accounts of Virginia, beginning with the 19th of March, 1823, and taken every item of receipt and item of expenditure up to January 1st, 1861?

A. That is correct, yes, sir.

Q. And every item is either on these papers or on the general balance sheet which is to be filed as soon as it reaches here?

A. Absolutely every dollar received and disbursed.

Q. And then you do not remember having seen an item of Hatcher vs. Commonwealth for $12,000 and something?

A. I do not. 766

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. Did you examine the annual reports?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw no such item there?

A. I do not recall the item. I may have seen it at some time, but I do not recall it.

By the Special Master:

Q. There are 750,000 items.

A. You could not remember all.

Q. The fact is you never made any search for this item?

A. No, sir.

Q. You never criticised this schedule?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or spent any time on it?

A. No, sir.

Q. And the only information you can give is your recollection from the accounts as you go along; that is correct is it not?

Mr. McClintic: From what he knows about the accounts of Virginia—

The Special Master: It is not predicated upon any particular examination of this schedule?

The Witness: No, sir. It would be difficult—

Mr. McClintic: He has not had time.

The Special Master: You have not done it, anyway.

A. No, sir.

The Witness: It would probably be found either under one of our schedules under some other title, or having been excluded, but I do not recall the item.

By Mr. McClintic: 767

Q. In making up your schedule, D-1, did you follow the nomenclature on the books of original entry?

A. Yes, sir. An item of that nature must be chargeable to some account, and we would include that, not under this individual expenditure, but under its proper account.

Mr. Harrison: Are we to understand that you did follow the nomenclature of the accounts as you found them?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: Did you not just say in connection with the item, "Warrants on account general appropriation"—I think that was it?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Harrison: Why did you not follow that nomenclature in the statement of your own account?

The Witness: For the reason that warrants on account are not represented in expenses—

Mr. Harrison: I am asking you for the fact. It is a fact that in that instance you did not follow the nomenclature?

Mr. McClintic: Did the books of original entry have any such item as "warrants on account"?

The Witness: They did.

The Special Master: In that instance you did not follow that heading; you analyzed that account and distributed the items under what you considered their proper heads?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Harrison: In asking you this question I merely want to develop the fact that in other instances you did not follow the nomenclature that you found in the books of the Commonwealth. 768 I cannot recall the different instances, but you have a military establishment. You did not find any such nomenclature as that in the books?

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Harrison: So he did not follow the nomenclature in the statement of his account?

The Witness: I do not know how to express that or explain it any better.

Mr. Harrison: You may have had a reason, perfectly sufficient perhaps, for not doing it; but the question is the question of fact—did you do it?

The Witness: It seems that in this case you have called attention to we have changed the nomenclature in order to state the account.

The Special Master: More intelligently?

The Witness: More intelligently and clearly.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item to which I will call attention is ferriage of troops during the late war, $54.71. Have you any knowledge of that?

A. I do not recall that.

Q. The next item is "Criminal and Civil Code," $52,073.88. Is that in your account?

A. That item is included in our account. Let me see if I can find just where it is.

Mr. Harrison: It is not included under that nomenclature, is it?

The Witness: No, sir; it is not. It is on page 5 of Defendant's Exhibit D-1, under "printing, compiling, and so forth, of Code, Statutes and Report."

769

By Mr. McClintic

Q. The next item is rent $52.25. Do you know what that is?

A. I do not know what that particular item is.

Q. The next item is Virginia Volunteers, $29,470.05. Do you know what that is?

A. That is the expense of getting a regiment of Virginia soldiers ready for the Mexican war, I think, in 1847. It was almost entirely repaid to Virginia by the United States Government.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You have no corresponding amount under that heading in your report?

A. No, sir. Neither the expenditure nor the receipts are included in any of our exhibits.

Q. Why not?

A. Because it was not considered by counsel an ordinary expense.

Q. That is the reason it does not appear?

A. Yes, sir.

The Special Master: Do you remember what balance was unpaid? While we are on the items, we might have it on the record.

Mr. Harrison: What was the question?

The Special Master: He said nearly all had been repaid. I asked him what balance remained unpaid.

The Witness: We found charges against that particular Mexican War, $32,101.16. We found that they collected 770 from the United States Government on account of those expenditures, $27,943.66; leaving a balance of expenditures over receipts of $4,157.50.

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. Did you find that the amount received from the United States Government was on the identical item there of charge?

A. Yes; so recorded in the books.

Q. In what books did you find that?

A. In the books of the Auditor of Public Accounts.

Mr. Harrison: When was it received?

Mr. McClintic: Can you give the date of the receipt?

The Witness: I can get it without much delay (referring to memorandum). The money was received from the United States Government in 1848, in 1850, in 1851, in 1852, and in 1853. I find on looking at the detailed analysis that in that item of receipts, amounting to $27,943.66, there are some small items which were refunded, which were not collected from the United States Government, but which were refunded on account of overpayments and advances which were returned on this same account. Less than $1,400 was refunded. The balance was collected from the United States Government.

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item is tobacco sales and burnt tobacco, $1,931.30. You allow for that, I believe?

A. Yes; that is in our exhibit. 771

Mr. Anderson: The amount is agreed, is it?

The Special Master: No; they have the amount as $2,666.13, and the amount here is $1,931.30.

Mr. Anderson: There is another item, though, I think, of $454.51.

The Special Master: Well, those two together do not quite make up the amount that they credit—that is, if they do go together.

By Mr. McClintic

Q. The next item is land taxes, $296.59. Do you know what that means?

A. I do not; but I presume it is a refund of taxes, and a corresponding expenditure on our statements is deducted from the receipts from taxes.

By Mr. Harrison:

Q. You mean your statement takes account of that in some form?

A. That is, for taxes refunded. It has been deducted from what we take credit for.

Q. That is a qualification. You say if so and so. You cannot say?

A. I cannot identify it.

By the Special Master:

Q. You can, by taking the time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course those things you can work out later?

A. Yes; without difficulty.

772

By Mr. McClintic:

Q. The next item I call to your attention is "Assessment of free negroes, $897.21." Have you any knowledge of that item, Mr. Scoville?

A. We have included the charges on that account under the account called "General Account of revenue,' on Defendants Exhibit D-1, page 4.

Mr. Harrison: You do take account of it, then, under another head?

The Witness: That is the general account.

By Mr. Conrad:

Q. Do you have the same item?

A. General account of revenue is the account.

Q. But you embrace in it the same item that Mr. McClintic has inquired about?

A. Yes, sir. That is the amount paid to the assessors for listing free negroes.
